Several communications have been sent to all departments and graduate students. This fall a letter was sent out to graduate students informing them of the attempt to organize. During the first two weeks of the semester, the GTO set up tables in the Campus Center concourse to reach as many graduate teachers as possible. Weekly meetings of the GTO were advertised through flyers and use of the "Hypercurricula" column in the Collegian. Furthermore, GTO meetings were announced and organizing efforts discussed at each meeting of the Graduate Student Senate. At the Senate meetings, senators were encouraged to arrange departmental meetings where all questions could be answered by representatives of the GTO. The issue was also announced at the Faculty Senate to inform members that the GTO would be coming to their departments. We need and want maximum participation; the law requires nothing less. Only a majority of TA's and TO's can vote a union in or out.

In the spring 1983 elections, 82 percent of the voters endorsed the following referendum: "Do you feel there is a need to organize graduate student TA's, TO's, and RA's for the purpose of addressing issues of wages, hours, and working conditions?" These elections were advertised through flyers, Collegian notices, and student senators. They were held for two full days on the Campus Center Student Senate elections. Additionally, all candidates for Senate office last year ran on a platform which encouraged the organization of TA's and TO's for the purpose of improving their welfare.

Monday's letter, furthermore, misrepresents the GTO letter to graduate students by stating that we said that "union organizing was proceeding with the approval of 82 of the voters." In fact, our letter merely stated, "Last year, 82 percent of graduate student voters endorsed a referendum in favor of organizing TA's and TO's." We are not claiming majority support on the basis of last spring's referendum issue; we are merely seeking majority support in this Fall's unionizing drive.

There are other major inaccuracies in Monday's letter which require correction. For example, student money has not been spent. Graduate Student Senate rules regarding disbursement of money have not been violated by GTO, contrary to the suggestion in Monday's letter. The flyer was paid for and printed by the Massachusetts Teachers Association.

The constant tone of Monday's letter, that a secret group is trying to organize a union of TA's and TO's, stems from a lack of understanding of the unionization process. Our central goal is to bring a union election to campus so that the will of the majority can be ascertained.

No work-related grievance procedure exists to address TA and TO issues and concerns. Had University grievance procedures been adequate, would the Massachusetts Society of Professors have been formed, or for that matter the University Staff Association for clerical workers, The American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees for electricians, plumbers, food service and laundry workers, or the United Food and Commerical Workers for the Five College Federal Credit Union?

Issues which might affect the welfare of TA's and TO's, like contractual agreements, amount of stipends, mandatory membership, accountability, election of union officers — in fact, its very existence — is decided by the majority of TA's and TO's, as required by the MTA constitution. There can be no secrecy in this matter nor any fait accompli.

Signed by 86 graduate students from many departments, from Economics to the Classics.

Why should UTC leave?

To the Editor,

I have just read the Sept. 29 news article concerning United Technologies. I was appalled at your views involving this company. I have always been under the impression that our student government; more specifically the Senate, was created to help us, not hurt us. Denying such a highly technological company the rights to present themselves is in itself a crime. By allowing these types of companies to come here, we can learn about our technological status.

Your first mistake in this article is in presenting one side of the issue. United Technologies does not just make parts for our defense. This corporation is composed of many companies. These companies make elevators, air conditioners and automotive parts. Hamilton Standard, one of these companies, makes airplane engines as well as parts to our space shuttle. Our astronauts walk in space suits made by Hamilton Standard. United Technologies employs an enourmous amount of people. It is one of our more technological companies in the States. Why persecute them?

If you intend to help us, then help us in a positive way. Do not make us ignorant to the world. I feel that our Defense Department and/or its contractors should be allowed on our campus to present themselves. By allowing them on campus, we can learn for ourselves and make our own decisions. How can we make our own decisions when "our" student government is not allowing us to. Your article states "So that the business of the university can be decided by the entire university community". I fail to understand this remark. The words "entire university community" were used incorrectly. Nobody came to my dorm no did they ask for an opinion poll. This "community" is not just made up of the Senate, but is made up of all of us, every person belonging to this university.

In the future, I would appreciate if the Senate would ask for our (the entire university's) opinion before making a mistake. The philosophy of the government is to aid the people. Please remember this the next time you become foolish in your actions. One last point; the object of your position is to help the students, not to solve the world peace.

The double standard strikes

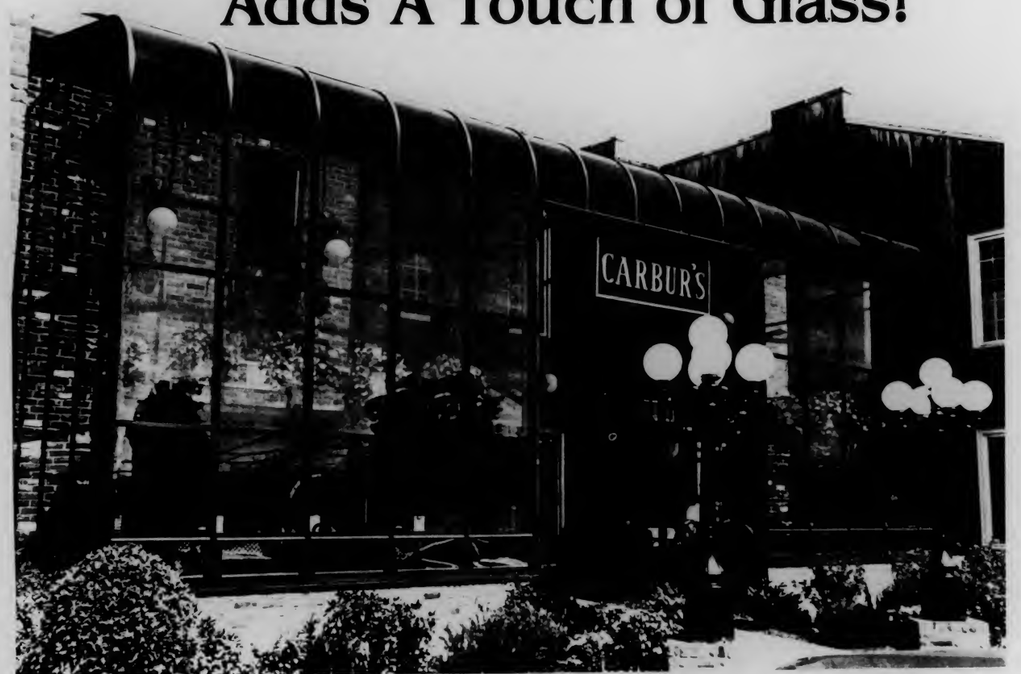
A funny thing happened to me the other day. A new acquaintance of mine walked into my room to borrow a tape and while inside, began reading my walls (admittedly they are busy and resemble the lower hall of the Concourse more than a dorm room).

This friend became offended upon viewing my poster of Matt Dillon and a similar wall hanging of another handsome man. He immediately began teasing me, remarking how offended I would have been had he hung comparable posters of women on his wall. I felt like a child being rebuked for doing something naughty.

Becky Lockwood

The trouble was the the posters genuinely are not offensive. They are not blatantly sexual pictures — Matt Dillon is fully clothed. The other poster shows a tanned man from his waist up. Truthfully, he does not have a shirt on, but similar sights can be found any hot day on campus — men take off their shirts when it's warm.

Therefore I was rather confused by his attack on my decorations and especially his excuse for it — that I would be offended by equivalent female posters.



I would not, however. There is nothing dismaying to me about a woman fully clothed — why should there be? I am angered and offended by exploitive pictures, such as Playboy Centerfold Spreads (literally) and women in suits so form fitting that nothing is left to the imagination. These I consider blatantly sexual in a demeaning way, for the women in these shots have no personalities and are only viewed as desirable OBJECTS.

I tried to explain this to my friend, but it was like trying to explain algebra to a five year old. He could not see the difference between a poster of a fully clothed male and a "bunny" in a string bikini. I suppose this acquaintance expected my decorations to be sweet or cultural girlish things (thank God that pink canopy beds are out of style)! I was left wondering how long it would take for the double standards between men and women to fade away — for men to accept women as sexual — without the connotation of "whore," but on the other hand, to realize that women are personable, intelligent human beings, not just objects of passion.

Admittedly, acceptance of these two realities has come a long way. However, occurences like the one above leave me feeling as if I just hit a brick wall. I wonder how many decades it will be before women and men will be able to live by the same standards.

SMALLWORKS '83
Hampden, Herter, Student Union Galleries
Sept. 19 - Oct. 15

By HOLLIS PORTER
Collegian Correspondent

A big show of small works is currently on view at the Hamden, Herter, and Student Union Galleries. One hundred and twenty three paintings, drawings, prints and sculptures, all measuring 16 x 16 inches or smaller are represented. These were selected by Vivien Raynor of the New York Times and Nancy Hoffman, Director of Nancy Hoffman Galleries, NYC, from a large pool of applicants representing most states in the nation. Small works '83 is thus an opportunity for important artists to enjoy east coast exposure and for we easterners, to gain some insight into artistic trends in the rest of the country.

The first question one would ask about Smallworks is why the restriction in scale. Trevor Richardson, Exhibition Director gives two reasons. He explains that the works are small because of practical necessity. "We very much wanted to show substantial body of work - one that would reflect a broad spectrum of artistic activity," said Richardson. This could be accomplished better in limited gallery space with a large number of small works than with a few large pieces. The most important reason for the small works format, however, was that scale limitations would provide the show with a "thematic unity". Works under 16 inches tend, according to Richardson, to have a textural richness missing in larger images. There is also an intimacy between spectator and artist and a density of space and action lost in large scale art.

Some highlights of the show include Urban Mask #1, Ray Ellman's entry which took the 'Best in Show' award. The masterful display of oil pastel technique and the powerful evocation of primitive art contribute to the work's success. Another standout is an untitled work by Massachusetts artist Rochelle Acker. Michael Coblyn, Director of the Herter Gallery, feels that the dark vertical bands across this work's surface creates interesting spacial effects and contributes to the image's industrial feeling.

While individual pieces are noteworthy, Smallworks '83 is most remarkable when taken as a whole. The strength of the show lies in the variety of styles and subjects represented. Works range from the minimalist "Arrival" by Ken Januski to more representational works such as Mark Soppeland's humorous "Monument to the Man who Used Junk Mail". The content of the entries is equally varied. Bruce Conklin explores psychological issues in his "The Unmasking" while Harry Roseman addresses strickly aesthetic questions in Still Life #11. The diminutive scale of these diverse images, in fact, seems to be all that they have in common.

Although the works in this show are small in scale they are important as indicators of diverse trends in contemporary art nationwide. Smallworks '83 thus proves that small art can have big significance.

Mark Soppland's witty "Monument to the Man Who Used Junk Mail" won an honorable mention in the Smallworks '83 competition.

LIVE WIRE
by Dave Chevan

One of the big questions people ask me almost every weekend (producing an incredible sense of redundancy in my life. Imagine being asked the same question every weekend!) is whether there is any good music within walking distance of campus. Many of my on campus friends don't own cars or are not of drinking age, so for most the accessibility of the local club scene is nil. What sorts of alternatives are available to the underage, and the wheelless? I don't know and I don't care; I've got a car, I'm of age, so it doesn't matter to me at all if you can't get to Sheehan's or that if you could, they would not let you in. But seriously, if you invest a little time in learning the five—college bus schedule, you'll find that most area clubs are along bus lines that run well into the night. If you're underage, the Hampshire Mall has an underage club called Club 19, which frequently has live bands, and always has a fine rock-disco show. There are also opportunities every week to catch live music, usually for free, right on the UMass campus. The Music department sponsors several concerts every week. On Tuesdays and Thursdays at 11:15, the Music department holds concerts in Benzanson Recital Hall in the Fine Arts Center. The music varies from the classical to jazz and features the talents of UMass students, faculty and guest artists. In addition there are frequent evening concerts which this column will mention as they come along. Okay, who says being underage means having a dull lifestyle?

This weekend has, by the good graces of Chris Columbus been extended by a day, so I'd assume this weekend's partying will be that much more increased. Tonight's scene is about as diverse as we'll see all semester. Violent Femmes, the band all the critics are raving about, makes its area debut at the Hanger One, meanwhile two blues bands will be at either end of the valley, Beaver Brown at the Bluewall, and Buddy Guy and Jr. Wells at the Rusty Nail. Tonight's freebie is the London Serpent Trio, at Benzanson Recital Hall, performing on a very ancient instrument called (what else) the serpent, I don't know what a serpent is, but I'm told its sort of like a french horn.

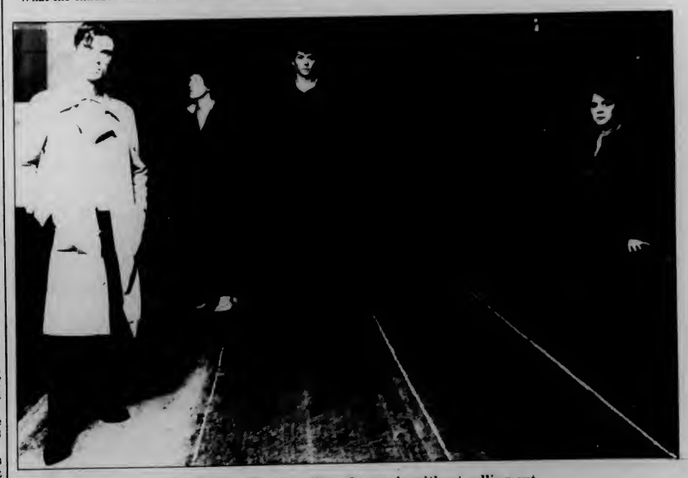
Tomorrow night features one of Massachusetts' native sons, Jonathan Richman and the Modern Lovers at the Bluewall. Richman has written some of rock's quirkiest and funniest tunes. The Modern Lovers, Jonathan's powerful rhythm section has featured among other players, Dave Robinson of the Cars, and Jerry Harrison of The Talking Heads. For Jazz—rock fans the Shy Americans will put in an appearance at the Avenue. For the harder rockers, Bratt will cure your ills at Hanger One.

Saturday night is a bit slower paced with Fat at the Rusty Nail and the Lines at the Hanger. Sunday's feature band wins a prize for their name, Julie and the Flashers, exposing themselves at Sheehan's Cafe. Finally, a Columbus Day special Buchwheat Zydeco, will perform a form of Southern folk blues that has lately been gaining a respectable cult following.

Upcoming concerts include Oregon November 1 at the Iron Horse, Hot Tuna and Bobby and the Midnites Nov. 3 at the Springfield Civic Center.

Next week; the great rock and roll trivia contest. Prizes include free concerts tix, records, and gobs of other great stuff, so get your thinking caps ready.

Byrne-ing down the hometown



THE TALKING HEADS
Oct. 4, 1983
Providence Civic Center

By GERARD COSLEY
Collegian Staff

Sort of funny; on the (grunt) strength of the weakest LP of their 6 year career, plus their first genuine across-the-board US his in "Burning Down The House", the Talking Heads returned triumphant to RISD-ville to face a multi-racial, multi-Volvo driving, 41,000 strong audience. Funnier still, they hadn't sold out to get there; while much of the current Speaking In Tongues is merely marking time (no way that this breezy LP matches the revelations of Remain In Light or Fear of Music), the Talking Heads' live set remains a finely honed example of well-conceived pacing and multi-cultural forms being merged. Beginning the 2 hours-plus set with solo David Byrne acoustic renditions of "Psycho Killer" and "Heaven" was a brillant move--Byrne's haunting vocals matched with such sparse arrangements carried home the forcefulness of his songwriting far more than the Heads' recent 9-piece funk-line ups. Earlier in the band's career, Byrne could've been viewed as a natural successor to Verlaine or Dylan -- now with Byrne perched on a throne alongside Bowie, Eno and Gabriel, certain pretentions become harder to stomach.

What the exhuberence of the first Tom Tom Club LP and the stodgyness of Byrne's solo LP proved was that Byrne and Eno had missed the boat as far as dance music was concerned; "who needs to think when your feet just go"being preferable to Byrne's generalized misinterpretation of "African music" (funny how white "geniuses" like Byrneor Gabriel will look to faraway Africa when they've got Kurtis Blow and Prince in their own backyard). Byrne might've woken up-- T. Heads Tour 83 features a Tom Tom Club segment as well as inclusions of Byrne's solo material (which to be fair, sounds a lot livelier with the full band contributing). The Talking Heads suddenly seem to be less of a vehicle for Byrne's pompus visions, and more of a democratic unit again -- the vibrant percussion work of Steve Scales and the swirlling keyboard lines of Bernie Worrel were as much of a highlight as Byrne's performance.

And his performance was stronger than ever. Rather than play the traditional role of soul frontman -- a role which white vocalists like Paul Weller or Jon King have fdiled at --Byrne has his own stage prescence; he's not lifting from James Brown, he's the spiritual shaman, the TV evangelist, Norman Bates, Jonathan Richman on a pulpit, a RISD student turning his background inside-out. This is the cohesive live forces that AA Certain Ratio and Clock DVA aspire to, the pop sensibility that the Violent Femmes and REM carry from. The Talking Heads can now do their barrier-smashing in hockey arenas and they do it without dry ice or drum machines. I figure that's no small victory.

The Talking Heads: selling the music without selling out.

Baseball Playoffs

BALTIMORE — LaMarr Hoyt won a duel of finesse and precision with Scott McGregor, pitching a five-hitter that carried the Chicago White Sox to a 2-1 victory Wednesday over the Baltimore Orioles in Game One of the American League playoffs.

The meeting of these two pitchers was billed as a matchup of a master of control, Hoyt, and a crafty, tricky veteran, McGregor.

The right-hander Hoyt, 24-10 and the winningest pitcher in baseball the past two seasons, won this time. He struck out only four batters, but he walked not a soul. He had walked only 31 batters in 260 2- 3 innings during the regular season, and he was on his form. He gave up three singles, to Todd Cruz, Rick Dempsey and Cal Ripken Jr., and two doubles — by Ken Singleton and Dan Ford.

Dugay and Johnson are two of the most overated players in the game. Detroit is going to regret that deal.

I predict that the same four teams will make it to the semi—finals this year as was the case last season. The Black Hawks should beat the Oilers this time to win the Campbell Conference where they'll go on to lose to either the Bruins of Islanders in the Stanley Cup finals.

Yale nips Minutemen at the end

TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

This one had to hurt.

After a disappointing 3—1 loss to the University of Vermont last Saturday, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team played their hearts out for 109 minutes yesturday. But with 58 seconds left in the second overtime, freshman Kevin Genda bounced a shot off UMass goalie Jamie Firmage to give Yale University a shocking 2—1 victory at Boyden field.

The loss leaves the Minutemen at an 0—4—3 mark, and thoughts of reaching the New England regional playoffs are fading with every game.

The game started out on a rather lackadaisical note as neither club could mount any offensive drive. UMass started to dominate with about 20 minutes left in the half as Yale goalie Risto Pentilla was kept busy but would not allow any goals.

But, Pike was to answer right back.

The next play started with a cross form Herbie Sidman. The ball then deflected to Steve Berlin, with Pentilla coming out of the net. Berlin somehow got it to Pkie who deposited it in the open net, giving UMass a 1—0 lead with 2:51 left in the half.

The half ended at 1—0, mostly thanks to a fine play by Firmage. The freshman goalie leaped up and swatted away an attempted corner kick with 30 seconds left in the half.

The second half, however, was a different story. The Elis totally dominated the play and it took tough play by the UMass defense to keep the game at 1—0.

At one point, Firmage came out to block an attempted Yale shot and made a nice play on it. But, the ball came back out to the center, leaving a wide open shot for Yale. Defencemen Lenn Margolis and Peter Geddes covered the net well and thwarted Yale's effort.

Yale's pressure finally paid off with 11:58 lift in the have as Kirk Frenald banged one from 20 yarks away, to knot the score at 1—1. Overtime was not far down the road for the Minutemen.

Well, they did make OT and the momemtum shifted back to UMass. Paul Serafino made a good effort to head a crossing pass in but just missed. As the first overtime ended, it was still 1—1. It looked as if UMass was on its way to another tie when Genda made his shot off the arm of Firmage, who ended up with 8 saves and a good all—around game.

"We got tired," lamented head coach Jeff Gettler, "Both teams played OK. It was a good game to watch." The next home have is on Friday, where North Adams State is the foe as UMass hosts the first UMass invitational.

Army nukes men's tennis, 9-0

By SCOTT HOOD

Collegian Staff

So you think all our armed forces are somewhere in the world getting shot at by leftist guerrillas? Wrong. Some of our nation's finest have stayed home to play tennis at West Point, N.Y. as the Uneversito Of Massachusetts men's tennis team found out Tuesday, getting thrashed 9—0 by an Army squad that was definitely all they could be. "We were flat and totallly outplayed," said Minutemen coach Bob Szlosek. "We were worn out from the tournament (The ECAC championships; more on that later tennis fans). The only guy who didn't play flat was Dave Singer (who lost to Scott Poiner 6—1, 4—6, 7—5 at no. 3 singles). Nobody believes they can win. They have to realize that they are the tennis team. There is no Jordan and Goodman (Steve and Stuart, respectively, who are out with injuries: they are considered the two best players on the team) that is going to come to save us."

Last weekend the netmen traveled to Princeton, New Jersey for the aforementioned ECAC Championship. Harvard walked away with the overall team championship, piling up 117 points in the process. Finishing directly behind the Crimson were two more Ivy League schools, Princeton and Yale.

Turning in the best performances for UMass were Peterson and Marc Weinstein, both of whom managed wins in the consolation round before being eliminated from the competition.

"Peterson played a good first round (he drew the no. 1 seed, Ted Farnsworth from Princeton — one of the best collegiate players in the U.S. of A.). He played him even (losing 6—3, 6—2) and earned some respect," said Szlosek.

Islanders look for their Fifth Stanley Cup title in '83-84

By GEORGE MARTINS
Collegian Staff

As the National Hockey League begins its 1983—84 season several teams are entertainig hopes of winning Lord Stanley's sacred cup.

The top candidates again will by the New York Islanders and the Boston Bruins. In fact, the two should face each other in the Wales Conference finals with the winner likely going on the take the cup.

There is not much more that can be said about the Islanders. Last season they won their fourth straight Stanley Cup.

The Islanders have all the qualities of a great team. They have the sharpshooters in Mike Bossy, Bob Bourne, and Bryan Trottier. They have the solid defense in Denis Potvin, Dave Longevin, Ken Morrow, and Stefan Perrson, and an excellent goalie in Bill Smith. They will again be the favorites.

The Bruins will, as last year, be the top challenge.

Boston had the best goalie in the NHL last season in Pete Peeters. Peeters will be backed up this season by Doug Keans.

The Bruins posess one of the finest defenses in the NHL. Brad Park has left, but veterans Guy Lapointe and Jim Schoenfeld will make up for his departure. The Bruins have the best defenseman in the league in Raymond Bourque and one of the best in Gord Kluzak. They have All—Star quality players in Mike O'Connell and Mike Milbury.

On offense the Bruins will suit up scoring wizards such as Rick Middleton, Barry Pedreson, Peter McNab, and Tom Fergus, to join muckers such as Captain Terry O'Reilly, Steve Kasper, Keith and Bruce Crowder

The third best team in the league is the Buffalo Sabres, an Adams Division opponent of the Bruins. They have added scoring punch as they acquired Real Cloutier from Quebec.

Fourth, in my opinion, are the new improved Washington Capitals. The Caps are the team of the future and will challenge the Islanders for the regular season title in the Patrick division. The Caps mainstays are defensemen Rod Langway (from Randolph) and Brian Engblom.

The fifth best team in the league is the team that is like to win the Cambell Conference and compete in the Stanley cup finals, the Chicago Black Hawks. The Hawks offense features Dennis Savard, Al Secord and Steve Larmer. Their defense is sound and Murray Bannerman is one of hockey's top goalies.

Rounding out hockey's top ten are, in order, the Minnesota North Stars, Philadelphia Flyers, Quebec Nordiques, Edmonton Oilers, and Montreal Canadiens.

Teams that will show marked improvement are the Winnepeg Jets and the New York Rangers. The Rangers obtained tough defensemen Willy Huber along with two young forwards in exchange for Ron Dugay and Ed Johnstone.

Valley Women's Voice may fold

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Correspondent

This months issue of the Valley Women's Voice could be the final one of the newspaper's four year history unless last ditch efforts to recruit volunteers are successful, says Voice spokeswoman, Joan Wilce.

A personal letter by Wilce was included in several thousand copies of the latest issue announcing that the paper needs thirty volunteers immediately to fulfill virtually all the functions in putting out a newspaper.

The plight of the Voice has arisen due to "exhaustion and burnout" by the Voice's six staff members, the letter stated.

There will be emergency staff meetings at 7:30 p.m. on both Saturday and Sunday of this weekend to discuss how to keep the paper going.

"There has always been a problem staffing the paper adequately," Wilce said. "Women join with enthusiasm and energy and others who are tired see a way out and fade into the background," she said.

Despite the problems there is a trace of optimism for the Voice. Since the October issue hit the streets, with her letter asking for help, the Voice has received 12 responses from women who are unwilling to see the Voice fold, Wilce said.

The Valley Women's Voice is a Registered Student Organization at the University of Massachusetts, originating in 1978 out of dissatisfied women Collegian staff members who were unhappy with the coverage of Women's news on campus. The first issue of the Voice was published in February of 1979.

At this time men are not involved in publication of the Voice, since the paper is by and for women, Wilce said.

"After all, the name of the paper is the Valley Women's Voice. How can a man speak in a women's voice?" she questioned.

Any woman interested in helping out the Voice, or just contributing, is urged to call or attend one of the weekend meetings. For more information, call Womanfyre Books, or Wilce at 584-2479, Wilce said.

MSP will penalize hold-outs

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts professors who refuse to join the Amherst campus faculty union or pay this year's union dues will be penalized more severely this year than last, says James Boylan, president-elect of the Massachusetts Society of Professors.

Last year, 11 professors were notified that if they did not pay the MSP dues they would be subject to an unpaid suspension and possible termination. Four professors were subsequently suspended without pay during spring break, Boylan said.

Six professors were not suspended at that time because they were involved in a lawsuit concerning the amount of the fee. One other professor agreed to pay the fee on a pro-rated basis, Boylan said.

Despite the fact that last year's contract called for termination upon non-payment of the fee, University administrators chose to temporarily suspend professors who withheld payment.

"We're currently negotiating a new contract that would only allow for a suspension," Boylan said.

However, under the guidelines of a contract now under negotation, a suspension would consist of a loss of that professor's gross pay. This would affect payment of individual benefits such as medical coverage and retirement contributions. Professors who were suspended last semester had their net pay withheld after the benefit payments were made.

WMUA to hold driving contest

By JEFF BAKER
Collegian Correspondent

For a 50 cent fee, students at the University of Massachusetts will get a free can of soda and the opportunity to drive a 1984 turbo-charged car through a figure eight course in the "National Collegiate Driving Championship" to be held here this weekend.

The contest, which features 7up soda and a Dodge Daytona sports car, is being sponsored by the UMass student radio station WMUA. The winner will travel to Daytona Beach for the National Collegiate Driving Championship, said Bill Stepchew, WMUA chief engineer. The event is part of a fundraising drive to help pay for the station's move to the Campus Center.

Strong emphasis will be placed on responsible driving habits as well as prevention of drunk driving in the contest, which is being co-sponsored by the National Safety Council, Chrysler Corporation and Sports Car Club of America.

The road race is one of the many fundraising events WMUA has planned for this semester. The station already held a print sale which raised $700 and a car wash which Stepchew called "a moderate success."

"Our goal is to try to raise $10 to $20,000 in the coming year," commented Irene Van Schyndel, program unit director for the station.

The money will go "to help defray the large expenses on the whole project," said Stepchew.

Rossi advocates expanding criminal justice

By BILL WALL
Collegian Staff

A restructuring of employment opportunities for young urban dwelling men and an expansion of the criminal justice system were among policies advocated by University of Massachusetts sociology Professor Peter H. Rossi last night.

Rossi, who is conducting an opinion survey on criminal justice for the National Science Foundation, addressed more than 150 people in the Thompson Hall as the first lecture of the 1983-84 Chancellor's Lecture Series.

Rossi, director of research for the UMass Social and Demograghic Research Institute, sought to present crime as a peculiarly lower-class phenomenon, with the majority of victims and criminals found in economically disadvantaged inner-city area.

"The incidence of crime is not equally distributed as in many instances of inequality. Those who are already on the short end of the distribution of property are more often victims of crime and can least afford it," Rossi said.

Young men are the most likely group to become involved in a career of crime for a variety of reasons, according to Rossi. The lack of legitimate job opportunities because of inadequate educational background of discrimination were cited as a main cause by Rossi.

"To some groups in our society, predatory crimes serve as a source of supplementary income because their basic subsistence needs are supplied by the family," Rossi said.

The ability of the criminal justice system to deal with the enormous amounts of annual arrests for felony violations was viewed as inadequate by Rossi. He said the organizational limitations of the system put constraints on the court system thereby forcing compromises. He also noted that most prosecutors resort to plea bargaining in order to expedite the processing of the backlogs of cases and he maintained that plea bargaining may achieve greater justice because of the number of guilty pleas entered.

The chances of receiving a prison sentence are less than one in 1,000 and most arrests are not followed by prosecution," but "such a chioce (of a criminal career) does not take place at a conscious level but is a drifting process of the path of least resistance," Rossi said.

Rossi was presented the Chancellor's medal by Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey after the lecture. The award is granted to each participant in the lecture series and is the highest award bestowed upon individuals who have rendered exemplary and extraordinary service to the University, according to a press release announcing the event.

Resolution calls for missile delay

WASHINGTON (AP) - Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass., said Thursday he is introducing a resolution calling for a six-month delay in deployment of U.S. Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in Europe if the Soviet Union agrees to negotiate about substantial reductions in its intermediate-range missiles.

The missiles are scheduled to be deployed in December unless agreement has been reached with the Soviets by then on limitation of the medium-range weapons.

"The most likely result of the deployment will be an escalation of the nuclear arms race in Europe," Markey said in a prepared statement.

His resolution provides that the United States would delay the deployment if the Soviet Union signed an agreement to negotiate "for mutual nondeployment of and reductions in their nuclear forces in Europe, with such negotiations to result in a treaty."

Listed as co-sponsors of the resolution were Reps. Stewart B. Mckinney, R-Conn., Martin Olav Sabo, D-Minn., and William R. Ratchford, D-Conn.

Doug Waller, an aide to Markey, conceded that the resolution has little chance of reaching the floor but said an amendment to the same effect would be offered when the defense department appropriations bill comes up for consideration.

Kevin J. Bonderud, Sabo's press secretary, said Sabo, a member of the Appropriations Committee, would offer such an amendment on the floor if permitted to do so by the House Rules Committee. The rules unit has the power to rule such amendment out of order.

Reagan not bound by Watt decision

WASHINGTON (AP) - A White House spokesman said Thursday the Senate is "welcome" to vote on whether James Watt should be fired, but President Reagan won't feel bound by it. Another source said the interior secretary will resign, however, rather than be repudiated on Capitol Hill.

This administration official, who spoke on condition that he not be named, said Watt probably will step down in the next two weeks, in light of what looms as a lopsided margin against him in the Republican-controlled Senate.

"Rather than be repudiated in a Senate vote, he will resign," the source said.

Deputy White House press secretary Larry Speakes, meanwhile, insisted that Watt has not been asked to resign. But Speakes refused to say whether Watt is still an effective Cabinet member. "He's on vacation right now," he said.

Speakes, in discussing the pending Senate vote, said "We'd prefer that it not come up. We'd prefer that the Cabinet secretary be allowed to do his job."

Asked if President Reagan would seek Watt's resignation if the Senate demands it, Speakes said "the president would certainly welcome a Senate expression of its views on anything, but it would not be binging."

Another anonymous administration source said that the concern was not so much that the Senate vote would go against Watt but that the margin could be overwhelming. The Senate last month - in a sharp repudiation of Watt's policies - voted 63-33 to impose a moratorium on his ambitious coal leasing program until an independent advisory commission looks into accusations taxpayers have lost $100 million through massive sales during glutted market.

Cardinal Cooke dies from leukemia after weeks of pain

NEW YORK (AP) - Cardinal Terence Cooke, the archbishop of New York and chief chaplain for Roman Catholics in the armed forces, died of cancer Thursday after weeks of suffering in which he declared life is "no less beautiful when it is accompanied by illness."

Tributes poured in from the world's top political and religious leaders, ranging from fundamentalist Protestants to liberal Catholic bishops, from President Reagan to Pope John Paul II.

Cooke, 62, died in his home behind St. Patrick's Cathedral at 4:45 a.m. after weeks of pain from "acute leukemia complicating a chronic lymphoma condition," according to the archdiocese.

Cooke became the seventh archbishop of New York and military vicar in 1968, succeeding his mentor, Cardinal Francis Spellman. A year later, Cooke was elevated to cardinal by Pope Paul VI, becoming at that time the youngest cardinal in the world.

In life, said President Reagan, Cooke "inspired us - with his personal holiness, his dedication to the church, his devotion to his flock. But, in death as well, he had for us a special gift and a special inspiration. The world has rarely seen a more moving display of the three cardinal virtues than in the faith, hope and love with which Cardinal Cooke confronted and conquered death."

"Lord of the Flies" author wins 1983 Nobel Prize

STOCKHOLM, Sweden - British writer William Golding, whose novels include "Lord of the Flies," won the 1983 Nobel Prize in literature today, the Swedish Nobel Committee announced.

Golding, 72, was cited "for his novels, which with the perspicuity of realistic narrative art and diversity and universality of myth, illuminate the human condition in the world today."

Reached at his home in southern England, Golding said the award was unexpected. "The idea really wasn't in the fore front of my mind at all," he said. "But now that I have heard I really am delighted."

He added that he needed no encouragement to continue his work. "Well, at the age of 72 and having been writing since I was 7, I don't think one needs encouragement to carry on," Golding said. "One does it almost mechanically."

Cities and towns may ban cable television obscenity

BOSTON - The Massachusetts House gave initial approval Thursday to legislation allowing cities and towns to ban obscenity on cable television.

The measure, which has already passed the Senate, is an outgrowth of recent Supreme Court rulings, according to Rep. William F. Galvin, D-Boston, House chairman of the Government Regulations Committee, which recommended approval.

"The Supreme Court said it is possible to impose some kind of community standards in areas of pornography and obscenity," Galvin said.

Holiday weekend roadblocks

BOSTON - Police are targeting heavily traveled roads in areas near colleges in Boston and its suburbs to set up roadblocks to stop drunken drivers this holiday weekend.

Public Safety Secretary Charles Barry said the college areas will be the main targets of the roadblocks in Boston and its northern and western suburbs for the Columbus Day weekend.

"This is part of the governor's effort to target colleges this fall in an effort to cut down on the tragically high number of automobile fatalities that historically occur this season and especially during the month of October," he said.

According to the Registry of Motor Vehicle, 14 people lost their lives in highway accidents on Massachusetts roads last Columbus Day weekend.

Over the past 10 years, more people have died on Massachusetts highways during October than during any other month of the year.

Energy policy, conservation could create 156,000 jobs in MA

BOSTON (AP) - Conservation and use of alternative energy sources could create 156,000 jobs in Massachusetts by the year 2,000, a state official told AFL-CIO convention delegates Thursday.

The estimate came from Energy Secretary Sharon Pollard in prepared remarks to the AFL-CIO annual convention at the Park Plaza Hotel.

In her prepared speech, Ms. Pollard said energy policy can create jobs.

If reliance on expensive imported fuel can be stopped, then the flow of energy dollars outside the state can end, she said.

That could produce more disposal income for use in Massachusetts economy, and thus create jobs, she said.

"If we can realize our goal through conservation and alternative energy use, we have the potential of creating 156,000 jobs by the year 2,000 in Massachusetts alone," she said.

Joseph Burnieika, Energy Office spokesman, said the small solar industry in the state alone has created 1,500 jobs.

With every dollar saved by conservation worth $2.50 in economic development, he added the money can be spent in the Massachusetts economy, fostering creation of jobs.

Also addressing the group were Economic Affairs Secretary Evelyn Murphy and Atty. Gen. Francis X. Bellotti.

Ms. Murphy said the state should try to save jobs and keep open a plant in danger of closing, not just wait for the company's "obituary."

Bellotti suggested that if workers must share in company losses, as some have of late, then they should share in the profits.

On plant closings, Ms. Murphy told the convention, "we must save jobs before they are lost as well as protect workers from being cast aside by an economic system their labor has helped to build.

"We must be involved before a plant is closed to aid businesses to keep them in business, not simply get their obituary in advance," she said.

Bellotti said this is a critical period in the history of the union movement.

"This is a time when, very subtly, the whole concept of workers' rights is changing," he said. "In many cases, the question is not increased beneifts but survival."

Citing recent examples, Bellotti said, "Maybe unions must share in company losses in times of economic trouble.

CIA provides planes to anti - Sadinista rebels

WASHINGTON - The Central Intelligence Agency provided anti-Sandinista rebels with at least one of the planes used in bombing raids inside Nicaragua last month, intelligence sources say.

One source said it was a CIA-supplied plane, piloted by two Nicaraguan rebels, that crashed at the base of the control tower at Managua's international airport during a September 8 bombing raid. Another source said the CIA has provided five light planes to the Costa Rican-based forces of former Sandinista hero Eden Pastora, who claimed responsibility for the airport raid.

Although CIA "covert" support for Honduran-based, Nicaraguan counter-revolutionaries has been known for months, Pastora's source of arms and money has remained shrouded in secrecy. Pastora, who broke with the Sandinista government 18 months ago, has repeatedly refused to say where he gets his support.

Students, citizens protest defense-related research

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

In the second rally in two weeks, about 200 University of Massachusetts students gathered on the steps of the Student Union Building Thursday to listen to speakers from a ccalition of concerned students and citizens protest defense-related research on campus.

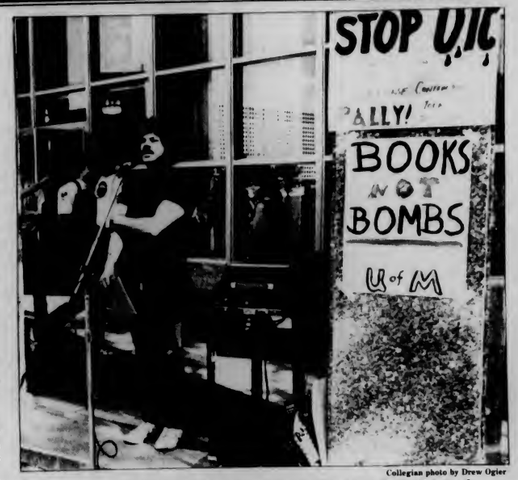
"This University is increasingly being controlled by large corporations which subsidize (academic) departments," Paul Hetznecker of the Emma Goldman Group told the crowd. "There has been a ten percent increase in defense-related research contracts on campus in the last year," Hetznecker said.

Last week students held a rally to protest the United Technologies Corporation two-week management training seminar held in the Campus Center. Protestors claimed United Technologies is the second-largest defense contractor in the United States, however, United Technologies officials denied this charge last week.

"We demand some kind of information forum on campus," Student Government Association co-President Tom Ahern said at the rally Thursday. "It's important that we know what UTC is doing on campus."

Ahern said Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey has agreed to participate in a public forum on the issue, "But details have not been worked out," Ahern said.

After speeches by members of the Radical Student Union and the Northampton Committee on Central America, students were urged to leaflet the UTC conference in the Campus Center. Several members of the coalition tried unsuccessfully to talk with UTC employees at the conference.



The crowd was generally supportive of the demonstration, but some were confused about its meaning.

"What's the difference if they are using the Campus Center, so what?" said Dana Crovo, a sophomore Communications Studies major. Crovo said he is "against war," but UTC is not knocking on my door and telling me to make war."

Robin Hogan, director of UTC media operations, said officials "have not read the leaflets that were handed out," and the protests have not interrupted the conference.

Bonnie Strickland, associate to the Chancellor, said "the Chancellor would be happy to have an open meeting with students, to which the press would be invited."

A group from the coalition said they delivered a list of demands to the Chancellor's office on Wednesday, one of which asked that the University explain all defense-related contracts on campus.

Height of foliage season is here

By DAVID MUNIZ
Collegian Staff

This weekend and next should be the height of the fall foliage season and, with weather providing, people should expect to see a lot of bright red leaves.

"Bright red leaves are the result of warm days and cool nights, which is exactly what we have been getting in weather lately," said Kathy Carroll, a professor in the plant and soil sciences department at the University of Massachusetts.

"The only other factor that affects the foliage is the rain. If it rains, the leaves fall off the trees." Otherwise, the rain has no bearing on the leaves, she said.

So far, the National Weather Service is predicting good weather for Saturday, and the Amherst Chamber of Commerce reports that all area hotels are booked up as a result of the influx of people coming in for football games, homecomings and the fall foliage.

Students could have several options to get out and enjoy the expected lovely autumn splendor around them.

In Amherst and the surrounding area, there are a veritable cornucopia of trails, and according to Bill Howcroft of the UMass Outing Club, "there are a lot of good trails in this area. They offer good views of the mountains."

Some of the trails he recommended were:

The Metacomet-Monadnock Trail which runs from the New Hampshire to the Connecticut border. This trail runs straight through Amherst at the Amethyst Brook Reservation on Main Street.

The Holyoke Range trail, located about two miles past Hampshire College on Rte. 116. The trail starts at the visitor center, and ends at Mt. Skinner State Park. This trail is about six miles long and the Outing Clug suggests that if you have two cars, park one at Mt. Skinner, and one at the Holyoke Range Visitor Center.

In Amherst, there are a few conservation areas, all of which have a trail or two running through them. Amethyst Brook is a good place to find some trails.

Mt. Toby, while not really a trail, is a good walk. Interested hikers can take the Sunderland bus to Cliffside apartments, then take North Silver Lane right past the apartments. Take a right on South Mountain Road. At this point, the route turns into a dirt road, and there are all kinds of narrow dirt roads that wind around the mountain. "It's a pretty good trail," Howcroft said.

The Outing Club suggests that if you go for a hike, you should bring a lunch, some water, a flashlight and maybe a compass. A trail guide might also be helpful in case there is a fork in a trail. The guides also show where streams are.

Another fall activity students may want to take advantage of is apple picking. On weekends, local orchards open their groves to people who want to pick-their-own.

In Belchertown, there is Atkins Orchards, off Rte 9 East in Belchertown. In Whately, there's Hoxie's. Taking Rte 116 in Sunderland, go left onto Rte 5. Take Rte 5 to the first right, which is Swamp Road. Mrs. Hoxie said that it's the first right on Swamp Road, and her home and orchard is at 3 North St.

Hoxie's Orchards is located behind the Hoxie Home-- the second house on the left. Mrs. Hoxie said the the orchard is open from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. Hoxie's, like the other orchards, usually puts out sighn along the road to make it easier to get to the orchard.

Senate elections finish; low turnout places 93 seats

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

Some 93 senators were elected to the Undergraduate Student Senate during Wednesday and Thursday's elections, coordinator Mindy Ordway reported last night. About eight percent of the undergraduate students at the University of Massachusetts voted in the two day elections, she said.

Some 78 percent of the votes came from residential areas, 19 percent were commuters, and three percent were Greeks.

Ordway, who also coordinated last year's elections, said voter turnout was down seven percent from last year's elections.

"It really is disappointing," she said.

An estimated $350 were spent on advertising for the elections, Ordway said. She also circulated press releases to various publications, she said.

Unofficially, the majority of the 93 senators elected, are new to the Undergraduate Student Senate, she said.

Jay Flynn, a reelected senator, said with only 1,543 out of 19,503 undergraduates voting, there should not be many students complaining about their representation in the senate.

"Did any of the students even read about the elections in the Collegian?" Flynn questioned.

"I always hear people complaining about student representation," Flynn said, "and all I can say is anyone who doesn't vote has no right to bitch."

The only problem which Ordway has encountered has been with Greek candidates who had their nomination papers filed under the commuter area.

"The Greek Area elections were all invalidated because of this technicality," Ordway said. "The race was unfair."

The Greek Area elections have been rescheduled and are expected to be held from 11 a.m. - 3 p.m. on next Tuesday in the Newman Center, Ordway said.

The Collegian, following the election, asked about 40 students on campus yesterday why they did or did not vote in the senate elections.

"To tell you the truth," said Rich Ouverbauker, a senior communications studies major, "I never really heard about the elections."

Many of the students simply said they had "no time" to vote, and many showed a general lack of interest in student politics.

"I've just been too busy to vote," said Dave Muise, an undeclared sophomore.

Bill Gorman, a senior mechanical engineering major, said the elections were not promoted well enough.

"I don't know any of the people running," he said, "and I don't know about any of the issues involved."

SWAG election nullified

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Correspondent

Mass confusion set in at the Southwest Area Government (SWAG) Meeting last night as the special in-house Co-Presidential election was nullified on a technicality.

The motion to suspend the election, unanimously approved by the assembly, came after almost 90 minutes of questions and general disarray and cancelled the selection of Mike Bean and Dave McCarthy as heads of this year's SWAG.

According to Scott Kogos, Co-Vice President and originator of the motion, McCarthy's position as information coordinator of SWAG, a position from which he did not resign prior to being elected Co-President, was in violation of the parliamentary procedures followed by the area government.

Moments later, Kogos announced his own candicacy to oppose Bean and McCarthy for President.

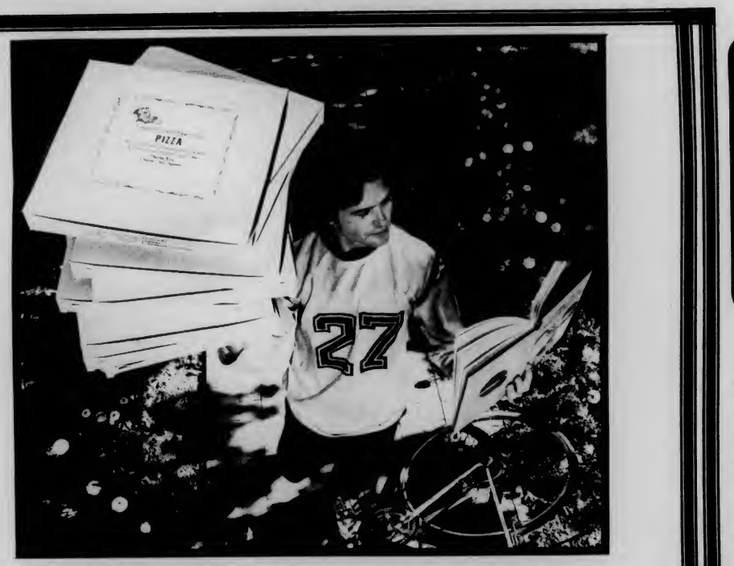
"It was not a personal vendetta at all," said Kogos after the meeting. "It was purely a political maneuver. I wanted to do what would be in the best interest and benefit of Southwest. SWAG was getting off to a slow start, and I couldn't just sit back and wait for things to happen," he said.

The Sturgis Code Book (the parliamentary procedure book used by SWAG) will be studied to see if McCarthy was actually violating any rule. If necessary, another in-house election will be held next Thursday, giving Kogos the opportunity to oppose the two.

Despite the disorder, SWAG did conduct some normal business. Among the resolutions passed was an allocation to WMUA radio station to broadcast UMass football and basketball games.

WUMA was asking SWAG for $1,000, but was only granted the $200 after Brian Murphy, WMUA Sports Director, made a personal plea to the assembly.

"It costs us $100 even before we dial Amherst," said Murphy, explaining the telephone systems used to transmit UMass road games back to Amherst.



MA Health lecture series planned

Dr. Andrew Sorenson, new to the University of Massachusetts this fall as the director of the division of public health, recently said he hopes to increase the department's awareness among schools throughout the country.

To achieve this goal, Sorenson has arranged for a series of public health field leaders to lecture at UMass. Dr. Bailus Walker, commissioner with the MA. State Department of Health, will be one such guest and environmental health professors are developing a course to incorporate topics such as acid rain.

Sorenson said he hopes these activites will introduce non-majors in public health to issues like environmental health, health education, community health administration and biostatistics.

"I'm excited by the administrative and organizational challenges before me," he said. -JOE SHARTRAND

Future fundraising events include an auction, a dance at Hangar One, cosmetic vendors, and a multi-image concert, I Was The Wind, combining Mark Thompson's live musical performance with Bob Jamison's photography, which is sponsored by Never Summer Productions. It will be presented in the Campus Center Auditorium on November 15; price of admission will be $1.

To end the semester fund drive, WMUA will hold a Phone-a-Thon in December. Like a telathon, the Phone-a-thon will ask listeners to send money to help keep the station running.

"We'll be constantly asking people to send in money. Basically we'll be saying 'if you enjoy MUA, then please help support us' " Stepchew said.

"We don't like to burden our listeners for money but we have to do it," he explained.

This past year has been a frustrating one for Stepchew and his staff.

"Instead of concentrating on putting on a radio program, we have been putting alot of time in fund raising," he said. "My staff has been very committed."

"Construction on the new station began last Monday and the station should be ready be Christmas," Stepchew said.

"A pretty good Christmas present," he said with a smile.

Medieval History Conference at UMass

By LISA BORDERS
Collegian Correspondent

Herter Art Gallery will host an archaeological exhibit and lectures as part of the Medieval History Conference at University of Massachusetts this weekend.

The exhibit consists of over 200 photographs of a "dig," or archaeological site at Psalmondi in southern France said Michael Coblyn of the gallery. Scholars have uncovered the remains of a Carolingian monastery dating back to the end of the eighth century, Coblyn said.

The exhibit and all lectures will be free of charge.

"A group of historians have been working at this dig for 14 years," he said.

Archaeologists, architects, art historians and students have been involved in the project, which is funded by Williams College and the Kress Foundation, Coblyn said.

Two lectures will be given to accompany the show. W.S. Stoddard, professor of art, emeritus at Williams College will speak on the origins of the Psalmondi site at 4 p.m. Saturday in Herter Art Gallery, and Brooks W. Stoddard, professor of art at the University of Southern Maine and director of the Psalmondi excavations, will lecture at 9:30 a.m. Sunday in the gallery on the subject of archaeology in general.

"Both lecturers are involved with the dig, and are authorities on the subject," Coblyn said. "W.S. Stoddard has written three books on medieval French art."

Other lectures are scheduled as part of the Medieval History Conference. Virginia Raguin from Holy Cross College will speak on "Political, artistic and religious dimensions in the glazing program of the Cathedral of Poitiers," at 10 a.m. Saturday, and Eliza Ghil of Dartmouth will speak at 11 a.m. on "Ideological models and poetic modes in the "Song of the Albigensian Crusade."

"Precarial grants: clerical and secular approaches to landholding and time" is the topic Stephen Weinberger of Dickinson College will address at 2 p.m. Kathryn Reyerson of Minnesota will speak about "The structure and function of business partnerships in Montpellier" at 3 p.m.

Workshop advocates fighting for rights

By CHRIS SCHUSTER
Collegian Staff

The facts are frightening.

Only two rapes out of every 100 that occur will ever make it to the courts. One out of every three persons will be a victim of sexual assaults. On this campus, 60 percent of the rapes that occur are acquaintance rapes.

The statistics are amazing. But there is an option, according to Linda Piorun of the University of Massachusetts Police Sensitive Crime Unit. A woman can avoid, discourage, if not stop, a rape.

"Let the rapist know you will not let him control you," she said. "Feel free to make a scene in public. Stick up for your rights. Scream."

The advice given was worthwhile at the rape awareness workshop held Thursday night at UMass.

Even though a woman can rarely stop a rape, she should try anyway. Talking to the rapist, taking the nearest exit avenue or screaming are a few of the ways she can try, Poirun said.

"A woman must think, 'I'm going to live through this experience,' " she said. "A woman going through the rape thinks she is going to die."

Martha Tapia, coordinator of the Educator/Advocate program of the Everywoman Center who also facilitated the workshop said, "No woman deserves to be raped under any circumstances."

"When a rape takes place, someone has taken over someone's life and someone's body," Tapia said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Three cheers for Ed King?

It's funny how euphemisms are used to protect us from the hard truth.

At Wednesday's ceremony dedicating the Graduate Research Center to former university president John W. Lederle, former governor Edward J. King received the honorary degree he was supposed to receive at last spring commencement. Death threats prevented his attendence.

Student protest to the honor arose not because King was responsible for raising the drinking age, as was thought by many to be the reason, but because King did not visit the campus, showing a lack of interest in public education, and because tuition was raised and because of budget cuts during his time in office. These are hard facts.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey recognized King Wednesday by saying he was "ahead of his time in understanding public investment in education is directly related to the economic well being of the economy." Sure, if state funds are not spent on education they can be spent elsewhere.

The heckler who shouted "He's no friend of the university" was closer to the truth than Duffey.

And then Board of Trustees Chair Robert H. Quinn tried to soften King's embarrasment when he said "I speak for the entire university, including the students, when I commend him on his outstanding service to the commonwealth and the university. I am speaking from experience, not my position." This raises two interesting points. Quinn was not speaking for the students, who were in obvious protest of King's award and his experience was playing football with Ed King, which could certainly bias his feelings toward the man.

"It's a matter of the differences between performance and perception," King said of his policies Wednesday, implying he meant well. There are not many ways to perceive tuition increases or an unsympathetic governor.

Perhaps King should have heeded to his own philosophy when he made his decisions while governor. But it must be hard to perceive a struggling student's situation while deciding public education policy over a Pier 4 lunch.

Aside from King's "remarkable" policies which left the commonwealth richer and its future students, poorer; I am concerned about our administrators reactions. How can they honestly think King's moves were beneficial to the university and public education?

And if they do believe this, there is even more cause for concern.

A tradition, such as the awarding of an honorary degree to outgoing governors is one thing, but misguiding statements about the credibility of the honor is another.

If our administrators cannot level with us about King, can they level with us about anything?

You're never alone at the D.C.

For those people who have been at UMass for awhile, eating alone in the D.C. can be a pleasant half-hour in which to relax and collect their thoughts before rushing off to a bio-chem lecture or a no-nukes film. But for the newer folks, the freshmen and transfer students, that same experience can be pure hell - even more unpleasant than the food. It is in deep sympathy for those poor unfortunates that I've recalled my own awkward first semester, one short year ago, and so present Dining Alone at the D.C.: A Brief Manual.

Elizabeth Luciano

While standing on line, occupy the time and your nervousness by dramatically checking your watch. Hold it up to your ear for a moment and squint as though you're not sure it's ticking. Look at the clock to see whether your watch is ahead or behind. If it's either, fix it. If it's neither, wind it until the springs are ready to break.

There are still ten people in front of you, so study your new I.D. See if you've memorized your student number yet by holding your hand over it and giving yourself a little quiz. Note that the Fall '83 sticker is almost worn off already. Notice how tan you are in the picture, in contrast with how disgustingly pale and faded you are now. Sigh.

Try to strike up a conversation with the person next to you, who resembles, to an incredible degree, your very favorite ex-flame, whom your mother hated; a tall, blond jazz saxophonist with a four-year-old daughter and an estranged spouse. The temporary object of your affections is totally disinterested in you. Try not to look embarrassed. While the D.C. lady runs your card through the computer, toss your head as if to say,

"Oh yeah, I'm cool."

Fumble with the plastic yellow tray, then clatter around with the silverware and come up with two knives and a spoon. Be too shy to hold up the line, and decide you'll just eat some soup and bread; you don't need a fork for either of those. While getting a glass of soda, drop the ice from the spoon to the floor. Ignore it and grimace when you spray Tab all over your hand.

Go to the salad bar and secretly believe that everybody is criticizing you for eating so much when you'd obviously benefit from a Jack LaLanne membership. Think that everyone thinks you're a pig and a slob because you dropped a chick pea into cottage cheese. Realize that you went through all the terror of getting fresh vegetables, and you don't even have a fork to eat with them. Flog yourself mentally.

Scan the area like radar equipment and locate an empty, if somewhat gooky table. Steer straight toward it, praying that you won't drop your tray. My God, what a nightmare that would be! Everyone might start clapping. Cracking up your car on the Mass Pike would probably be a less traumatic experience.

Sit down and start eating your bread, deciding you look like a cow chewing its cud. Try to figure out whether the rugby player three tables over is winking at you or has a speck in his eye. Be unable to decide, and purposely avoid his gaze for the remainder of the meal.

Two women wearing Indian skirts sit down at your table. Smile at them and feel like a leper when they don't respond. Wonder whether your name is Typhoid Mary. Wonder whether you should yell,

"Unclean! Unclean!" to ward off any other prospective dining companions. The two you have are eating alfalfa sprouts and fiber-filled bran squares. Yech! Overhear one of them say,

"I'm getting sick to death of putting up with Sheila's petty social bullshit."

Wish that you were more outgoing and already had a lot of friends with whom to exchange petty social bullshit. Then notice that one of the women has a giant chunk of apple stuck between her front teeth. Saying that it looks repulsive would be an understatement. Having been brought up to be polite, you know the correct thing to do would be to quietly clue her in with a whispered comment.

Decide not to. Decide you feel better. Accidently burp. Decide not to excuse yourself. Smile.

Controversy

There is an emerging totalitarianism in this country, a corporate totalitarianism which threatens to extinguish freedom and democracy. Once described as the dominant institution in American society, the corporation has become virtually the only institutional structure that exists. By shaping and defining all the other major institutions, all of us are in many ways significantly influenced by these giant corporations.

Big business controls the production and exchange of the crucial elements of society; food, energy, technology, and information. But perhaps the biggest threat to our freedom has come as a result of the integration of big business and the state into one structure of power. Centralized corporate planning has already taken shape in the military-industrial complex of this country. "Pentagon Inc," as it has been termed not only symbolizes the militarization of our society but also embodies the roots of this new totalitarianism. The modern corporate state maintains itself on a war economy through an ever increasing defense budget which subsidizes the ever increasing growth and profits of corporate America. This in turn has greatly influenced the direction of the nation's educational institutions.

It was originally through the defense department that giant corporations and universities first worked together to develop weapons systems, changing the focus of the educational institutions from what were once considered training centers into elaborate research facilities. This is illustrated by the yearly increases in awards from private industry as well as the Department of Defense [DOD] to major colleges and universities.

In fact, from fiscal year 1980 to '81 there was a ten percent increase in the amount of money awarded to educational institutions from the DOD, totaling close to 1.3 billion dollars. [This does not include subcontracts or related contracts from private industry.] UM alone received $1.5 million in prime contracts awards from the DOD, so this is an issue that directly effects everyone on this campus. The question is - what do we do about this? How do we stop the disposal of hazardous waste? How do we effect change in a system that has taken the process of decision-making outside the democratic system and into the boardrooms of America's banks and corporations? These are the questions that we will all face in the next few decades as the nature of our country's political economy changes. The issue is control over our lives, our institutions and our future.

Rarely has there been an opportunity for us to put forth this issue in a concrete way. However, this past week has provided the university community with one such opportunity. Last week over two hundred people rallied against the presence of the United Technologies Corporation here on campus. U.T.C., the second largest defense contractor, employs close to 200,000 workers and operates in 130 countries, including two plants in apartheid South Africa. Last year U.T.C.'s sales were over 13 billion dollars [larger than the GNP of many nations], over one third of which was defense related. The decisions made by this giant organization are made by only a powerful few, decisions which may affect all of us but nevertheless go unchecked by any democratic institution.

Don't let the university excercise the same undemocratic process in its decision making. U.T.C. had announced its plans to stay for the remainder of the week even after the undergraduate Senate passed a resolution banning the company from the campus. We have yet to hear from the administration. I urge you to voice your concerns, demand that U.T.C. and its war machine leave the campus forever. Demonstrate that we can still democratize our lives, and that we can still control our institutions by simply getting involved.

Party madness never stops

To the Editor,

When I made my decision to attend UMass I was aware that it had the reputation of being a party school. Since I signed up for a coed dorm in Southwest I expected stereos to be blaring at night and lots of partying going on as well. However, what I did not expect was that animals in human form would be howling outside my window between one and two o'clock in the morning.

You see, my window happens to face the center of Southwest. I usually don't get to sleep until 12:30 because that is when the partying and the music begins to cease on my floor, but just about every night at around one or two I seem to be awoken by howling or yelling outside. To those of you who howl or yell for no apparent reason, I ask why you have such primitive habits? Don't tell me that you act in this strange manner because you are drunk. I mean drinking might lower your inhibitions, but howling? That's ridiculous.

You might not have classes until 2:30 p.m. so that you can sleep in the morning, but some of us less fortunate souls have classes at 8:00 or 9:00 a.m.

Every inch the rocker

Joe Perry
WMUA Interview

By YANETT PENA
Collegian Staff

It's a semi-warm Thursday afternoon and people keep walking in and out of the small studio in the basement of Cashin Dorm, the temporary home for WMUA. Disc jockey and Public Affairs Director, Steve Diamond plays an Electric Light Orchestra record and looks at the clock on the wall again. It's 4:15 and one question keeps popping up: where the hell is Joe Perry?

The once-famed ex-Aerosmith lead guitarist is forty five minutes late for his scheduled on-the-air interview with Diamond, and is nowhere to be found. Just when many are ready to give up (including this reporter), the "serious" Mr. Perry makes his entrance accompanied by his entourage, including two new members from his band, the Project.

He shakes some hands, gives Diamond a copy of his latest album, "Once a Rocker, Always a Rocker" to play, then goes behind a microphone to answer some questions. Despite rumors that he is arrogant and elusive, Joe Perry is cooperative and almost soft-spoken, but still doesn't want to talk with Aerosmith. "I was getting real bored with them," he says to Diamond.

Wearing skin tight khaki pants, an opened camouflage shirt over a black tee-shirt, and dark blue Nike sneakers, Perry looks every inch the magazine rock star. He keeps mussing his long, black shaggy hair, and eventually exposes two pierced earlobes, each adorned with dangling gold earrings. His enthusiasm for his new album (it's his third solo LP) is apparent as he snaps his fingers in tune and almost smiles when Diamond plays a cut from it. Perry calls it "good American rock'n'roll", and in-between songs, record copies and tickets to see him and his band that night at the Rusty Nail are given to the first sixteen callers at WMUA.

The interview, which was arranged by the station's Music Director, Jim Neill, lasts almost forty minutes. Diamond and Perry have talked about his current tour, his divorce, the new video of "Black Velvet Pants" ("I like the way they look, I like the way they feel," Perry explains), and sex, drugs, and rock'n'roll.

Perry then excuses himself to do a sound check at the Rusty Nail, shakes hands again and leaves. His road manager, guitar technician,etc...follow close behind. The studio clears somewhat, but a few Perry fans and WMUA personnel hang around to clap, cheer, and congratulate Steve Diamond on his "good job".

Later that night after the show at the Nail, Joe Perry says he thought the interview went OK, and goes on to tell me a story about an "asshole" d.j. who repeated each question he asked him, three times. Perry has more radio interview to do, "But," he shrugs, "that's part of the business."

Joe Perry: quite the magazine rock star

Trailers by Andy Gordon

Beat it Roger.

Richard Benjamin, whose first film as a director was the silly (bordering on stupid) comedy My Favorite Year, will take on Racing with the Moon for producer Sherry Lansing. The buddy film stars Sean Penn and Nicholas Cage as friends in a small coastal village with six weeks to enjoy life before entering the marines. The year is 1942, with WWII hanging over the young men's heads. Penn and Cage are two of the better of the new crop of young actors and with Elizabeth McGovern also in the cast as Penn's love interest, the film could be hopping.

Moon is also in the title of Jean-Jacques Beineix's new film, The Moon in the Gutter, starring Nastassia Kinski and Gered Depardieu. Beineix, whose first film was the dull and overrated Diva (death threats can be sent care of this paper), apparantly screwed up big time - everyone from the critics to his stars has condemned the film in print. Depardieu, meanwhile, is everywhere. His Danton just opened in Boston: The Return of Martin Guerre starts today here; last year's Choice of Arms is on Spotlight this month. No wonder he's on the cover of American Film this month.

A mistake in last week's TRAILERS. I listed Rutger Hauer as playing Largo in the new Bond film. Wrong. The part is played by Klaus Maria Brandsauer, star of last year's Oscar winning Mephisto. Hauer has the lead role as a T.V. newsman entangled with the C.I.A. in Sam Peckinpah's upcoming The Osterman Weekend. Sorry, y'know.

Blake Edwards will bastardize Francois Truffaut's classic The Man who Loved Women with Burt Reynolds in the title role. I'm not sure where they'll fit in the car chases. Then Edwards will trash the memory of Laurel and Hardy with a remake of their 1932 short, The Music Box. Reynolds again stars, this time with Richard Pryor. Pryor, meanwhile, has another concert film coming out, and will then move on to another zany Pryor/Gene Wilder vehicle and serious biographies of Charlie Parker and Malcolm X.

Local Best Bets: As mentioned above, The Return of the Martin Guerre opens today at the Academy of Music in Northampton. Good little tale, good acting. Woody Allen's tedious but nevertheless enjoyable Zelig is at the Hampshire 4, as is Lawrence Kasdan's excellent The Big Chill. But lets be honest with ourselves; Sean Connery is James Bond. Never Say Never Again at the Mountain Farms. First show for you hardcores is at 4:45.

TRAILERS Trivia: Come on, last week's question was easy. What did the four films have in common? All were released in 1972: The Godfather (March), The Candidate (June), Deliverance (July), The Poseidon Adventure (December). This week's question: specifically where in Twilight Zone: The Movie were subliminal cuts used? The first correct answer will receive the complet Metalstorm press kit.

Friendships warm Chill

The Big Chill
Directed by Lawrence Kasdan
Hampshire 4 Theatres

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

Often compared to the little-seen but well-reviewed Return of the Secaucus Seven directed by John Sayles in 1980, The Big Chill is a serious but delightfully human film. It is quite a departure for writer/director Lawrence Kasdan, whose previous screenwriting efforts have included Raiders of the Lost Ark, Continental Divide, The Empire Strikes Back, Return of the Jedi and, in his directorial debut, Body Heat.

The Big Chill gathers seven ex-housemates from the University of Michigan as they mourn the unexpected suicide of their close friend and fellow classmate, Alex. Kasdan has assembled what can only be termed a truly exemplary cast, including Tom Berenger (Sam), Glenn Close (Sarah), Jeff Goldblum (Michael), William Hurt (Nick), Kevin Kline (Harold), Mary Kay Place (Meg), and JoBeth Williams (Karen). Also included is Meg Tilly as Chloe, Alex's gentle, if somewhat spacy girlfriend.

Although The Big Chill deals with suicide in the solemn manner such a tragety requires, this movie is not, on the whole, depressing. The script is chock-full of sharply witty lines and banter, most of which are extremely well-delivered as the characters console one another and take stock of the twelve years since their graduation from college.

Harold and his wife Sarah, who serve as hosts for the weekend, are the owner of a chain of running-shoe stores, and a physician, respectively. Michael has given up his literary standards and writes for People magazine, while Meg has swapped her social ideals in return for a cushy position as a corporate lawyer. Sam is a tremendously successful television star who finds his personal life empty. Karen is disenchanted with her marriage, and Nick is a drug-addicted and impotent Vietnam vet.

The plot is sometimes difficult to follow due to the large number of characters. However, it is interesting to watch the shift of friendships and "better-than-friendships" as the weekend progresses. The soundtrack, which offers such strong classic tunes as "I Heard it Through the Grapevine," "Bad Moon Rising," and "In the Midnight Hour" is excellent, if somewhat distracting.

One minor annoyance: The inclusion of the theme from Raiders of the Lost Ark was a cheap shot smacking of nepotism.

However, that can be overlooked in the face of The Big Chill's overall quality. Its sensitivity and humor make it well worth seeing.

(The Big Chill will be playing at the Hampshire 4 theatres for several weeks. Call the theatre (584-7550) for showtimes.)

William Hurt comforts Mary Kay Place in The Big Chill.

Indian activist, poet speak at UM ass

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

John Trudell, an American Indian activist, poet and orator, spoke Wednesday at the University of Massachusetts on the war waged against Indians for centuries and on the case of Leonard Peltier, a fellow Indian charged with murdering two FBI agents in 1975.

Peltier is presently serving two consecutive life sentences in Marion, Illinois for "aiding and abetting" in the deaths of the two agents, which Trudell claims were false charges but cannot be proven otherwise due to the power of the FBI.

Trudell is a member of the American Indian Movement (AIM), "a society of people trying to be free." AIM accepts no new members and belongs to no organizational structure, he said.

"We are who we are. We have our minds set to the problems we face. Our human spirit, our human being and our natural world is being destroyed by an uncoltrolled industrial world," Trudell said.

According to Trudell, AIM was formed to survive genocidal attacks waged against Indians. This was an "extention of the longest war, a war that resulted from a difference of opinion on how to live with the earth." This war, which started 491 years ago, has been prolonged through the centuries, with different names. But, according to Trudell, they have stemmed from the different perspectives on life by Americans and Indians.

America looked at AIM as if it was a militant association chasing a cause or a limited movement, he said.

Today, Trudell said AIM is still facing the "Seventh Cavalry," now called the FBI and other law enforcing agencies.

Trudell said the war presently waged against Indians is a "physical and genocidal war against the spirit." Trudell, who said he remembers this land before it was America or a colony, said when American democracy was born, the majority was to rule. But because the Indians were a majority, they were seen as the enemy.

"I remember being called a pagan, savage, hostile, heathen, communist, terrorist," he said. "I remember the children being taken away to be brainwashed and have their spirits and mind broken and confused by an industrialized world."

When the rest of America raised their voices for freedom during the 1960's, the American Indians were caught up in the enthusiasm of the rebellions others were showing, he said. They also raised their voices to honor the treaty for freedom, but Trudell said, "America tricked us all."

Two hundred years later the American government wants to recognize the Indians and has asked them to join the political system of the United States, he said, but he doubts there will be any democracy for the Indians when in fact the voices of the Americans are not beir heard.

In three poems read to the audience, Trudell spcke of water poison and air poison as the ultimate paranoia. He also spoke of human beings as "haunted spirits" and classroom propoganda, religious domination, class exploitation, racism and sexism.

People's connection with the natural world, their understanding of reality and of who they are, what powers they possess as humans and where they come from are vital factors for the survival of humans, Trudell said.

"We have to understand the difference between reality and illusion if we are to have a seventh generation, he said.

Islam and Human merchandise

By SUSAN HATTIS ROLEF
Special to Black Affairs

John Laffin, the British author or "The Arab Mind," tells a tale in "The Arabs as Master Slavers" (SBS Publishing, Inc.; 116 pages) that is difficult to comprehend. It is the story of slavery in the Arab world, in the past and today, with a special chapter on the status of women in traditional Arab society.

John Laffin's interest in the subject was first aroused when he saw Arab slave dealers in Djibouti in April 1956 selling Africal slaves. The author's description of this experience is hairraising: "Men, women and children were brought from the warehouse and paraded on a raised platform so that all dealers could clearly see them. A trader would nudge a slave's jaw with a stick and the man would open his mouth to display his teeth. Another probe with the stick and he would flex his arm muscles.

"Young women were forced to expose their breasts and buttocks. A dispute developed over the virginity of a tall young ebony woman, and during the argument she was forced to squat while one of the most prominent buyers examined her with his fingers. She was terrified; her trembling was visible fifty yards away.

"Occasionally children were sold in batches."

Slavery was officially abolished in Saudi Arabia in 1962, yet it is no secret that it still continues, even though the sort of auction observed by Laffin in Djibouti, port city of Somalia, is presumably a thing of the past.

It is known that many a pilgrim to Mecca and Nedian never leaves Saudi Arabia again as a free man.

Laffin's account deals with the phenomenon of slavery in the Arab world, the rites of slavery and the exploitation of East Africa, especially the slave trade which followed the Arab settlement in Zanzibar. Reading the accounts--all of them documented by travelers and scholars who had observed the phenomenon at first hand--it is difficult to grasp that most of the tales relate to our own lifetime.

The most shocking aspect of the slave trade was the actual rounding up of the slaves in Africa and the long march over hundreds of miles of desert, in the course of which 80 to 90 percent of the slaves perished of starvation, disease and exhaustion. Those who survived were then subjected to the sort of degrading experience observed by Laffin in Djibouti. The actual life in servitude which followed must have seemed like heaven in comparison with the humiliation and pain suffered by those wretched human beings until their eventual purchase.

Laffin also describes Islam's attitude to slavery, which he says "is ambiguous and ambivalent and can hardly be anything else." He writes: "The Koran forbids slavery and introduced the new idea that it is highly meritorious to set slaves free. This is straight-forward enough. But, says the Moslem, you cannot set slaves free unless you first own slaves--therefore slavery is sanctioned by God and almost certainly directly commanded by Him."

This book reminds us that even the most liberal and enlightened audience must remember that the tolerance it preaches has its limits, and that there are certain customs in other civilizations which Western society cannot condone without endangering whatever morals it still possesses. These have to do with basic human rights and human dignity and include child labor, abuse of women and slavery.

The fact that all these are still prevalent in the Arab world is in itself an evil which must be eradicated. It also goes to show that we are facing a civilization with very different values, mores, customs and beliefs from ours, a civilization which uses familiar Western terms, but within a completely different context, changing the actual meaning.

Laffin's book is not a definitive study on the subject of the Arab slave trade. But it is an extremely valuable and highly readable account of an issue that too few people know anything about.

suspensions will only serve to hurt this University's academic future."

"The Attitude of the administration, who expect professors under suspension to honor their responsibilities, while violating our academic freedom, is unreasonable," he added.

Allan Marra, professor of wood technology who was also suspended, said he expects that if suspensions were to take place during scheduled classes, "most suspended professors would cancel their classes much the same as public school teachers on strike do. We're not any different."

But Boylan said inherent suspensions should not disrupt classes.

"My understanding is that any suspensions this semester will not take place during scheduled class time," he said. Boylan also confirmed the fact that up to 50 professors may face suspension this semester, as opposed to the 11 who were subject to suspension last semester.

A "conscientious objector" clause in the union contract was designed to accomodate those who did not wish to join the union, Boylan said. Under this clause, a professor's fee goes into a student scholarship fund and not the union.

Micheal Kreisler, professor of physics and astronomy and a member of the original "Amherst 11," said that this provision is completely arbitrary and subject to the whims of the union. Kreisler called the administration's actions "a coercion of professors that is totoally inconsistent with the principle of acedemic freedom."

Pan-Am steroids crisis blown up by the media

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

They don't tell you everything in the newspapers.

Amidst the fun, Venezuelans, hype and use of steroids, at the Pan-American games this August was one University of Massachusetts athlete.

Allyson Rioux, a senior, was member of the United States women's softball team and in Caracus, and the games weren't such a mess as the media said it was, according to the USA's second baseman.

"I was more informed about the steroids when I got back to the United States," Rioux said. "The media totally blew it out of proportion. They made it sound like a good portion of the athletes had something to hide."

The testing for steroids and other drugs is the stiffest at the Pan-Am games because it is twelve months before the Olympics and anyone caught is banned for 18 months of international competition, explained Rioux.

Some athletes competed in the preliminary heats and then got "sick". But they did what they wanted to do. They checked out their competition for L.A. and Yugoslavia in '84. They may or may not have been using steroids.

"I was really disappointed," reflected Rioux. "They (media) were not considering the whole issue. Three to five out of 3,000 US athletes got caught und they (media) really went to town on it," said Rioux.

While Rioux said that steroids should be banned, she said it was the minority (using steroids) hurting the majority.

The Housing wasn't as bad as the media portrayed, either.

"It was bad, but liveable. The US was most disappointed in the Venezuelan government. They had three years to build the buildings and they started certain things very late. It got better as we went along," Rioux said.

The American athletes couldn't drink the water, had to put up with cement dust in some corridors, and they could never tell what kind of water, if any, they would get in their showers.

A few corridors didn't even have their hall doors.

But the Stamford, Conn. native wouldn't trade the experience for anything.

"It was such a thrill and a honor to represent the United States," Rioux said. It's one of those things that is a bit undescribable. It's like donning your high school uniform for the first time but on a much larger scale.

The United States after romping through the round-robin tournament with a 10-1 record, faces Canada in the one game gold medal finals. The US had beaten Canada three times.

The Canadians pulled off a 5-4 win and after the game, they admitted that the Americans were really the better team.

Rioux helped the American team with a .500 batting average, the highest at the games and by making a diving catch at second to preserve a perfect game against Venezuela.

Despite all the hype and write up of steroids, housing and a silver medal experience, Rioux said, "It was a fantastic experience."

Equestrian is in competition

Special to the Collegian

The University of Massachusetts Equestrian team got off to a slow start under adverse conditions last week at Colby College but looks to improve when they compete in the Dartmouth College Show tomorrow in Durham.

UMass, which is considered to be one of the top five teams in the Northeast, finished a disappointing ninth out of 21 in the rain at Colby.

However, strong performances were turned in by Anne Young, Leslie Batchelder, Bill Landsman, and Melissa Bilodeau.

The Greek predicts UMass-Delaware

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

I don't like Jimmy the Greek.

He pretends he has the inside scoop when he picks games for Brent Musberger on Sunday afternoons, when all he really does is look at records and stats, and take a guess like everybody else.

The Greek, or Phyllis George for that matter, would have no problem making a pick when the University of Massachusetts football team plays the Delaware Fightin' Blue Hens, tommorow in Delaware.

"Delaware was the runnerup in the Division II-A playoffs last year and finished the year ranked third in the nation," the Greek points out, "They're only 2-2 so far this year but they have an explosive offense."

The Greek is right on that point. Delaware was 12-2 last year and this year the offense averages 423 yards a game in total offense (7th in nation) and races up 29 points a game (15th in nation).

The Hen's Wing-T offense is averaging 221 yards on the ground, good for 11th place nation and quarterback B.J. Webster is 17th in the nation in total offense, averaging 198 yards a game.

"UMass has had their problems this year," says the Greek, noting the 1-3 record the Minutemen have to show after four games. "Their offense has been erractic and mistake prone and they've had problems putting the ball in the endzone when they get inside the 20."

Again, the Greek is right on target. The UMass offense hasn't been consistent and they were inside their 20 three times against Holy Cross, once on the one yard line, and failed to come away with even a field goal.

Massachusetts is averaging only nine points a game and the defense and the place kicker have accounted for 13 of the 37 points the UMass offense has scored this year.

"Defensively, Delaware is solid but they give up points (19 per game) and the UMass defense has played well thus far but they're overworked." Says the Greek.

"The Delaware offense gives them the edge but the big fact that jumps out at me, Brent, is that UMass has not beaten Delaware once in their seven meetings and those were pretty good UMass football teams," the Greek says confidently. "I say Delaware 31-13."

The Greek's analyzation of this game was flawless until he neglected to mention that Delaware barely pulled out two of the last three games a 14-13 last year when UMass went for two point conversion that foiled, and 1980 when the Blue Hens scored on a bomb with 30 seconds left to win 21-17.

The Greek's usually wrong.

I say UMass 14-13.

UMass hosts own invitational

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Still in pursuit of that elusive first win, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team will host the first UMass Invitational today and tomorrow at Boyden Field.

The four team field will be highlighted by the entry of the Rutgers Scarlet Knights, ranked 11th in the country, Division I.

Along with UMass and Rutgers, ST. Joseph of Philadelphia and North Adams State are in the tournament.

UMass faces North Adam State at 12:30 p.m. today in the tourney opener while St. Joseph faces Rutgers in the 3 p.m. game.

"It looks like a good soccer tournament," UMass head coach Jeff Gettler said. "We are looking to be in the finals and it would get us on our way if we could win our own tournament."

That may be harder than it sounds. First, UMass has to get by a tough North Adams St, who is no patsy even though they are a Division III school. North Adams brings a 6-2-2 record into Amherst and has been unbeaten in their last eight games after losing their first two games.

Then, UMass would most likely face the giant task of beating 11th ranked Rutgers, undefeated at 7-0.

But before UMass can talk of bating any schools, they must solve their scoring problems and learn to finish up their games with intensity.

"We are going to try and get some goals and really try to attack," said Gettler. "We've got to put away our chances."

Against Yale, Gettler mentioned that the Minutemen did not finish up well, a problem that has plagued them all year.

The Minutemen will still be without the services of goalie Donald Donahue, back Michael Runeare and Frank Neffinger, who are all hurt.

UMass, 0-4-3, will have the services of fresham goalie Jaie Firmage who played well in the Yale loss, except for a few mistakes. Gettler said Firmage's play improved greatly over the 3-1 Vermont loss.

On Saturday, the two losers will vie in the consolation game at 12 noon.

The championship game, which should be between Rutgers and UMass will begin at 3 p.m. on Saturday.

If your one of the people around, stop down at Boyden.

"It'll be a good weekend of soccer," says Gettler.

NY Jets take off for the windless Meadowlands

By KEVIN DELUCA

Collegian Staff

Finally, the New York Jets have moved to the paradise known as New Jersey to frolick in the swamps of the Meadowlands every weekend the Giants are away from home. One can only be surprised that it has not happened sooner.

The outrage Mayor Ed Koch and his fellow New Yorkers are displaying is totally unwarranted. In Shea, the Jets were second-class citizens subject to the rule of the Mets. When that mad tyrant Donald Grant was running the Mets, he forced the Jets to play their opening four games on the road, which put the then hapless Jets at a further disadvantage. The reasoning behind this was that the Jets would ruin the field- never mind that Grant was ruining the Mets.

Also, the Mets got all the revenues from concessions sold during Jet games.

Then there was Shea itself. Shea Staduim is built for baseball, not football. The open end of the stadium allows the wind to turn the games into dust storms.

Perhaps the biggest problem with Shea is getting there through the city traffic and then finding a parking space. Public transportation is not a viable alternative in New York City.

The Meadowlands does not share any of the above problems. Many main highways lead to Giants Stadium. The parking area is spacious and perfect for tailgating. Giants Stadium was built for football and it is enclosed. Also, the Jets' lease will be independent of the Giants'. Yet perhaps the greatest advantage of the Jets' move is that the Meadowlands Sports Complex is surrounded by scenic prehistoric marshland that is a haven for wildlife and a welcome change from the sterile stone setting of the city.

The city and the Mets dumped on the Jets for too long. Jets, welcome to New Jersey! May you prosper and meet the Giants in the Super Bowl.

UMass water polo looks to have its best season ever

Special to the Collegian

Following a solid fourth place finish in New England last season, the University of Massachusetts men's water polo team is looking to have one of its brightest seasons ever.

With five (out of seven) seniors in the starting lineup, coach Russ Yarworth feels he has the depth and experience to qualify for the Eastern Championships to be held at the U.S. Naval Academy, November 10-12.

The Minutemen must finish in the top three in New England in order to be invited to the eight team tournament. The top two teams in the New England, teams in the New England, Mid-Atlantic and Southern Conferences automatically qualify, while two of the third place finishers are chosen for at-large berths.

on the way to reaching that goal with a respectable 5-1 record in their first two tournaments and convincing victories over Amherst College and Deerfield Academy.

"Defense", said Yarworth, "will pave the way to the Easterns for the MInutemen".

That defense is anchored by senior goalie Andre LaMontagne. "He stops more shots than a bullet proof windshield," claims Yarworth.

Leading the offensive charge this year is Senior captain Chris Porter. Porter has grown to become one of the more dominating forces in New England.

"The guy is a real thoroughbred," said assistant coach Nick Reggio.

Rounding out the starting seven and playing extremely vital roles in the process are seniors Jack Fuchs, Jay Earls, Phil Surette, and juniors Paul McNeil and Bill Feeney.

The bench, which always plays an important role in tournament play is headed by seniors Phil Schoepke and Bob Cameron, and freshmen Owen McGonagle and Mike Hoover.

Leading the way for future seasons are members of the UMass Killer B's. Underclassmen Bob McGillicuddy, Kevin Gallagher, Adam Markel, Luke Groden, Jeff Piaget, Jim Jacobson and Chris Cocca round out the team's roster.

"I'm extremely pleased with the progress that these guys are making," Reggio said. "They are already making significant contributions to the program."

"We have a lot of game situations that still need to be perfected before we can consider ourselves a force," claims Yarworth. "They played well at MIT last weekend, but the real test will be at Harvard this weekend in our first league tournament."

"Practices have been going well and the guys have been preparing themselves for this weekend. I don't think they are ready to give up their New England standing, which they have worked hard to achieve. We will be ready," Yarworth said.

Halloween Security Planned that Weekend

By VIRGINIA WARFIELD
Collegian Correspondent

Because of past problems with Halloween, the University of Massachusetts this year will continue an effort to ensure the security of the campus, while encouraging students to enjoy Halloween activities, Director of Housing Services Joseph A. Zannini said.

The campus will be closed to the general public during the evenings, Friday, Oct. 28 — through Sunday, Oct. 30, Zannini said, and some guidelines have been set with regards to the residence halls.

These policies will allow dormitories to be open only to residents and University students invited and registered as guests. Each resident may have two guests, who must present valid student I.D.s.

Another University safety precaution will be to close the Campus Center/Student Union complex at 7 p.m. on Saturday, Oct. 29, and 6 p.m. on Sunday, Oct. 30.

"We will be taking steps to maintain the security process at the Campus Center as well," Zannini said. "Last year it was closed the whole weekend, but this year we're keeping it open Friday night."

However, Michael Reilly of the Campus Center Board of Governors said the Campus Center probably will not become the campus focal point Halloween weekend.

"The Governor's Program Council and the Board of Governors are looking into scheduling something Friday night," Reilly said, such as a costume party in the Blue Wall. "But most things will be going on in the individual dorms and residence halls."

Zannini said he hopes the individual dorms will be encouraged to plan their own activities to spark some interest and excitement among the students.

He added that many students went home last year because "they felt the campus would be dead."

"We want everybody to have a good time," he said, "but we're also concerned about safety."

Zannini recalled the Tylenol incident of last year, saying it brought on a sort of general paranoia and tenseness about Halloween.

"Unfortunately, we live in a society where assault and attack are much too prevalent," he said. "Some people feel they can take license on Halloween because their identity is masked."

In addition to the 24-hour security in effect throughout the residence hall system, the campus itself will be taking extra precautions.

Associate director of the UMass Department of Public Safety, Philip Cavanaugh, said of an increase in campus security, "UMass will be responsive to the needs of the community. At this time we will probably go with extra foot patrol as we have in the past."

"That worked out well last year," he said. "Some of the students approached the patrolmen and expressed appreciation for the extra security."

Similar measures have been in effect during Halloween weekend since 1980 after a record turnout of celebrants damaged the Campus Center in 1979.

Duffey may freeze SGA funds if constitution deadline not met

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey threatened Friday to freeze all Student Government Association operations accounts for next semester if timetables are not met for submitting the SGA Constitution to the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees for approval.

In a memo addressed to SGA co-Presidents Tom Ahern and Charlene Allen, Duffey complained that students were dragging their feet in revising the Constitution for Trustee approval, adding that "a constitution that is supported by both student representatives and campus administrators will provide strength and integrity to the goals and procedures of the SGA."

Duffey requested that students have a draft of the Constitution ready to present to the Undergraduate Student Senate by Oct. 28, and have the draft approved by the Area Governments and the Senate, and presented to his office 30 days after that.

Ahern said yesterday that a task force worked on the revisions through the summer, but since the semester started, "we fell behind."

Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan, who is also chair of the task force on constitutional revisions, said the members of the task force, mostly SGA officers, have been "extremely busy" this semester.

"It's hard to get people together," Sullivan said. He said he plans to finish the revisions, "but I'm not rearranging my schedule to fit Mr. Duffey's."

Although the SGA has operated under its present charter for several years, Duffey said in his memo that "the Constitution must be recognized by the University so that the SGA can achieve formal recognition as a governance unit for students."

Students sent the present Constitution to Vice Chancellor Dennis L. Madson in June, after Duffey had requested that a "working group of students and staff," be formed to revise the charter to "define the relationship between students and the administration in personnel and financial matters."

After reviewing the present document, Madson recommended that "details...should be removed from the body of the constitution and submitted as bylaws rather than included in the constitution itself," so that the constitution could have more "flexibility." He also recommended changes in all constitutional articles and some of the language of the constitution.

The task force still has to review the last three articles of the Constitution, but Ahern said the real obstacle to meeting Duffey's deadline is getting the revised draft approved by four of the seven area governments, which "have always had problems with the Senate."

SGA Treasurer Eric Nitzsche said Duffey will probably freeze all salaries and operations monies for senate committees, the SGA President's, Treasurer's and Speaker's offices, the University Judiciary, and the campaign fund for the SGA Presidential elections, if the draft is not turned in on time.

Senate officers met with Duffey early in the semester, but Sullivan said Duffey gave no indication of his seriousness about the issue.

"Chancellor Duffey seems to be so busy that he can't tell students about his tuition increase, but he seems to have enough time to tell us he'll freeze our funds," Sullivan said.

EWC buys telecommunications device

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

A portable telecommunications device, (TTY) was recently purchased for the Everywoman's Center at the University of Massachusetts to increase accessibility for those with hearing and/or speech impairments, through a grant from Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey.

"With the new TTY, we are able to reach and offer services to more women in the area," said Aquila Ayana, public relations and outreach coordinator for the Everywoman's Center. "However, right now it is too early to tell just how popular the TTY will be," she said.

When someone using a TTY calls in, a signal goes off on a similar TTY screen hooked up to a phone at the Everywoman's Center. Messages that appear on the screen are then typed back and forth, enabling the two parties to converse.

The TTY at the center also has a computer print-out device, Ayana, said. "This enables us to keep records of both parties' conversation," she said.

"Our workers at the Center have been trained to use the TTY by two staff members from the Office of Handicapped Student Affairs at UMass.," Ayana said.

Chancellor Duffy allocated a $600 grant for the purchase of the machine. It was installed this summer and began operating on October 1, Ayana said.

"The Center offers services to the UMass campus as well as the surrounding community, Ayana said. We help women who are not reached by traditional human services."

The TTY is portable, meaning it can be brought from room to room if necessary, Ayana said. This will be beneficial to people with handicaps who may have difficulty in reaching the second floor of Wilder Hall where the Center is located. There are no ramps leading to the second floor.

Services are available to the hearing impaired on weekdays from 9 a.m. - 4 p.m., except on Wednesdays when the hours are noon until 7 p.m.

The 24-hour crisis line for victims of violence will only be offered during office hours for those using the TTY, Ayana said. 'We hope that some time in the future we will be able to offer this service 24-hours for the deaf, Ayana said. Right now we are doing all that we can. With the new TTY, it is much more than we have done in the past."

Iraq jetfighter delivery feared

PARIS (AP)-The reported delivery of five Super-Endard jetfighters to Iraq, still unconfirmed by the French government, has raised fears that Iran's threatened retaliation will widen the 3-year-old Persian Gulf war and perhaps provoke U.S. intervention.

But oil analysts say that even if Iran carries out its threat to block the strategic Hormuz Strait and close the gulf to petroleum exports, it will not cause an immediate crisis in world oil supplies.

The Super-Etendards launch surface-skimming Exocet missiles, which proved deadly when Argentina used them against Britain in last year's Falkland Islands war. Iraq has purchased an undisclosed number of the French-built Exocets.

Diplomats say Iraq, its morale sinking after three years of war and its treasury empty, wants the planes and missiles to attack Iran's Kharg Island oil terminal in the gulf, cut Iranian oil revenue and gain the advantage in the conflict, which remains deadlocked.

"The French government, and all those who have an eye on the gulf's oil and depend on it, should know that not a single drop of oil will leave the gulf should any weapon or other means be introduced in the area that threatens Iranian oil production and exports," Iran President Ali Seyed Khamenei has said.

French sources said the Super-Etendards were delivered to an airfield outside Baghdad over the weekend. The French government has refused to confirm it.

Despite reported pleas by other Western nations to delay or scrap the plane sales, France has said it would proceed with them. France has long had a good relationship with Irag, which supplies the most oil to the French market. Irag is a major customer of French weapons, military vehicles and planes.

CARDINAL CONVERSATION — An unidentified cardinal and former president Richard Nixon exchange pleasantries at Cardinal Terrance Cookes funeral Sunday.

Acid rain legislation pending

WASHINGTON (AP) — With no recommendations yet from either the Reagan administration or the nation's governors, Congress appears increasingly likely to adjourn for the year without acting on acid rain legislation.

But both the administration and the National Governors' Association are close to recommending proposals that call for reductions in sulfur dioxide emissions, coupled with funding mechanisms to pay for the anti-pollution efforts.

Speaking Monday to a meeting of Midwestern governors, Environmental Protection Agency Administrator William Ruckelshaus said it won't be long before the Reagan administration unveils its acid rain control policy.

Ruckelshaus said any solution must be national in scope and must include a fair way to pay for cutting pollution.

Late last week, a Ruckelshaus deputy, Fitzhugh Green, told a meeting in Quebec that the Reagan plan would be "evolutionary and flexible." But Green said a Cabinet Council has not made its recommendations yet to the president.

"Much as I would like to give you a sneak preview of our decision, I cannot. We haven't made it," Green said Thursday at a meeting of the Great Lakes Commission.

But Green confirmed reports that one proposal backed by Ruckelshaus was opposed as too costly by officials of the Office of Management and Budget and the Energy Department.

Also last week, the acid rain task force of the National Governors' Association adopted a statement calling for "significant" reductions in sulfur dioxide emissions. But the governors backed away from a stronger recommendation seeking a 10-million-ton cut in those emissions.

Watt victim of "double standard"

TOLEDO, Ohio (AP) - Secretary of the Interior James Watt resigned Sunday as a result of his controversial reference to a coal policy advisory panel as "a black, a woman, two jews and a cripple."

Watt cited "an end to his usefulness" as the reason for ending his 2 ½ year tenue on President Reagan's cabinet. Reagan "reluctantly accepted the resignation," according to a White House release.

Watt had to resign partly because he was a victim of unfair treatment by the media, the Rev. Jerry Falwell said Monday.

Falwell, in Toledo to address a group of Baptist ministers, said Watt's resignation was inevitable because of a backlash over a statement in which Watt described the makeup of a coal advisory commission as "a black .... a woman, two jews and a cripple."

"I'm very saddened by the resignation. He made a mistake as many of us do," the conservative gospel preacher who founded the Moral Majority said. "There was no way around doing what he did do, and that was resign.

"I must say that the national media imposed a double standard upon him," Falwell said. "I seriously doubt if Senator Edward Kennedy or any person of a liberal persuasion had said something of that order that the national media would have beaten their brains out."

Speaking of Kennedy, D-Mass., Falwell said he thought the senator's address last week to the Falwell-founded Liberty Baptist College in Lynchburg, Va., was well-received.

Musicians play new computer

ROCHESTER, N.Y. - The latest computer software can manipulate binary numbers into any sound from the clash of a cymbal to a violin rubato, and many composers are grappling with how to make good use of their new tools.

"It's as if somebody just discovered that a vibrating string made sound," said Don Buchla of Berkeley, Calif., a composer who has made computer instruments since the 1960s.

Buchla was interviewed at the four-day, 1983 International Computer Music Conference, which ended Monday at the University of Rochester's Eastman School of Music.

Computer music has existed since the late 1950s, when Max Matthews invented an "acoustic compiler" at Bell Laboratories in Murray Hill, N.J. Composers have a far greater range of techniques from which to choose now, but several conferees questioned how many people combine the computer wizardry and musical ear to use them well.

Patrolman caught during bookie raid

PITTSFIELD, Mass. (AP) - Pittsfield police have arrested a 15-year veteran of the city police force and his wife on charges of running a bookie operation out of their home.

Police Chief Stanley Stankiewicz said William J. Zoito, 40, a Pittsfield patrolman, and his wife, Katharyn, 38, a nurse at the Berkshire Medical Center, were arrested Sunday afternoon on charges of taking bets over the telephone and maintaining a betting parlor.

Pittsfield postman Frank J. Grande, 50, also was arrested in the raid on Zoito's home. He was charged with taking bets over the telephone, Stankiewicz said Monday.

The three were released on their own recognizance pending arraignment Tuesday in District Court.

"He sold his badge," said Stankiewicz, who led the raid and made the arrests.

Airplane missing, four men slaying

SHERMAN,Texas (AP) - A sheriff said Mon' , he will hypnotize a widow to see if she can remember the name of the man who may have killed her husband and three others after arranging a meeting to discuss buying an ultralight airplane.

The bodies of B&B Ranch owner and Denison building contractor Bob Tate, 51; Grayson County sheriff's deputy Philip Good, 29; and Sherman painting contractor Jerry Brown, 51, were found Saturday night covered by a carpet in a hangar at the North Texas ranch. Each had been shot twice in the head.

The body of Ronald Mayes, a 37-year-old former Sherman police officer who worked at a meat-packing plant, had been dragged almost nine feet and was lying in a pool of blood against a side door, authorities said. He had been shot five times.

Relatives said a colorful, one-seat ultralight airplane - marked prominently with Tate's initials - was missing from the hangar. They told authorities that three of the men had gone to the hangar to meet another man who was interested in buying a plane.

But Sheriff Jack Driscoll said authorities still were receiving conflicting information about how many planes were supposed to be in the hangar, which had room for three.

Ultralight airplanes are powered by a two-stroke engine and can fly up to 200 miles on a five-gallon tank of fuel, said David Dutson, spokesman for Rotec Engineering Inc. in Duncanville, an ultralight manufacturer.

Nationwide search for provost is on

By JILL LANG Collegian Staff

A committee seeking to fill the position of "provost and vice chancellor for academic affairs" held a preliminary organizational meeting at the University of Massachusetts Friday.

The position was formally vacated by Loren Baritz last June, and has since been filled, in an acting capacity, first by Dean Alfange, and now by Samuel N. Conti. Conti will remain acting provost until the committee finds a permanent replacement.

A nationwide search initiated last year when Baritz announced his resignation, culminated this summer with interviews and recommendations to the chancellor. By the time a final selection was made, however, the candidate had already accepted a job at the University of Tenessee. Early last month, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey announced the search would be reopened.

Duffey said the committee will start advertising the position right away.

"This search will not be limited to the applications we receive from our advertising," Duffey said. "We will also be seeking people we see as qualified for the post."

The provost, a position established at U. Mass in the mid-1950's, is chief academic advisor and internal administrative leader. The primary responsibility of the provost is the supervision of the quality of the faculty and academic programs on campus.

"This will be an active, not a passive search," said Jim Leheny, special assisstant to the chancellor.

Duffey said the committee discussed changes in the content of the advertisement. Leheny added it is important for the committee to be as specific as possible.

"A small ad change can take up to 30 minutes of discussion," Leheny said.

He added the committee is working on past experience, learning things from last year's search.

"One qualification we have added is practical, working experience with a budget," Leheny said.

The committee has added two new members, Walker Gibson, professor of English, and Ed Westhead, professor of biochemistry.

Other members of the committee are: Haim Gunner, professor of environmental science; Sara Cramer Ives, professor of Political science; Jim John, Dean of English; Rudine Sims from the school of education; Richard Stein, professor of chemistry, and Lauren Bertsch, a representative of the student body.

Cheryl Walsh, assistant to the director/coordinator of special events, said there is a position on the committee for a student from the graduate student senate.

"But we are still seeking a name," Walsh said.

"We will move as well as we can, in order to do a careful job," Duffey said. "But it is far too early to set any dates."

Select Board okays transit extension

By JULIA MAYCOCK
Collegian Correspondence

Today a one and a half mile extension of the public transit service provided to the Cushman area of town will reach the Mill Hollow Apartments.

Last Monday, the Amherst Select Board endorsed an article for the Oct. 24 Town Meeting which would authorize the board to accept private donations to extend the route on a one-year trial basis. The Select Board said that the town has no obligation to continue the bus service after the testing period.

If the article is approved by a two-thirds vote at the Town Meeting, a gift of $3,446 from Realtor Dennison H. Jones, owner of the Mill Hollow Apartments which house approximately 100 University of Massachusetts students, to subsidize the town-funded transit system will be accepted.

However, Don Machon, a representative of D.H. Jones Realty, said that Jones saw an immediate need for the service. Machon requested that the Finance Committee appropriate enough money to implement the service before the gift of $3,446 was voted on at the Town Meeting.

On Oct. 3, Joan Golowich, chairman of the finance committee, said the committee would allocate the $207 necessary to begin the extension today. The money will come out of Amherst's reserve fund, Chairman of the Select Board Edith Wilkinson said.

Wilkinson said if the Town Meeting article is approved, Jones will reimburse the town since the one-year trial period will begin today. Bill Barrett, director of transportation at UMass, told the Select Board that the PVTA would give verbal permission to implement the extension for the three weeks prior to the Town Meeting if the finance committee appropriated the funds, Wilkinson said.

The extension will add at least three stops and lengthen the 20-minute trip by about ten minutes, Barrett said. But the extension will not inconvenience existing Cushman riders because the route will be reversed so that no time is added on, he said.

The route will begin northbound on North Pleasant Street, continue north on Route 63 past the Mountain Farms Mall, turn right onto Summer Street and go through the Mill Hollow area before it continues eastbound onto Sand Hill Road, Barrett said.

From there, the bus will go down Pine Street into the Cushman area and turn around to go up East Pleasant Street onto the UMass campus, he said.

Debaters tackle hazardous waste disposal

Ly LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

Star Muir, director of the University of Massachusetts Debate Program and a member of the communication studies faculty, said she believes debate is a sport, and at its simplest level, argument.

"Our goal is to, one, get the information out to the public to see both sides of an issue and two, to train members to analyze critically, speak effectively, organize thoughts and improve in persuasion," Muir said.

The public debate program is designed to bring current controversial issues to the attention of the general public, Muir said. This year's topics concern "Controlling hazardous waste," "U.S. intervention in Central America," "A second term for Ronald Reagan,?" "Water diversion and the Quabbin," and "Federal Funding for the Olympics."

"We have debates on and off campus," Muir said. "Pamphlets are sent out announcing the selected topics for the year. Debates are then scheduled and held at high schools, different organizations, classes and for other interested groups. We hold any where between 20-25 public debates a year and about 14-15 competitive," she explained.

The Debate Program is divided into two parts to further the education of UMass students, high school students and the general public, Muir said.

The Intercollegiate Competitive Debate (tournament debate) involves a qualified, trained, selected team of UMass students who compete at tournaments with other debate teams from universities throughout the country, Muir said.

"We presently rate in the top 16 schools in the country," she said.

"One major issue is focused on throughout the entire year. This year's topic for tournament debate concerns the disposal of hazardous waste which is any and all injury resulting from hazardous waste in the U.S. should be the legal responsibility of the producer of that waste," Muir said.

Muir said 1982-83 was the best year yet for the team.

"We won the National Novice Debate Championships (first year debators) and last year was our 11th consecutive year in the National Debate Tournament (only qualified, selected schools may participate)," she said.

Police seek unknown 'flasher'

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts police received a report of indecent exposure at 12:37 p.m. Saturday from two female students in Bartlett Hall.

According to the complaints, an unknown white male with dark brown hair, a receding hairline and a full beard and mustache, was observed masturbating in the lobby of Bartlett Hall, clad only in green jogging shorts. The complaintants fled the scene and went directly to police. The case is under investigation.

In other police action:

UMass police arrested Eric D. Kenyon, 19, of Easthampton, at 3:34 a.m. Sunday and charged him with operating after his license had been revoked September 25. Police said they observed Kenyon traveling west on Massachusetts Ave. when he failed to stop for a red flashing light. When stopped, it was discovered that Kenyon was operating with an invalid license and was in possession of a Remington .22 rifle, police said. Kenyon was also issued a trespassing warrant.

In an alcohol-related incident of malicious damage, UMass police arrested Keith I. Johnston, 19, of Toronto, Canada at 3:13 a.m. Monday. Johnston was charged with breaking two 5'x5' plate glass lounge windows in Dickenson dormitory. Johnston, whose blood was found on both windows, was apprehended on the south side of Field dormitory, according to police, and was taken to UMI. Police then transported him to Cooley-Dickenson Hospital for further treatment and then escorted to police headquarters placed him in custody. Kenyon is expected to be arraigned today.

Johnathon E.Karlsen, 21, of London, England, was arrested shortly before 1 a.m. Saturday by UMass police. Karlsen, an Amherst College student, was charged with an expired license, failing to stop for a red light, and stop sign and speeding, according to police. Karlsen was observed traveling at a high rate of speed on Massachusetts Ave. When he was stopped by police.

Pizzas and warming bags worth $74.26 were reported stolen in two separate incidents Friday at 2:20 and 3:03 a.m. from residents in MacKimmie dormitory, according to police. The first incident involved the theft of three pizzas and a warming bag, according to the first delivery person, who reported two males demanded that she hand over the pizzas. According to the report, the first complaintant was then grabbed by one of the male suspects and the second suspect was able to take the pizzas. In an apparently related incident, a male delivery person was also approached by two males, believed to be the same two involved in the first theft, police said. The male delivery person was also grabbed and held while his pizza and bag were stolen, according to the complaintant . The case is open and pending court action.

'Suspicious' fire in Crampton dorm

A fire of "definitely suspicious" origin in Crampton dormitory caused a building evacuation at 9:21 p.m. Saturday, University of Massachusetts fire prevention officer Keith Hoyle reported.

The fire, which originated in a second floor trash room, was discovered by resident assistant Yvette Henry, who was conducting a routine security check, Hoyle said. Four engines and a squad apparatus were dispatched to the site and fire fighters put out the fire using a dormitory fire extinguisher, he said.

The fire is the fourth in the dormitory this semester, all of which have originated in trash rooms and may be related, Hoyle said.

Saturday's fire, which may have been caused by a cigarette or lit match, caused smoke damage to the trash room and is under investigation, he said.

PLANS REST — Dutch professor E.M. Beekman talks of his work and future plans.

Literature of colonial Indonesia printed

By JOHN YOUNCE
Collegian Correspondant

The University of Massachusetts Press recently published the eighth in a twelve volume Library of the Indies, under the general editorship of UMass Professor of Germanic languages and literatures.

The book, Two Tales of the East Indies, contains two novels - The Last House in the World by Bob Vuyck, and The Counselor by H.J. Friedericy. The book is part of a series that contains translations of some of the literature that was created during the Dutch occupation of the Indies in the 17th century. The series is being edited by UMass Professor E. M. Beekman of the Germanic Languages and Literatures department.

Beekman has done research on the stories since 1979 and said he is not working on the series only for the obvious historical value, but also because of its rich literary value.

"It's an exotic subject - it's a world that's gone by," he said.

The American government could have learned a lot about South Vietnam by studying the literature of colonial Indonesia, Beekman said.

"Anyone could have learned about the pyschology of a liberation force," he said, noting the hatred for Europeans and westerners that developed in the Indies is similar to that in Vietnam.

Beekman, the only Dutch teacher on the Eastern seaboard, said he became interested in the Indies in his teens because his father worked in Indonesia for 25 years. He is particularly interested in the Dutch colonial period of the Indies, he said, because "whether pro or con you can't dismiss three and a half centuries of history," referring to the Dutch occupation of Indonesia.

The series, of which the ninth volume will be published next spring, has a few firsts associated with it, Beekman said.

It is the first time the National Endowment for the Humanities has sponsored a grant in conjuction with a European government, the first time the Library of Congress has had anything to do with a Dutch subject, and the first time most of the books have been translated, he said.

Plans to take a rest for a while. After completing the series, Beekman said he: However he does have a novel "in his head," with material from the Indies, which he may begin work on soon.

Beekman has been teaching at UMass since 1968. Born in Amsterdam in 1939, he received his Bachelors degree from Berkley, and his Phd. at Havard.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Abortion — whose right to life is it?

Miriam Zoll

One of my best friends didn't come back to school this year. She's the kind of person who likes to travel and never settle down, so I just figured she had taken some time off to make some money and travel around.

Well, I was wrong. She didn't drop out of UMass so she could travel.

She dropped out because she got pregnant.

I knew right away that she'd have the kid without even considering abortion as an alternative. Her pregnancy was definitely unplanned and unwanted, but that didn't make a bit of difference to my friend.

You see, she grew up in a very Catholic family. Her house is decorated with pictures of Jesus, and "Jesus loves you" plaques. My friend believes very strongly in her religion and its doctrines, and she believes that birth-control and abortion are both wrong. According to my friend, she got pregnant because "God willed her" to get pregnant, not because she and her partner neglected to use contraception.

Maybe my friend was trying to rationalize her pregnancy by saying "God willed it." I don't know. What I do know is that because she was taught that using birth-control is wrong, her life will never be the same, and it probably won't be easy.

My friend is only 20 years old. She doesn't have a college degree and she is a single mother — that's two strikes against her if she wants to find a job. She says she wants to start taking night classes at the local community college but she can't do that until the baby gets bigger and she can find a job to pay for school.

Right now my friend and her two-month-old son are living at her parents' house in her hometown. Her life revolves around the baby and she says she doesn't have much time for herself. She's lucky that her mother is around to help take care of the baby now, but I often wonder what's going to happen later on.

My friend talks about having her own place soon but I don't know how she's going to afford to move out on her own and pay for baby clothes, diapers and toys, in addition to rent, food and heating costs. I don't know if my friend will be able to find a decent paying job with flexible hours that will allow her to pay for a babysitter when she goes back to school.

I'm worried about my friend.

Every year since 1969, over 100,000 women and children fall below the poverty level in the United States. Sociologists refer to this phenomenon as "the feminization of poverty," and they estimate that by the year 2000, the "poverty population" will be comprised solely of women and children. With poverty predictions like the "feminization of poverty," it's hard for me to think optimistically about my friends' future.

She could have escaped all these problems she's facing as a single parent. The baby's father wanted to marry her but my friend said no. She didn't love him after all, and she felt that a marriage based around an unplanned pregnancy would cause a divorce sooner than it would make a good marriage. I'm proud of my friend for not getting married and, "taking the easy way out," as a friend of ours said, but sometimes I find myself disappointed in her too.

When I think about it though, I shouldn't be disappointed in my friend but in her religions' values and attitudes toward sexuality, contraception and abortion. My friends' church proclaims that the only birth-control method women can use is the rythym method. This natural form of birth-control is notorious for its high failure rate, and it is one of the least effective birth-control methods available to women today.

My friends' church says that chastity and the rythym method are the best ways to avoid teenage pregnancy or unwanted pregnancy. But there are many Catholics who disagree with the church because they realize that sex education is the best way to combat these problems. I know a lot of Catholic women who are religious and go to church even though they have pre-marital sex and use modern forms of birth-control.

I wish my friend had thought that birth-control was okay, because maybe then she'd still be at UMass, or traveling around like she always used to do.

Not average believe it!

Brooke States

There has been a lot of talk lately about the "average student." The "average student" wants this, the average student feels unrepresented by student government, the "average student" wants that...ad nauseum. What's all this fuss about the average student.

The 1982-83 fact book of the University of Massachusetts shows 24,949 undergraduates, Stockbridge, and graduate students in the fall of 1982. (All statistics are '82 fall unless otherwise noted.) The unit with the largest headcount out of 11 colleges, schools, or faculty, is the College of Arts and Sciences. There were 4,655 students in it. The estimated ethnic origin figures, (reporting ethnic status is voluntary for individuals) shows 437 Blacks, Non-Hispanic students. There are 38 students age 65 and over. There are 3,672 undergraduates aged 22-25. 821 foreign students go here, as do 2,629 undergraduates who are out of state. 131 freshmen and 58 freshmen transfers are from Cape Cod. There are 350 graduate students who are vets. (Got two categories in one with that.) 350 students are enrolled in the Bilingual Collegiate Program. 16,947 students applied for financial aid, 13,561 were dependent on their parents. (Hold on almost done.) 67.4 of these parents whose spouses were dependent, earned under $29,999. 22.6 of parents whose dependent children wanted financial aid, earned under $15,000. In 1982 48.2 of all UMass degrees went to women.

By this time those of you who are reading this are probably saying so what? Others may think this looks like James Watt, take two. The point is that there is little to call average about UMass students. We come from everywhere and have many different value systems. The only thing that might be average in terms of experience, is eating at the Coffee Shop or Hatch at least once in four years, and having a screw-up with the dark side of the force. (OSCAR)

Several budding new student politicos have launched attacks on the student government, claiming it does not represent the "average student." Presumably these people and others claim to represent this mythical creature, "the average student." They can then become the average leaders of these "average students." Perhaps we will then only have average events to which these average students will go and have an average time.

Well lets look at the groups cited earlier in this column and play God. How about cutting out programs for Blacks. According to the statistics they don't seem too big a group. What the hell, theres only 927 veterans on campus, let's chop off money for them. Handicapped students, only 400 of them? Sell those vans. Maybe we could get our "average students" to get their future average student leaders to get the administration to chop off financial aid to those whose parents make under 15,000. I mean, that's not that big a group, hell, it's under half. All those programs that are for women. cut them out. They only got 48.2.

This is where the thinking on the "average student" will get you if you are not careful. Many other people have various views on the "average student." Many people think that the average UMass student is a drunk who lives at the Pub, or some other establishment. The Harvard Crimson thinks we are all in agriculture. We see adds by everybody from the Navy to Sominex, telling us how we should be, as "average students."

There are problems with student government. It could do a better job, and criticism should not be stifled. But the next time somebody comes running around talking about "the average student," and what he or she needs, ask them who they are and what narrow political viewpoint they represent. Remember "the parting on the left is now a parting on the right," "Meet the new boss, same as the old boss," or that golden oldie "The song remains the same."

Senior Day's "official" response

To the Editors,

After reading your recent editorial entitled "Senior Day Hijinx," it became apparent that there is still a great deal of confusion among members of the Collegian staff, and of the student body, as to what actually happened last May with Senior day '83. It would seem as if the editors who wrote the editorial in question did not fully understand what was involved in this event, or who was responsible for its completion. Apparently, it was assumed that the SAO Office was expected to help fund the project, this is a complete falsehood. Also, there was some question raised as to the location of the funds raised by advanced ticket sales to sponsor the event. The editors imply that such funds may have "disappeared" into "some trust fund." This is also a gross misinterpretation of the truth. Due to this confusion, I believe it is necessary to finally clear up the mystery that has been created around Senior Day.

First, I would like to attempt to clarify why the event was cancelled in the first place. It would seem that many people felt it may have been possible to either relocate the festivities or to carry on without the band. Both these alternatives would have been impossible. Relocation would have required the procurement of a liquor license for another location. Essentially, when one purchases such a license s/he must specify the exact place, time and date that the event is to occur. This license cannot be transferred to another location without violating the law. Also, the Southwest fields was the only available location for Senior Day, due to concerns voiced by the administration, various students and several departments over several proposed alternate locations such as Metawampee Lawn, Curry Hicks Gym, Northeast, and Alumni Stadium.

Due to the limitations upon the committee as to choice of location, the event of rain necessitated the cancellation of Senior Day. For obvious reasons, the band refused to set up their electrical equipment in the rain. Also, due to the muddy condition of the field, the beer suppliers could not drive their delivery trucks onto the field. Therefore, if we had decided to go ahead with the event it would have lacked music and beer, not worth sitting out in the rain for.

As far as the questions concerning the location of the funds, this can be cleared up simply. In fact, this entire mix-up could have been avoided if the editors had attempted to complete an adequate inquiry into the matter before making such wild speculations. The total revenue from advertising ticket sales was $7,292. The vast majority of this amount was spent on non-refundable services leaving a grand total of $62.00 in the account for next year. These non-refundable expenses include such items as: the mugs ($4,291), talent ($500 — publicity included), t-shirts, flyers, correspondence to the senior class, advertising in the Collegian ($1,300), and other such expenses as set-up, security, etc.

The money that was not spent as a result of the cancellation includes beer ($2,833), sound ($675), soda, toilets, etc. This was not a savings to the Senior Day account. Because the revenue meant to cover these expenses was to come from other sources than the advanced ticket sales. The Commencement Trust Fund agreed to allocate $3,000, but this was not necessary due to the cancellation. This amount, along with ticket sales on the day of the event were to cover the expenses that would have been incurred if Senior Day were to happen. Since it not, the revenue collected through advanced ticket sales was used to pay all non-refundable expenses, and the refundable expenses (such as the beer) which were to be paid from the above-mentioned sources, never became a savings to the Senior Day account. Therefore, there is no more than $62.00 remaining in this account which will be used to sponsor next year's Senior Day, if there is one.

As most students may be aware, the presence of alcohol at many events here at the University is in violation of the present alcohol policy. However, the administration has always given its consent to Senior Day even though it is characterized by the abundance of alcohol. Given the current criticisms and concerns voiced by some uninformed individuals, there has been an unnecessary amount of publicity given to the event. It is possible that the event may be proven, in retrospect, to cause all to much trouble for its anticipated benefits. What the editors do not seem to understand is that by jumping to conclusions they may be jeopardizing the possibility of Senior Day happening in the future. In this case, it is the entire Senior class that suffers from the behavior of a few.

Senior Day Committee
Lisa Potter, Chair

Editors note: It was not our intention to "blame" cancellation of Senior Day, and the subsequent activities of "Class of '83 Day" on anyone. The editorial served its purpose, which was to let students see a full explanation of the activities constituting the event and an account of the student monies spent on them.

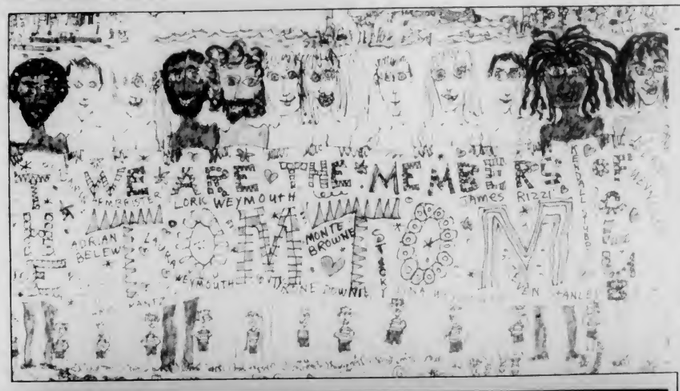
Tar hardens the heart

TAR
By C.K. Williams
Vintage, 65 pp., $5.95

By COUNT RAMIN ZAHED
Collegian Correspondent

It is a fine line which divides the two realms of poetry and prose. C.K. Williams certainly walks that thin line. His recent collection of poems, Tar, is a somber reflection of contemporary life.

The only stylistic elements which stands out in all of his poems is the use of long sentences. One can easily connect the verses and obtain a dry narrative in prose. However, the poet chooses this style to transfer a feeling of monotony and coldness. He certainly succeeds; but, is it really poetry?



The poem "Tar" refers to the 1979 accident at the Three Mile Island nuclear power plant. The whole poem is anything but original. The ending lines could very well be the beginning of a solemn news article: By nightfall kids had come across them: Every sidewalk on the block was scribbled with obscenities and hearts.

Two of the more solid poems are "My Mother's Lips" and "The Gas Station." In both poems, there exists a certain longing for an innocent yesterday. Williams recalls how close he once was to his mother and how time changes this union. I've just grown to her height or just past it: There are our lips moving together, now the unison suddenly breaks, I have to go on by myself no maestro, no score to follow.

The selection goes on to cover various other run of the mill subjects: selfish love, learning of a friend's illness, etc.

The book ends with a very mystical and lengthy poem entitled "One of the Muses." Reminiscent of Fowles' "Mantissa," this poem is a vague reference to creativity. It is basically above the mentality of the reviewer. One can only go back to one of his earlier poems for relief. In "The Gas Station," he speaks of a certain innocence and lack of intellectual jargon that touches the reader more than any of his other works. HOW PURE WE WERE THEN, BEFORE RIMBAUD, BEFORE BLAKE. GRACE. LOVE. TAKE CARE OF US. PLEASE.

One may enjoy Tar as a whole for it has certain glimpses of modern life. However, the poet's style leaves the reader cold, unaffected and rather longing for something more from the heart.

Always look at the bright side of life

By NEAL O'SHEA
Collegian Correspondent

Do you like to have fun? Do you like to dance and not worry about life too much? Then step in line with Close To The Bone, the new album from the Tom Tom Club. Blending reggae, funk, and their own brand of progressive rock, the Tom Tom Club sing about being famous, being happily married, and basically having a good life.

Famous? The basis of the Club is half of Talking Heads (bassist Tina Weymouth and drummer Chris Frantz) along with some friends (part of the current Talking Heads tour band) and a few relatives (Tina Weymouth's three sisters). The marriage is between Tina Weymouth and Chris Frantz and the happiness comes naturally.

Close To The Bone, their second LP, is a very fun, danceable album. "Bamboo Town" and "Never Took a Penny" are two strong reggae sounding songs that cannot help but make you get up and dance. "Pleasure of Love" and "Atsababy (Life is Great)" explore the private side of Weymouth's and Frantz's marriage and how becoming famous through Talking Heads hasn't really changed their lives, only their lifestyles. The one radio-play song "The Man with Four-Way Hips," looks at the far-out realm of club dancing with some powerful sounds that bespeak the musicianship of this group.

So, if you are looking for ultra-deep meanings and depressing sides of reality, don't buy this album, because the Tom Tom Club likes to have fun and look at the good side of life.

A scene from the Rand Theater's production of The Homecoming, opening this week at the FAC.

Department of Theater opens its fall season

The University Ensemble Theater will open its 1983/84 season with a production of Harold Pinter's The Homecoming at 8 p.m., October 13-15 and 19-22 in the Rand Theater, FAC.

The play involves the "homecoming" of a college professor Teddy, and his wife Ruth, to a small North London flat after a six year absence. Teddy's return is greeted by his father Max, his uncle Sam, and his two younger brothers Lenny and Joey, with a mixture of open hostility, sentimental gush, and jealous suspicion. There are moments of riotous violence and uproar, but the play consist mostly of talk: reminiscences of the past, quarrels about the present, and revelations concerning the future.

Tickets are $3.50 for the general public and $2.50 for students and senior citizens. For reservations and other information, call the Rand Theater box office at 545-3511.

Patty Shea adjusts to the winning side of hockey

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

Imagine...University of Massachusetts field hockey goalie Patti Shea was not planning on persuing the sport after high school.

"My high school team hadn't won a game in four years," Shea said. "And I had no plans to play in college."

Shea, a senior and a starter since her freshman year, said she went out for the team for the fun of it.

"It was just a bunch of us going out there to have some fun. I figured I'd give it a shot," she said.

"Playing for UMass was a complete turnaround for me. Playing for a Division I team gives me the chance to see the other side, the winning side of field hockey. It's like a dream come true," Shea said.

The 21-year-old Belmont resident said her freshman year was a "totally different experience."

"We were the Cinderella team in the regional tournament, and the game against UConn went into double stroke offs," she said.

UMass lost the game, but Shea said, "Those things can come back to haunt you."

At the end of her freshman year, Shea hurt her back.

"It was just one of those things," she said. "In a scrimmage, I was playing a field position, and I turned the wrong way too quickly."

The injury caused Shea to make some major adjustments in her style of play. She no longer has the range of movement she used to. For example, Shea cannot reach across her body to make a stick save or a hand stop, she must switch the stick from one hand to the other.

"The adjustments I had to make may seem little, but actually they were very big," Shea said. "It was like trying to break an old habit."

Shea played her sophomore year, but her back forced here to remain inactive for eight months afterward.

"Goalie is a specialized position, and if you don't work on technique and fundamentals every day, you can lose them," Shea said.

Shea feels this is what happened to her, and she feels it affected her game throughout her junior year-the year the Minutewomen made it to the NCAA tournament, losing to Iowa in the semi-finals.

Shea was not able to begin practice until a few weeks before last (year's) preseason.

"It took all of my junior year to get it back," Shea said. "Last year I wasn't playing up to my full ability."

"Pam (Coach Hixon) didn't say much about it. I knew about the problem, and there was no need to say more."

Shea said the team has always been supportive of her.

"There's always support, both on and off the field. We're very tight as a team, and that's one thing that makes it special."

This summer Shea had an experience she said was a key in helping her win back some of her lost confidence.

"I knew if I wanted to play well my senior year, I'd have to go to camp," she said. "It was good for me. If you don't have confidence in yourself, then you won't get it from your team."

Shea attended a developmental camp this summer. She worked her way from "C" camp to "A" camp. The culmination of these camps was the Pike's Peak International tournament, which involved three United States teams, and one Canadian team.

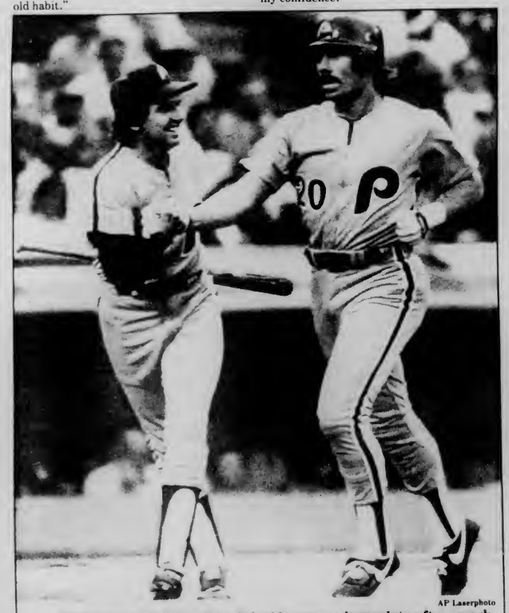
In the round robin tournament, Shea's team made it to the finals against the Canadians. Her team won and Shea said, "The tournament experience brought back my confidence."

So far this season, the Minutewomen have compiled an 8-0-1 record, and Shea has allowed only one goal.

"We have a high calibur of play, and we know it," Shea said. "We are national contenders, but we can't be thinking about that all the time. We have to play each game as if it were a national championship. We all have to give 110 percent."

Shea, one of eleven children, said she was almost afraid to go to college. She needed to find herself, she said.

"UMass was one of the best moves of my life. I'm glad I came here," Shea said. "It is worth all that I have put into it."



Shea seems to have found her niche.

Tennis downed 6-3; Host Connecticut today

By ARIEL FOWLER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team suffered a 6-3 loss as they fell to Northeastern University last Wednesday. The team played well but could not quite capture the crucial points.

"It was a good match but I felt we could have won", said UMass coach Pat Stewart. "Because of a few problems we couldn't pull off a victory."

In singles action, Lil Sullivan (1) and Ann Tauger (2) played consistently but both went down in two sets. Number three singles player Anne Marie Mackertich played with intensity but lost in a hard fought 4-6, 6-4, 1-6 battle. Diana Biagioli was nipped 3-6, 5-7.

Karen Orlowski, still undefeated with a 4-0 record, came through at number five singles with a 6-2, 6-2 victory. Karen Kranick (6) was defeated in two sets.

The number one doubles team of Maureen Hanlon and Jill Nesgos proved their persistence as they shut out their opponents 6-7, 6-3, 7-6. Marie Leary and Laura Morgan (2) lost in a painful but well played tiebreaker. Joyce Girusella and Lisa Corbett ousted their opponents with a 6-2, 6-4 win.

"They didn't make any errors and played very well," said Stewart.

The Minutewomen will take the loss in stride and continue onward as they host Connecticut Tuesday at NOPE.

"I'm definitely not disappointed with the way we played," said Berlin, one of our UMass players selected to the All-Tournament team. "We've had tough luck all season. Our record doesn't show how we've played."

With the loss to Rutgers, UMass' fifth overtime game, the record now stands at 1-5-3.

The Minutemen picked up their first win of the season with a 1-0 win over North Adams State in the semi-final round on Friday. The Mohawks, a fiesty Division III team gave a good battle, but UMass came through.

Paulo Serafino scored off of a Berlin assist at 30:33 to give Massachusetts the edge. UM outshot North Adams 15-12 and Firmage, who made three saves, made some spectacular stops in the closing minutes of the game with North Adams pressuring.

Rutgers stopped St. Josephs 2-0 in the other semi to set up the championship match. North Adams upset division I St. Josephs by beating the Philadelphia team 1-0 in a shootout.

Besides placing Berlin on the All-Tourney team, Kevin Flynn, Uschok, and Paul Serafino made the squad from Massachusetts.

The Minutemen don't take a break and face Providence at Boyden Field this afternoon at 3 p.m. The Friars will find winning here in Amherst over the Minutemen no easy task as UMass shoots for their second win.

"We believe in the players and the coaching," said Gettler. "I believe we'll do well."

Mission impossible for Minutemen

Delaware prevails

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

NEWARK, Del. - The Mission, which they had no choice but to accept, was difficult but direct.

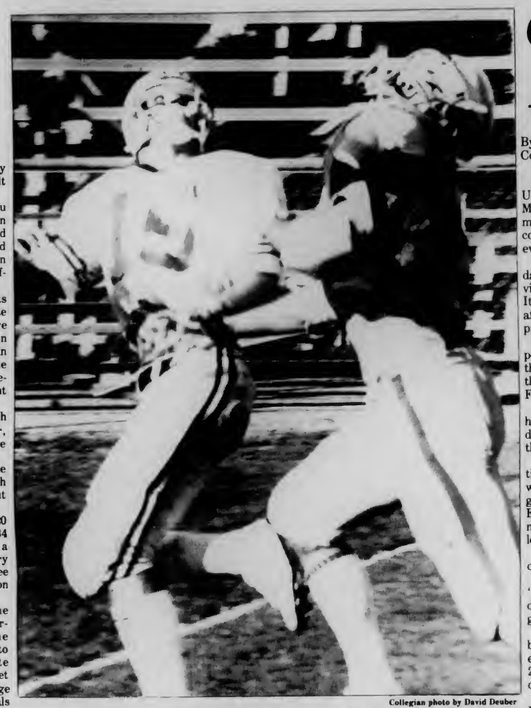
Travel to Delaware, forget that you haven't beaten this team once in the seven times you've played - forget your 1-3 record and that your a 16 point underdog - and bring an important confidence building win back to Amherst - or risk the chance of self-destruction.

Well, the University of Massachusetts football team did all they could to complete a successful Mission. But Delaware quarterback B.J. Webster, the leader of an 80 yard drive, turned victory to defeat in the last four minutes of the game and the Minutemen went back to Amherst to re-evaluate this Mission and think about upcoming assignments.

"We played reasonably well. Well enough to win," uttered Mission commander, UMass head coach Bob Pickett, "but we didn't win."

The Minutemen did play well. The defense held the Delaware offense, which averages 29 points a game, to 16 points but the last seven points proved to be fatal.

Webster started the drive on his own 20 yard line and moved the Blue Hens to the 34 yard line before delivering the big blow, a 46 yard bomb to wide receiver Gary Darienzo to the UMass 22 yard line. Three plays later he hit the winning touchdown on a seven yard pass play.



But the Minutemen did not abort the Mission at this point. Sophomore quarterback Jim Simeone moved the Minutemen from their own 22 yard line to the Delaware 31 yard line with a minute and a half remaining; looking to at least get in field goal range for barefooted George Papoutsidis, who kicked two field goals earlier.

But sophomore defensive end Gary Cannon sacked Simeone in two of the next four plays and the Minutemen were forced to hand the ball over to Delaware on the 46 yardline with 34 seconds left and ran out the clock.

The Minutemen were not without big plays themselves. Trailing 9-3, Simeone hit wide receiver Kevin Jackson on a 29 yard touchdown strike after Delaware accepted a third down penalty against UMass to try and push Papoutsidis out of field goal range.

But, the Mission failed and the Minutemen, off to the worst start since 1957, have some soul searching to do to avoid self-destruction.

"Maybe I'm totally wrong, but I still think we can salvage this season," said commander Pickett. "The kids don't seem down at this stage. They are disappointed but not down. We'll know when we start practice Tuesday how our spirits are. I'm still confident."

O.T. loss for Minutemen

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

On paper, a match between the Rutgers University and the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team is a mismatch. Rutgers is ranked 11th in the country and undefeated, while UMass isn't even ranked in New England.

However, that was not the case in Saturday's championship final of the UMass Invitational. This game was not a mismatch. It was close enough to go into over time after ninety minutes of regulation play that produced a 0-0 result.

However, Rutgers took advantage of opportunity when it came and, led along by the foot of Bobby Joe Esposito, overcame the Minutemen 3-0 in overtime at Boyden Field.

"We played pretty well," said UMass head coach Jeff Gettler. "We were dangerous in the first half and at times in the second. Rutgers had a great goal."

And it was one goal that broke up this tightly played match (Rutgers had 44 fouls while UMass had 22). With just 29 seconds gone into overtime, freshman Bobby Joe Esposito lifted a shot past goalie Jamie Firmage into the corner to give Rutgers a 1-0 lead.

The goal forced UMass to take chances on defense that cost them.

"We had to take chances," said Gettler. "We couldn't be conservative. We were down 1-0 and we wanted to win. We just got burned twice."

Esposito sped all alone down field on a breakaway down the far sideline and passed it inside to Jack Weber who scored for a 2-0 lead. The UMass defense was up on an offensive charge.

Greg Michaels scored off a pass from Esposito to make the final 3-0 margin and ice the game.

"I'm not too unhappy," reflected Gettler. "We lost to a good team. We just couldn't find the trigger."

Neither could Rutgers in regulation as both defense stood up. Peter Geddes, Tom Uschok and Firmage stood out on defense along with Steve Berlin, who seemed to be all over the field.

Volleyball places third In Connecticut tourney

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

NEW HAVEN, CT - Most teams that don't have much of a bench don't have much of a team. No depth has ruined many an athletic team.

A possible example could be the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team. They are down to seven players in a sport where six start. They lost two starters, Kirsten Smith and Lesile Smith (no relation) two weeks ago to injuries.

But no depth does not faze the Minutewomen and they have responded to play some of their best volleyball of the season.

Massachusetts travelled to the Southern Connecticut tournament this past weekend and came home with a well earned third place finish.

"They played great," said a pleased head coach Elaine Sortino. "This weekend we played great defense. We were really picking up the balls."

UMass starts an iron six consisting of Sally Maher, Joanne Siler, Patti Grant, Ann Ringrose, Ellen Deady, and Debbie Cole while Susie Grant spells relief, for the spikers.

The Minutewomen, who are ranked fifth in the Northeast in Division II with a 18-8 record, went 3-1 in pool play to advance to the semi-finals.

East Strousburg, a top division III team in the Northeast, fell in straight sets 15-9, 15-7 and then UMass toppled Central Connecticut 7-15, 15-8, 15-9.

Massachusetts met rival University of New Haven, ranked third in the Northeast, on Saturday morning and although UM was "really up for it" New Haven won 11-15, 15-8, 12-15. UMass finished pool play with a slaughter of division I Vermont, 15-5, 15-2.

The Minutewomen faced Army, ranked number one in the NE division II in the semi-finals. It was a close match but Army snuck out the win with a 14-16, 15-9, 11-15 decision. Massachusetts toppled Lowell 15-4, 15-4 for third place.

"I'm very pleased, " said Sortino, "It was our toughest tournament to date. We've finally gotten over the hump defensivily and our offense is as fine as anybodys."

Sally Maher and Siler stood out for UMass with some tremendous spikes, especially in the Lowell game.

Massachusetts will get to see how they match up to the competition with a tough slate of matches this week. They face New

Hockey stays undefeated

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team defeated the University of Maine Saturday by a 4-2 score. The win upped the Minutewomen's record to 8-0-1.

U. Mass, ranked fourth in the country, had two goals on the board within the first fifteen minutes of the game.

The first goal was scored by forward Patti Smith, who took a rebound off the pads of the Black Bear goalie, and found the net.

Forward Chris Kocot did the same less than five minutes later, when she took her own shot off the pads of the keeper and scored, to give Massachusetts a 2-0 cushion.

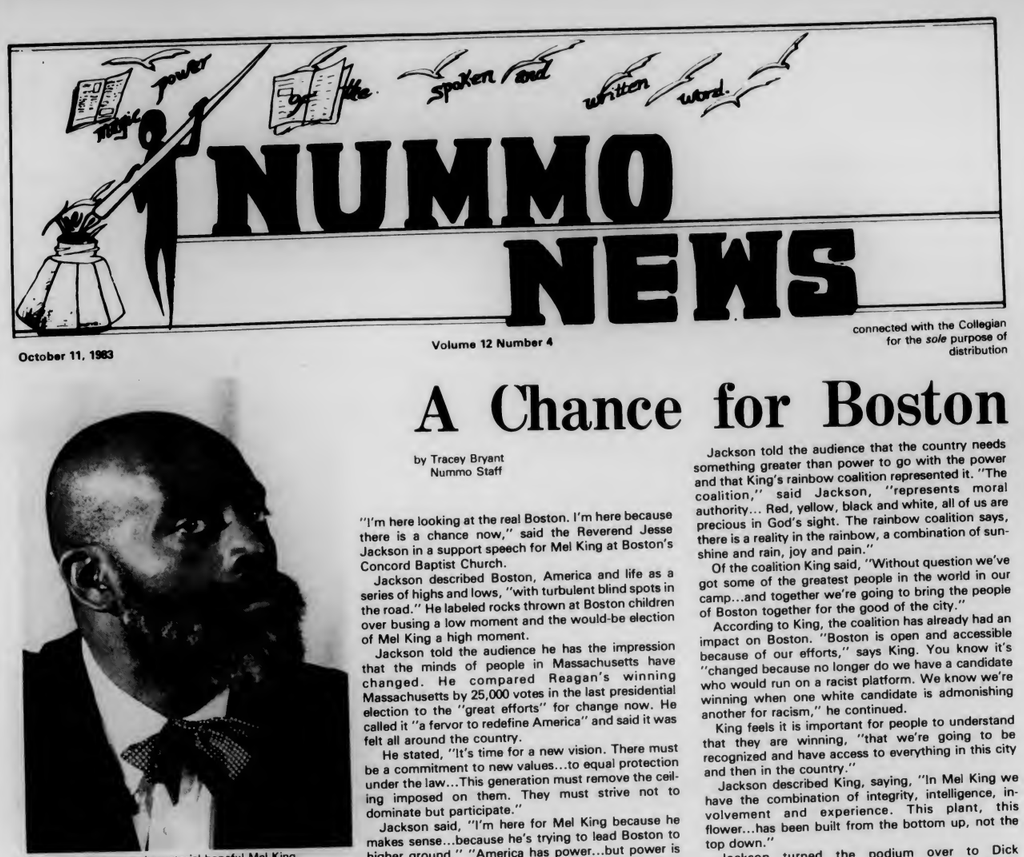
Maine made the score 2-1, on what coach U. Mass Pam Hixon called a "controversial play."

A shot was taken from the outside the circle, according to Hixon, and it went off an Maine attackers leg. There was no call, and U. Mass goalie Kathryn Rowe had to play the ball anyway. It was a tough play, but Maine had scored.

Forwards Pam Moryl and Smith added two more for the Minutewomen in the second half. Maine tallied a solitary goal in the last five minutes to make the final result 4-2.

U. Mass goalie Rowe, in her first start of the season, faced only two shots on goal from the Maine offense. Rowe replaced starter Patti Shea, who was out due to an illness.

"We had lots of corners, but none of our shots made it to the net," Hixon said.



The Minutewomen play at Northeastern this afternoon, on the turf, in Boston.

Last night, after a practice on the floor in NOPE gym, Hixon said, "We like to play on the turf, but it is also important to keep in mind that Northeastern has the potential to score. They have a very developed corner play.

"Our plan will be to keep them from having opportunities to get corners, while we create as many for ourselves as we can. After watching this practice," Hixon said, "I know we'll be able to get the ball on goal tomorrow."

A Chance for Boston

by Tracey Bryant
Nummo Staff

Massachusetts gubernatorial hopeful Mel King

"I'm here looking at the real Boston. I'm here because there is a chance now," said the Reverend Jesse Jackson in a support speech for Mel King at Boston's Concord Baptist Church.

Jackson described Boston, America and life as a series of highs and lows, "with turbulent blind spots in the road." He labeled rocks thrown at Boston children over busing a low moment and the would-be election of Mel King a high moment.

Jackson told the audience he has the impression that the minds of people in Massachusetts have changed. He compared Reagan's winning Massachusetts by 25,000 votes in the last presidential election to the "great efforts" for change now. He called it "a fervor to redefine America" and said it was felt all around the country.

He stated, "It's time for a new vision. There must be a commitment to new values...to equal protection under the law...This generation must remove the ceiling imposed on them. They must strive not to dominate but participate."

Jackson said, "I'm here for Mel King because he makes sense...because he's trying to lead Boston to higher ground." "America has power...but power is not enough. We are dangerously close to nuclear holocaust...With the largest banks in the world we have three million more people on welfare. There is more economic polarization than ever," said the Reverend.

Jackson told the audience that the country needs something greater than power to go with the power and that King's rainbow coalition represented it. "The coalition," said Jackson, "represents moral authority... Red, yellow, black and white, all of us are precious in God's sight. The rainbow coalition says, there is a reality in the rainbow, a combination of sunshine and rain, joy and pain."

Of the coalition King said, "Without question we've got some of the greatest people in the world in our camp...and together we're going to bring the people of Boston together for the good of the city."

According to King, the coalition has already had an impact on Boston. "Boston is open and accessible because of our efforts," says King. You know it's "changed because no longer do we have a candidate who would run on a racist platform. We know we're winning when one white candidate is admonishing another for racism," he continued.

King feels it is important for people to understand that they are winning, "that we're going to be recognized and have access to everything in this city and then in the country."

Jackson described King, saying, "In Mel King we have the combination of integrity, intelligence, involvement and experience. This plant, this flower...has been built from the bottom up, not the top down."

Jackson turned the podium over to Dick Gregory,who told the crowd that he didn't want to hear "moanin' and groanin' on Tuesday and prayin' when it was too late." He entreated people to vote and see that other people voted too.

Jackson said, "Back in 1965, some of you were old enough to be there and weren't. But God keeps on giving us chances. Some of you would not march on Washington in 1963. But God keeps on giving us chances. You had a chance to go to Selma in 1965, but would not go; wouldn't even show up for the funerals of those who lost their lives. But God is a merciful God...Our time has come."

"It might take all night long," said Jackson, "but for those who do not drop out, who turn to each other and not on each other, joy will come in the morning." In prayer he described Mel King as "one who has the sensitivity and courage to follow his convictions."

Mary Smalls said, "Folks been prayin' a long time to change the conditions in Boston, and the Lord looked around and chose the man he wanted to do something about it."

A Tradition of Academic Excellence

by Segun Eubanks
Nummo Reporter

(the first in a series of articles on Minority academic programs)

For 15 years the Committee for the Colegiate Education of Black and Minority Students (CCEBMS) has offered academic, tutorial and career counseling that has helped many Third World students make it through the UMass experience. CCEBMS is a University funded program designed to meet the unique academic and cultural needs of Black and minority students.

In 1968 there were mnore Black faculty on the UMass campus than Black students. Since the University was not willing to make a committment of identifying and recruiting Black students, a group of Black faculty got together and formed the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black Students. (Although CCEBMS has always served the entire Third World community, the addition of "Minority" in the title was made official in 1981.)

The first class of CCEBMS students enrolled in the 1968-9 school year with 50 Black students. 150 students enrolled the next year, and in CCEBMS' third year 175 students enrolled, which until this year had been CCEBMS' largest freshperson class.

Since CCEBMS' conception in 1968, the organization has expanded to much more than just a Recruitment Committee. Manuel Rick Townes, CCEBMS Assistant Director of Academic Services, said that CCEBMS has grown to be the most comprehensive progam of its kind in the country.

Campus Journalism Conference

Today, Tuesday, October 11, is the deadline to register for the October 18th conference, Campus Journalism: Social Conflict and Freedom of the Press. This conference will be held in CC101 and will discuss the many and complex responsibilities of student-run publications and of students as journalists and human beings living in a volatile world.

With the goal of opening constructive dialogue on campus journalism, a planning committee of students, faculty, staff and administrators has met regularly for three months to prepare the agenda for next Tuesday afternoon:

3:30 Introduction and Background
Joel Myerson, Collegian Editor-in-Chief
3:45 Welcome and Opening Remarks
Joseph Duffey, UMass Chancellor
4:00 Keynote: "Freedom of the Press and Social Conflict: Addressing Dilemmas on Campus,"
Robert Trager, former professor, practicing attorney and author of two books on student press
4:30 Panel Response: "The Dilemmas from Multiple Perspectives," moderated by James Boylan, Journalism Professor, with panelists:
Josh Meyer, Collegian Executive Editor
Phillip Perlmutter, Boston Jewish Community Council Director
Michael Thelwell, Afro-Am Professor
Howard Ziff, Journalism Professor
Barbara Jean Roche, Campus Connection Editor
6:00 Audience Comments and Questions
6:30 Working Dinner, compliments of the Chancellor
7:30 Ongoing Dialogue: Sugesstions for Follow-Up, moderated by Joel Myerson
8:00 Summary and Conclusion
Informal Reception

We at NUMMO are very familiar with campus and global conflict. We know that no press can appease everyone, simply because no reported issue, be it campus, local, national or international in scope, will meet consensus with all readers. Nevertheless, NUMMO, as any other campus publication , is dedicated to informing the community responsibly about such news.

With a focus on concerns to people of color, this often means for us filling in gaps and making broader connections between issues and events; it means interpretting news to discover and to uncover the underlying attitudes that affect us as non-Whites living in a society controlled by Whites. By this we hope to fill our readers' needs, but, ultimately, we need your help, feedback and suggestions.

Few, if any, can define the dynamics of a large university campus, precisely because the definition of that campus encompasses the widest range of personalities, outlooks and interests. For that campus to exist in a tumultous world of social, political and moral contradictions is only to ensure conflicting diversity. No one issue claims itself the most difficult to accord; any confrontation demands constant struggle. Yet just as conflict is assumed, so should objective discussion be encouraged.

All are invited to attend the conference. Make your reservation at 204 Middlesex House.

"Along with academic advising and free tutorial service, we also work with national and international exchange programs, internships and co-ops for our students," said Townes. CCEBMS goes as far as Atlanta to recruit students and reviews 450 to 600 minority student applications each years. The program is also lobbying the administration to do more for its students, particularly in the financial aid department.

This year CCEBMS has switched to a new system of academic advising. In the past each counselor was responsible for a class of students, e.g. Freshperson, Sophomore, etc. However, due to a shortage of two staff members the counselors are now responsible for particular schools, e.g. College of Arts and Sciences. "This new system is proving to be very beneficial," said Townes. Under the new system counselors can gain expertise about the school they are counseling rather than having to take on a whole class with all the different majors.

Townes stated that CCEBMS is very important to today's students because "with Black unemployment at 50 percent, Blacks must strive harder to make changes." He said that Blacks students must excel even more than white students and must participate in internship and co-ops in order to distinguish themselves from the rest of the pack. "A majority of our students are very goal and success oriented and have the ability to strive," Townes added.

The CCEBMS staff does not just work a 9 to 5 schedule. The advisors are very much involved with their students. Along with having an intramural basketball team, "Old and Slow," the counselors work on projects that interest them. For example, counselors Greg Roberts and John Lopes asre organizing a chapter of the Kappa Alpha Psi fraternity and a Cape Verdean Club respectively. Director Paul Barrrows is pursuing government grants for health science programs and support programs for research careers in the hard sciences.

In spite of the many benefits of CCEBMS many students criticize the program. "This is very unfortunate," said Townes, "CCEBMS is committed to helping students. We have a lot to do with students' existence and survival." He added that students who criticize and take the program for granted hamper CCEBMS efforts to help all students.

"We are not perfect and we make mistakes," Townes admits, "but students must measure our commitment and effort. We are motivated to see all our students succeed."

It is to students' advantage to be involved in CCEBMS. Many of the University departments turn to CCEBMS for information about its students. "We can open doors for students," said Townes. "I have been here for eight years, and I've seen many students come and go, but, fortunately, CCEBMS always remains."

The Black Mass Communications Project, which for years has offered the valley music and education over WMUA radio, has begun a video and television project called the BMCP-TV production network. Director Raymond H. Giles, said the project was developed to do video promotional production for Third World organizations in the area.

Giles stated that the production network has been under consideration for two years, but the actual planning and development of the project began this semester. The network will be operated by a production crew of producers, directors, actors, and writers that Giles is in the process of coordinating.

If the network is to be successful, the production crew must "work with a team concept," said Giles. "We must work closely together to produce quality programs that will benefit our organizations." The crew is being trained by the Union Video Center, and Giles added that there are still positions available for Third World students interested in becoming involved with the network.

"Television is the most important medium of our time," said Giles. It is imperative that Third World students, especially those majoring in Communications, learn about television production on a first hand basis. "Although radio has proven very valuable, TV has a much higher potential for expansion," said Giles.

BMCP-TV is working with UVC to produce programs that will be aired on Student Union and Campus Center television. The network is also currently negotiating with area cable companies to develop programs to be aired on cable stations. Giles says that working with cable can help the network develop programs of professional quality.

The network is considering programming of news/documentaries, campus-wide events, theatrical productions and possibly national events. If everything goes according to schedule, programming should begin in mid-November, with the first production to be a documentary on the Augusta Savage Memorial Art Gallery in New Africa House.

Giles thanks CCEBMS for helping to plan the production network. For more information and crew applications, contact Raymond Giles at the BMCP office, SUB 402, 5-2426

African Students Association

The statement of purpose reads: to create, foster and cement closer relationships among African students on campus; to encourage them to study the fundamental problems facing the African countries and to suggest solutions for these problems; to disseminate true and adequate information about the African people, their history, culture, traditions, problems and aspirations; to foster and cement greater understanding and cooperation with the American people in general and the University community in particular.

These goals are noble for a newly formed non-budgeted organization. With zeal and determination, though, the African Students Association (ASA) strives to offer what educational and cultural events it can.

While "this all depends on money," Mulu Geta, President of the ASA reaffirms existing members' committment "to make the organization real strong, to disseminate true (African) culture, drive and determination and their struggle" within the college community.

The ASA is a Five-College organization with a present membership of 65 Africans who study and live in the area. It extends associate membership to Afro-American students as well, and feels a duty to create closer ties to address U.S. "ignorance of the African continent, to deconstruct the kind of thinking" that defines African and other Third World peoples as inherently backward, not taking into consideration centuries of economic and cultural exploitation.

Because the ASA did not form until the Spring of 1983, it missed the 1983-4 SGA budget deadline. For the next year the organization will have to approach scheduling of events "program by program." The ASA asks for help from other organizations to co-sponsor or to grant monies for such propsed events as a panel discussion on the crisis in the Horn of Africa and an African UN representative's visit.

Geta acknowledges not only the many limits facing the organization, but members' perseverance as well, saying, "Of course, we're used to that; Africans are trained by the best professor-that's poverty."

The ASA thanks the Afro-Am Department for supplying an office, 423 New Africa House, and extends an invitation to any and all interested students to call 5-0210 or to stop by for information.

Native American Exposes Lies

by Brenda Ling
Nummo Staff

John Trudell, Native American activist and poet, spoke last Wednesday about indigenous North Americans peoples' constant meeting head-on with U.S. antagonism. Outside the SUB Ballroom that afternoon, the Union Video ran a tape of another Native American man who introduced passers-by to Trudell's topic by saying, "Indian awareness is here; there is more to it than beads and feathers." Inside the Ballroom, Trudell translated that awareness into real terms, into human life issues.

With a calm yet vibrant voice, Trudell began his talk by reading his own poerty, prose rife with imagery and physical reality: "Americans who never wanted to be Americans in the first place...some lived, some died, some don't even know what happened...physical rape of the earth." Asserting that "I have no reason to lie," Trudell described Native Americans' battles as "an extension of the largest war, started 491 years ago because we have a different perspective on life." He spoke of the "mass movement headed to hysteria, (of) civilization turning into a mental disorder."

An example of such "insanity" is Leonard Peltier's legal case. Peltier, as Native American leader, is a political prisoner who was framed after a 1975 FBI raid of the Pine Ridge Reservasion in South Dakota. Through falsified ballistic tests and lab reports, and with intimidated and coerced witnesses, the state managed to railroad Peltier into jail. Peltier is currently serving two life sentences for the murders of two FBI agents.

When Peltier's lawyers obtained two thirds of the 18,000 pages of FBI documents on him, released through the Freedom of Information Act, they exposed the falsified evidence. Supporters of Peltier, including some members of the U.S. House of Representatives, now call for his retrial, which, when conducted fairly, will only "prove that this was all being manufactured, was all a lie."

Trudell managed to uncover many lies to the enthusiastic audience. Most clear was his assertion that a "consumer, technological, reactionary America is one large confusion perpetuating the lie that they are doing something for all of us." In his mind, we must return to the earth to escape this "psychological warfare," a warfare of consumerism that only "extracts us from the roots of this world, and makes "the working class the Indians of the 21st Century-they are running you down."

Reminding all that to remember the earth is to embrace human history and human potential, Trudell outlined certain priorities, such as "you can't solve sexism without acknowledging Mother Earth." He urged everyone in the audience "to do something, raise your voice, get organizations to write to Congress, run away no longer, (and) remember the earth, remember who you are."

The Voice is back in business

By DIANE LANE

A last-minute recruiting effort by the staff of the Valley Women's Voice has yielded enough community response to ensure the publication's immediate survival, said Joan Wilce, spokesperson for the paper.

Although close to folding last week due to a lack of qualified people, emergency meetings held over the weekend and plea for help in October's issue of the Voice has resulted in postcards, letters and phone calls from women offering their help, Wilce said.

Over the weekend the Voice decided to publish a November issue. A staff meeting Tuesday night led to the decision to continue publication on the Voice at least through the end of the year.

"We are not folding and are committed to continuing," said Buck McWilliams, a Voice staff member.

McWilliams said that the November issue would be somewhat "limited" because of time constraints but future issues should be back to the current format.

McWilliams declined to comment on the number of replies the Voice received in response to its plea for help, but said "We have a number that we are comfortable with".

She said the Voice will continue to look for qualified writers, advertising people, and others interested in helping out with production.

"We could use increased participation from students at the University of Massachusetts," said McWilliams.

One problem the Voice will deal with now that they are back in business is finding an office to house the publication. Wilce said the Voice will have to move out of its current office on State Street, in Northampton on November 1.

The Voice had originally been housed at UMass at the Everywoman's Center but moved to State Street when the EWC needed more space.

Regents' proposal would standardize student fees

BOSTON (AP) — Student fees account for a third of what a student in a state college or university pays for education, but the charges vary widely among schools and should be standardized, an official said Tuesday.

The suggestion by Vice Chancellor Roger Schinness came as the Board of Regents of Higher Education continued its discussion of a proposed tuition policy for the state's colleges and universities.

The policy, not expected to go to vote until February at the earliest, proposes that tuition be based on a portion of what it costs the state to provide the education. The regents are considering a range that would set tuition at 25 percent to 33 percent of educational cost.

Currently tuitions represent from 24.9 percent of the actual cost of education at the University of Massachusetts to 29 percent at state colleges.

Schinness said the policy may mean tuition hikes, depending on the school and the regents' decision on the portion students must pay.

The proposed policy also addresses student fees, which a recent study found account for a third of the student payments. Tuition represents the other two-thirds.

"Mandatory fees represent a significant portion of student expenditures," Schinness told the board.

"There is at present too much diversity...in what is charged for fees," he added. "The (college and university) presidents must work toghether to establish a range for standardized mandatory fees."

Schinness said the fees are set by the instutitions' trustees.

The students fees include library, laboratory, student union and other fees geared to pay for various activities. The fees are retained by the institution, while tuitions are turned over to the state.

While the regents have no formal authority over fees, Schinness said, "I think we could achieve (standard fees) by agreement amongst the presidents. We haven't even broached the subject yet."

According to a background paper on the proposed policy, the fees vary among similar institutions.

"For example," the paper said,"in the state college (system), student fees for the 1983-84 academic year ranged from a high of $364 at the Maritime Academy to a low of $159 at Worcester State College."

In the community colleges, fees range from a high of $187 at Northern Essex Community College to a low of $81 at Masssachusetts Bay Community College.

According to the paper, average annual fees for undergradautes at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst is $453. For the other university campuses, the report said it is $213 at UMass-Boston, $267 at the University of Lowell, and $248 at Southeastern Massachusetts University.

"Fees amount to a major portion of the students educational costs and are a major revenue source for the institution," the background report said.

"The regents should ensure that students in all institutions are assessed fair and equitable fees, and that these expenses are reflected in financial aid policy," it concluded.

Doctor speaks against abortion

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

The president of the Right-to-Life Crusade, Dr. Mildred F. Jefferson, said last night that "the right to life is the most basic of our rights," in a lecture in the Student Union Ballroom.

Jefferson, an assistant clinical professor of surgery at the Boston University School of Medicine, made a speech on the moral implications of abortion titled "What the Bible Says About Abortion." Her points were based on "the Judeo-Christian sanctity of life ethic," which she claimed our society was based on.

"This ethic has been the consensus on which this society has been founded," she said.

In her arguments against abortion, Jefferson said "scientific observations" had to be disproved, and not religious doctrines, in any debate about abortion.

She claimed that it was a scientific fact that "the point of transmission of life is fertilization."

Jefferson then proceeded to condemn pro-choice factions by saying that they "displace the sanctity of life ethic with a 'quality of life' ethic. We (right-to-life supporters) are not vitalists, we are 'personists'."

Jefferson said that unwanted pregnancies, the main reason for abortions, wons, were "morally wrong, and should be corrected."

"Society must not be allowed to let unfortunate parents reinforce the label 'unwanted'," she said.

Jefferson said that the Catholic Church, the leading defendant of the pro-life movement, was poorly represented in the nation's capital, and that abortion laws are made "under Protestant consensus."

Jefferson cited the United States' 1.5 million abortions per year, saying that the Supreme Court "had no right to annul the commandment 'Thou shalt not kill'."

She compared the legalization of abortion to the high crime rate in Boston. "Society's weakest, most helpless member, the unborn child, is a scapegoat," she said, like the elderly who should "know better" than to be out when the crime rates are so high.

"A society that destroys its survival instinct is...on its way to being extinct," she said. "We can't let our country become an exclusive reservation where only the priveleged, the perfect, or the planned have the right to live," she said.

Mel King leads, Finnegan concedes

BOSTON (AP) — Community activist Melvin King, who put together a "rainbow coalition" in hope of becoming Boston's first black mayor, won one of two finalist spots Tuesday in a preliminary election to pick the city's first new mayor in 16 years.

In the race for the second spot, City Councilor Raymond Flynn posted a widening lead over former School Committee President David Finnegan, who conceded the race without endorsing either winner.

With 59 percent of the 252 precincts reporting, King had 31,805 votes or 33 percent in citywide returns tabulated by WBZ-TV. Flynn had 23,853 votes or 25 percent while Finnegan had 20,173 votes or 21 percent.

Due to a heavy turnout, no returns were immediately available from city election officials in the eight-candidate battle to succeed Mayor Kevin White, who decided against seeking a fifth term in office.

King put together a multi-racial coalition of black, white and Hispanic supporters and brought in national figures like Jesse Jackson and Chicago Mayor Harold Washington to campaign for him. He also counted on help from a record number of newly registered voters in his effort to make the mayoral runoff in New England's largest city.

He is the first black candidate to ever qualify for the final election in this city which was torn apart by racial strife during the court-ordered busing battle during the 1970s.

Flynn, a one-time leader of the local anti-busing movement in South Boston, gained support from both poor blacks and whites by shifting his focus to issues like housing, health care and jobs that cut across racial lines. His major issue of promoting growth of Boston's outlying neighborhoods, which were neglected during the downtown building boom of the last 20 years, became a central focus of the campaign.

The primary was one of the closest, hardest fought and most unpredictable elections in recent Boston history. Early returns indicated that turnout could reach the record 70 percent mark predicted by state officials.

The preliminary and final elections were delayed by a court challenge of the district lines used in this fall's city council and school committee races.

King's chances in the primary were improved when his campaign staff launched a drive to register as many new voters as possible. Between 40 and 60 percent of the 52,889 new voters live in minority neighborhoods where King was expected to do well.

Due to the registration drive and demographic shifts, onethird of the city's 264,223 voters are from minority groups. Irish-Americans, who made up half of the electorate just a decade ago, have dropped to about 33 percent.

Blackout darkens LA garment district

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A power station explosion blacked out a 2-square-mile section of the downtown business area for up to 17 hours, idling thousands of workers Tuesday and costing companies millions of dollars in lost production.

Hardest hit was the city's bustling garment district, which may have lost millions of dollars in production, said Bernard Z. Brown, chairman of the state Coalition of Apparel Industries and vice president of Koret of California.

"Without electricity to operate our machines, our industry's dead," Brown said.

Garment worker Ismael Perez said he lost $45 in wages because he wasn't able to work Tuesday. "I don't know what I will tell my wife and my kid," said Perez, 26.

The power failure plunged the area into darkness at 7:20 p.m. Monday, stopping elevators between floors and knocking out traffic lights. It lingered in some areas for more than 17 hours through midday Tuesday, said Barry Tuller, spokesman for the city-owned Department of Water and Power.

Workers in some offices that remained without power Tuesday hiked up stairways, huddled by windows or candles to do their work and functioned without electric typewriters, calculators and computers.

An estimated 8,000 DWP customers in the two-square-mile area were affected by the blackout, which began with a fiery explosion at an old power distribution station. The cause of the explosion had not been determined, Tuller said Tuesday.

DWP work crews worked to restore power section by section, using undamaged parts of the substation and rerouting electricity from other stations, Tuller said.

Virtually all of southern California's $2 billion-a-year garment industry's production is done by contractors who work out of small shops — many of them crowded into the area affected by the blackout.

Most production employees work for piece rates and it is unlikely that any of the workers — about 90 percent of whom are non-union — were paid for the day, Brown said.

Power was restored by midmorning to the California Mart, where wholesalers go to select and order merchandise.

A similar blackout last summer in New York City, caused by a fire in an underground substation, struck that city's garment industry in the middle of its market week, idling thousands of workers and out-oftown buyers.

The power failure also knocked out writing terminals and other operations at the Los Angeles Herald Examiner, The Associated Press and La Opinion, the region's largest Spanish-language newspaper.

Poles want joke book removed from capsule

LONGMEADOW, Polish-Americans, not amused at the inclusion of a book of Polish jokes in a bicentennial time capsule, are threatening to dig up the town green in this community of New England bluebloods.

The book was included in one of two time capsules buried Monday in front of the flagpole in this affluent Springfield suburb as the minister of the First Church of Christ prayed for a future Longmeadow in which the "welfare of all is the concern of all."

The book was a last-minute addition by a child one of many spectators who accepted an invitation to put something in the capsules just before they were buried.

Within hours, switchboards at newspapers and radio and television stations in the Springfield area lit up with calls from residents irate over what they considered an ethnic slur.

Julie Strzempek of nearby Three Rivers vowed to get the book removed from the capsule buried in the town green even if, "I have to get a shovel and do it myself."

"When they open the capsule 50 or 100 years from now, they will think this book represents the world we live in today."

No Army execution

WASHINGTON
The U.S. Court of Military Appeals, ruling that the military capital punishment law is unconstitutionally vague, overturned the death sentence Tuesday of an Army private convicted of rape and murder.

At the same time, in a move which defense lawyers said was unusual, the military's highest court left open a 90-day period in which the president or Congress could rewrite the Defense Department's sentencing procedures and reimpose the death penalty on Wyatt L. Matthews.

Matthews, 26, was convicted in 1979 of raping and stabbing to death Phyllis Jean Villanueva, a substitute librarian at a U.S. Army camp in Grafenwoehr, West Germany. The wife of a warrant officer, she was found stabbed with a pair of scissors 53 times in head, chest and back.

Harasser of lesbians receives jail sentence

NORTHAMPTON, Mass. — A Northampton man was sentenced Tuesday to a three-month jail term under a civil rights statute for making harassing phone calls to lesbians in the city.

Judge Alvertus J. Morse gave Robert Kremensky, 23, a oneyear sentence in the Hampshire County House of Correction but uuspended all but three months. Kremensky had been found guilty of three charges of violating the civil rights of three women, after he admitted to making a number of telephone threats to lesbians.

Kremensky's lawyer, John Arden, called the sentence too severe and said he would ask Morse to revise it.

"There is no way we were expecting this," said Sherman Boyson, a gay activist at the sentencing. "For the first offense, with no prior record, we thought for sure he'd get off with a suspended sentence and counseling. I'm elated."

Kremensky was also placed on probation for four years.

District Attorney W. Michael Ryan said the sentence may mark the first time anyone in Massachusetts has been imprisoned under a law prohibiting the violation of someone's civil rights since that law was passed in February 1980.

"I don't know why I did it," Kremensky told the Daily Hampshire Gazette in an interview outside the courtroom Tuesday. "It was pure stupidity ... I have a big mouth."

He said, however, that he did not think the jail term was appropriate.

"Hey, I did something wrong," he said. "But I'm no big criminal. I've never even been in court before. I don't really know what this is going to prove."

The judge did not explain the reasons behind his sentence.

Cool surgery saves life

BALTIMORE — Doctors said Tuesday they lowered the body temperature of a cancer patient 32 degrees, stopping his heartbeat and plunging him into a state near "suspended animation" during surgery that saved his life.

Robert Crowe, 37, of Alexandria, Va., was back at work full time within six months and shows no signs of any tumors, said Dr. Fray Marshall, associate professor of urology at Johns Hopkins Hospital.

During the operation, Crowe's body temperature was reduced to 66 degrees for 41 minutes, down from the usual 98.6 degrees.

"He really was not kept alive on the (heart-lung) machine, as there was no perfusion of blood through the body," Marshall said at a news conference explaining the technique. "Mr. Crowe was just cooled down and in a sense was closer to a state of suspended animation."

Crowe had a cantaloupe-sized cancer growth on his kidney, which spread through the vena cava blood vessel into his heart, resembling a "a garden hose stuffed full of sausage," Marshall said.

Old phones are history

BRYANT POND, Maine (AP) — Technicians pulled the plug Tuesday on an antiquated switchboard in Elden Hathaway's living room, after one final call on the nation's last hand-cranked telephone system.

Scores of reporters and telephone buffs from around the country were on hand as Oxford County Telephone and Telegraph Co. switched its 440 customers in this tiny Maine village into the era of touchtone buttons and direct dial calls.

Hathaway, who owned and operated the Bryant Pond Telephone Co. from his home until selling it to Oxford Telephone two years ago, said he would miss "having the operators in every day. They've been part of the family for 30 years or so."

Hathaway's two daughters, who had worked as operators, are now looking for other jobs.

The changeover to an automated system officially took effect at 2 p.m., but customers had "been playing with their new phone sets since they were put in this morning," said F. Robert Jamison, general manager of Oxford Telephone.

Students broadcast TV news from the Union Video Center

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Correspondent

"Headline News," a campus-based news program, is now in its second semester of production, and things are running smoothly, say the show's producers.

Last semester the television news show was plagued by a lack of staff and equipment, but Co-Producer Kelly Green said new equipment and increased student involvement have gotten the show off to a better start than last year.

Headline News airs at 12:30 p.m. weekdays on television screens outside the Hatch cafeteria and the mini-store in the Student Union Building. Green, who produces the show with Joe Troiano, said the program presents a combination of national, state and campus news.

"We want to be a source for students walking through the Campus Center who might want some information on daily events," Green said.

Broadcasts began last monday, and Green said production is smoother this year with the collaboration of a switcher, who mixes audio and video, along with a camera person and a director. And with set anchor teams, as opposed to the constantly changing lineup of last semester, things should continue to run smoothly, she said.

This year's program has generated more student involvement than last year's, Green said. Approximately 17 people applied for the four anchor positions, she said.

Lisa Posner and David Sobel will anchor one show this fall, with David Chapman on sports, and Jamie Sykes and Joe Troiano will head the other anchor team, with Brian Murphy covering sports.

The show is broadcast from the Union Video Center, which was created in the 1970s for students interested in learning to use video equipment. The UVC and Headline News give students some "hands-on" experience in news gathering, production and broadcasting that they will need to see if this is the field they want to enter.

Sykes, a communications studies major who has written and done camera work for the show, said she eventually wants to get into TV production. But, "to get a well-rounded view of the business it's good to see it from every angle," she said.

Green has high hopes for the future of Headline News, like obtaining new equipment to allow more electronic news gathering and visual effects, such as news and sports footage. Green said she would like to see a campus-wide cable system, "with every dorm wired for our cable show."

For anyone interested, the UVC offers workshops in audio, video and editing equipment for $20.

Busses will run to Mill Hollow soon

The Cushman Bus Route is scheduled to start as soon as a formal letter from the town of Amherst and the PVTA is submitted to Bill Barrett, Director of Transportation and parking, and not Monday as incorrectly reported in Tuesday's Collegian.

The route is scheduled to start in about four days as soon as the formalities are taken care of, Barrett said, and is supposed to increase ridership by about one third, passing Mill Hollow Apartments.

"If overcrowding does occur we will deal with it," he said.

It's time to think grad school

By MELISSA KORNFELD

Collegian Correspondent

While most University of Massachusetts undergraduates worry about fast-approaching mid-term exams, some seniors must be aware that it is also the time to apply to graduate schools for next September.

Gloria Bernabe-Ramos, the UMass pre-graduate advisor, said going to graduate school is a decision that must be made by the individual student, but planning in advance is necessary for all students because of the various programs offered and the different requirements that must be passed to enter graduate schools.

Ramos is taking appointments to help students with procedures and requirements for graduate school acceptance, and she said she can answer any questions students have concerning post-graduate education.

Entry requirements vary with the different schools, Ramos said. A personal written statement, along with your Graduate Records Examination scores and an undergraduate transcript are the usual fare, but different schools stress different aspects of the individual, and Ramos stressed that everything is important for acceptance.

Early application can be crucial to acceptance, Ramos said, and students are encouraged to take the Graduate Records Examinations "right away, no matter what your plans are."

"If they plan to attend graduate school juniors should begin researching and looking for different programs," she added.

Ramos said GRE preparation courses are expensive and not always necessary for students to do well on the exams.

"It is a personal decision, but I am not sure they improve scores," she said. "My best advice is to take the GRE as soon as possible so that what you have learned in college is still fresh in your mind." GRE results are valid for five years after a student takes the exams, Ramos said.

Applying for financial aid for graduate school is the same as the undergraduate procedure, Ramos said, and often students can apply for scholarships or become a graduate assistant while going to school.

Ramos said the advising office is expanding its files and contacts to better serve the students. She said she is also trying to compile a list of UMass faculty willing to talk to students about graduate school.

Appointments with the office can be made for Monday, Wednesday or Friday between 9:30 a.m. and 12:30 p.m.

Former UMass President Lederle reminisces

Keeping communication open viewed as significant move

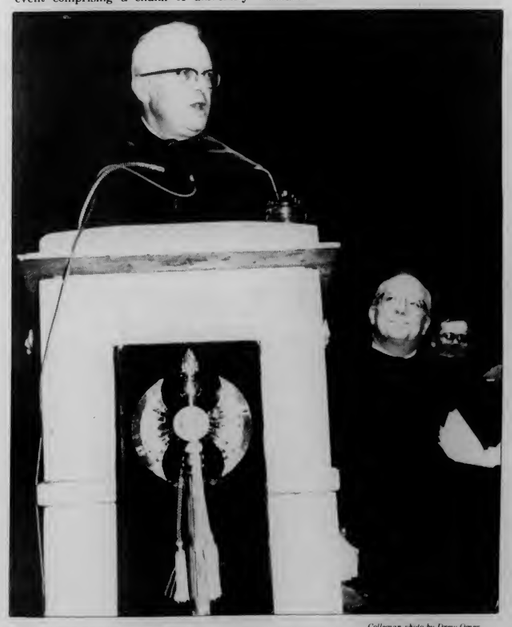
By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

Wednesday, Nov. 29, 1967, was a fair but not especially news worthy day at the University of Massachusetts, or in the nation--the budget of $30,000 for senior week was rejected by the student senate after much debate; Boston's John Hancock Life Insurance Company announced plans to erect a 60-story office tower in Coply Square, "the city's largest ever"; and former U.S. President Dwight D. Eisenhower voiced support of a proposed Marine invasion of unmilitarized sections of Vietnam.

"Incense and Peppermints" by Strawberry Alarmclock and the Monkees' "Daydream Believer" topped the charts in the same year Donovan and "Wear Your Love Like Heaven" charmed UMies at the spring concert. The arts calendar was scheduled to finish up the year with appearances by Janis Ian, the Turtles, and yes, Simon and Garfunkel at the Curry Hicks Cage. Tickets sold for $2.50.

UMass was not quite on the edge of the vehement, almost destructive liberalism college campuses were famous for in the late '60s; women were still referred to as 'girls' in news stories, students still voted for Homecoming Queen among contestants wearing modified bouffants and Peter Pan collars, and sorority/fraternity pinnings were published in the society column of the Collegian.

Wednesday, Nov. 29, 1967, was not a particularly newsworthy day for then President John W. Lederle--for it can be said, glibly if accurately, that each day for Lederle and his staff contributed to a news event comprising a chunk of university history filling at least five files in the university archives, files spreading to show the rate of construction of the Southwest and Orchard Hill residential areas, the Campus Center and Graduate Research Tower and Franklin Dining Commons and 60-odd other buildings, as well as a faculty and student population tripling in size since 1960.



The man for whom the Graduate Research Tower was named last week is 71 now, looking much the same as he did the day of his departure as president.

His eyes try to follow every change of the crowd hustling through the Campus Center on a recent hectic weekday, his expression gives himself away: we students are progressive, he says, and a little more serious, because "it's different now, from what a student in the mid-60s would have to face in the job market, for instance, lesser prospects, more to worry about in terms of financial aid . . ." but strangely, we are much alike in character as his earlier students, he says.

We are still his students.

Research on John Lederle is almost tedious. His name appears in nearly every periodical of higher education. Yes, it is true, he presided over the University during its most geographically and demographically changing decade; yes, he addressed both the needs of pacifist and radical students and passed quiet discussions with them as well as louder sit-ins and Vietnam protests and the State Police presence.

But what sets Lederle's name in print more often than those of other college presidents is not so much what he endured, but how he nurtured his school and its students through the adolescence of a decade.

SO LONG AGO BUT NOT SO FAR AWAY--

Former University of Massachusetts President John W. Lederle remembers his 10-year stay at Amherst.

John Lederle personified to me what Bobby Kennedy spoke about--that politics should be the most honorable profession, the politics of a university.

--Rep. Jim Collins

"UMass is a living organism," he says. "it's falling short in some areas, doing outstandingly well in others . . .I think potentially it's a great university, the kind I wish the people of the Commonwealth would support like they do the Harvards and MITs.

"We could fill this place up with students from other places, you know, we have a great out-of-state name. . .

"I am bothered," he says agitatedly, "by this sort of inferiority feeling here that this is a second-class place."

Anyone who ever worked with John Lederle said he never went second-class.

Autumn of 1960 came on a campus where the Student Union was the main landmark on a campus of 6400 students. Lederle promised at inauguration to stay at most, 10 years, because "ten years is enough for any president."

Lederle came from the University of Michigan, where he had graduated from law school in 1936. He had worked there in several capacities before coming to UMass.

Before then, Lederle taught political science at Brown University, and served as assistant dean of the school. He entered collegiate administration after a short law career, which he abandoned for his position at Brown.

When Lederle came to UMass, it was quivering ont he brink of financial mismanagement.

Lederle's first two years were settling in and observing years, but by the passage of the 1962 Financial Autonomy Act, which freed the flow of university monies which could then be channeled from one department to another, Lederle knew what to do.

His first course of action was already taken; surveying the campus had given him an idea of just how to approach the legislature with plans to use the money, which then had to be approved.

But passage needed reason. And reason was contained in one phrase: "Baby boom," '46, '47, '48, '49 . . .

Lederle planned. The legislature stalled until almost 1964, when Lederle refined his faculty recruiting and money-acquiring system with Provost Dr. Oswald Tippo of the Botany Department and Dean of Students William Field (appointed to the post by Lederle in 1960).

Field remembers: "John and Frank Boyden (then the chairmen of the Board of Trustees) would go into Boston to push this thing, and all the while Oswald Tippo, a brilliant guy, would be selling the university to other scholars. Frank and John would lobby for support from the legislature, and meanwhile Oswald started this incredible recruiting. Frank and John would be in Boston, and he'd be in Amherst telling them long distance, 'Look, I've got this guy from Stanford, I've got this guy from Michigan . . .' "

"John Lederle had a clear understanding of what a state university should be," Field says. He was a quality oriented person. It's easy to develop a second-class system, but he isolated his own two or three goals and set to attain them without sacrificing qualitly. He pushed . . ."

. . .'Incense and Peppermints' dominated the charts while Donovan and 'Wear Your Love Like Heaven' came to play at Homecoming . . .

State representative Jim Collins was at the sit-ins where president Lederle would address students trying to goad him into heavy arguments where they would try to make him lose his characteristic sense of cool and yell at a student or refuse to listen to him at all, the latter which he was never known to do.

Student Government Association president during '67-'68, Collins says, "I think the best way to describe John Lederle is 'gentleman.' He personified to me what Bobby Kennedy spoke about--that politics should be the most honorable of professions. I thought he created an environment where people felt free to express their feelings and where they were greeted with respect."

And John Lederle, who once said, "students should use this university for themselves, for the pursuance of their own self-enlightenment . . .that is education," Who added yesterday, "That was all I wanted to attain," did, apparently.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

You call that Democratic?

When I awoke last Tuesday morning I had no reason to believe that I wasn't still in Massachusetts. After all, I went to sleep fairly certain about where I was in relation to the rest of the world. After reading The Boston Globe, however I knew how displaced Dorothy must have felt in The Wizard of OZ.

Alan Smith

When I had dozed off Monday night, I was in Massachusetts, the last bastion of the liberal Democratic tradition. The state that blazed the awareness trail for other states not fortunate enough to be at the direct center of the universe. The Bay Colony which self-righteously assumed the role of torch bearer for the East Coast intellegents.

Everything seemed normal until I got to the Globe's Metro/Region section. As I skimmed the section, I found the usual assortment of New England news: an article on the geologic importance of the clay cliffs at Gay Head; a piece on the good ole Yankee ingenuity of "part-time" local candidates in the Boston City elections; and even a blurb on a state cop who couldn't keep his fingers out of his barrack's cocaine stash. All standard, right?

Right. Except for the coverage of the Great and General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. The report covered the fate of a bill designed to incorporate the rights of homosexuals into the framework of the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination (MCAD).

More important than the legislative destiny of the bill was the revelation of the true character of two Democratic Senators who opposed the bill on the floor of the Senate. Senator Walsh (D-Dorchester) had the following comment on the bill:

"We spend a million dollars a year at the MCAD. If we have to deal with fags and lesbos, you can bet we'll be spending $10 million a year . . . Don't tell me I owe them something because they're queer."

Senator Denis McKenna, (D-Boston) joined his colleauge from Dorchester in a quest for the ultimate in ignorance. "...the worst thing this state did was let gays out of the closet. The only thing they've ever offered to culture is AIDS and herpes."

The nature and content of these comments illustrate two points. First, there are at least two certifiable idiots at work in the Massachusetts Senate. Second, the Democratic voters in this state have slandered themselves by allowing such idiots to represent them.

To my chagrin, both Walsh and McKenna will not face their public in the election forum until November 1984. Until that time, public outrage will have to serve as the great vindicator of the Democratic Party. Blind paranoia and heartfelt hatred, as a direct result of ignorance, must not be allowed to slide by as a legitimate Democratic precept.

Media misses the full story

It is interesting to watch the headlines revolve from day to day. Old issues seem to find their way out of the burial grounds of page 17, and front page news quickly fades from sight. The hostilities lose their urgency when removed from our front page consciences. I open up the paper each morning wondering if Libya owns more than half of Chad yet. Is Iran still sending twelve and thirteen year-olds to the front lines to locate Iraqi minefields? Has an El Salvadorian peasant harvested his fruits of land reform yet? The list can go on forever.

John Gilman

The American news media has its way of directing our attention toward the issues they deem important. To be sure, in a world with as many "hot spots" and confrontations as ours, it is impossible to cover all the bases at once, but the jolts, jumps, and gaps of information concerning any single issue make it difficult to keep track of what is going on.

It is as if one of the major networks decided to run six different soap operas during the same time slot on six different channels, rotating each show to a different channel at the end of the week. Imagine the outrage of Amherst soap fans if General Hospital was only shown one week out of six in this area, but the plot marched resolutely on during the five weeks it was being shown in the Midwest and California. By the time everyone picked up the storyline again it would be Friday, and the next episode would be shown in Peoria, not Amherst. International news is quite a bit like that, the story is deemed newsworthy for a couple of days, and then fades to page 23. Nobody gets the full picture.

Take the war in Chad for instance. A month ago it covered the front pages. The U.S. had sent an AWACS plane into the area, French troops were brought in, there were accusations that the U.S. was going to try to bring down Libyan leader Kaddafi. Now there is hardly a word on Chad.

What about Central America? We still get a trickle of news about guerrilla attacks in Nicaragua, and Constituent Assembly news from El Salvador; has the shooting stopped down there? We hear nothing about the thousands of U.S. troops in Honduras on manuevers, the fleets off of each coast of Nicaragua, or the civilian body counts from El Salvador.

While these issues vanish from the wires, other issues get dragged out of the mothballs to get consumed all over again. The latest one, straight from a polite ovation at the United Nations, is the subject of arms control. No doubt Mr. Reagan dusted it off to push the MX missile through Congress. It is amazing that we are once again being fed the Reagan line on nuclear weapons again, erroneously called arms control, when it is more than apparent that the last thing in the world Ronald Reagan wants to do is limit the number of missiles on this planet. Reagan on arms control is like the El Salvadoran government on human rights.

Getting valid information is very difficult these days. If one does not have the stamina to really dig for the straight facts, or as close to the real story as possible, then the only alternative is the mainstream media. Without even dealing with the inaccuracies and slanted opinions that frequent these avenues of information, one must also remain indifferent to the unnecessary gaps of reporting on many issues. Selective reporting is the weapon of purveyors of misinformation and enemies of open government. It is not a new phenomenon by any means, but it is one that is not discussed enough in 1983. Ignoring the facts has the same effect as distorting them. Either way the American public is mislead.

John Gilman is a UMass student.

A feud between the Arts?

To the Editor,

The review of SPECTRUM, the Literary and Fine Arts Magazine of the University of Massachusetts, appearing in Wednesday's Collegian, was latest in a series of reviews by the Collegian which have continuously cast SPECTRUM in a bad light, when in fact SPECTRUM shines among campus publications on campus, around the Five Colleges, and across the country.

To the point, it was only a year ago that the Collegian tells us that the material is inconsistent in quality and ranging from outstanding to horrible. But this year, the Collegian tells us that a focus is unnecessary. We expect a consistent standard of criticism, especially when the same people are still with the Arts staff.

Perhaps, it is not a coherent theme which is being denounced, but the choice of theme, the "Social Significance of Art." And what we are getting is not a review in the traditional sense, but a political position on the works included in SPECTRUM. And yet in another recent art review we have an arts writer chastizing the student body for lack of political committment.

Instead of demonstrating how well the works in SPECTRUM fit the focus from an artistic perspective, the author chooses to further define the focus with a long run-on sentence taken from the introduction of the magazine. The author, however, fails to mention the reason why such a long list of qualifiers as used to define the focus, i.e., that each member in the organization was able to have an individual interpretation of the umbrella theme of Social Significance incorporated into the theme. This is explained in the magazine and excluding it in the review renders it incomplete and jaded.

Furthermore, the author's rhetorical question asking whether it is not true that one can trivialize art by using it to present important issues, which he never answers, misses the point of the theme entirely.

The author's comments that the cover of the magazine, "Endangered Species," "belies the issue's content as ecological rather than political" fails to see the connection between ecology and politics, and also overlooks the artful implication that SPECTRUM itself and as well the arts in general are endangered species.

What follows then is a description of some of SPECTRUM'S features and I would like to make two observations, one specific and one general: first, SPECTRUM does not solely publish fiction, rather it presents a variety of prose styles. The five prose pieces covering a variety of prose style, from art history to prose poetry, which the reviewer dismisses as "mere editorializing."

Secondly, my general impression about the second half of the article, which is more enthusiastic about SPECTRUM, is that it is as glib, shallow, and trite as the first half of the article, and an unfair appraisal of the artists. SPECTRUM expects more from the Collegian; perhaps, we shouldn't. I say this because of the last three reviews of SPECTRUM, and as well a downward trend in arts coverage by the Collegian.

On the opposite end of the spectrum, was the review of Jim Roche's fundamentalist, rightwing art on view at the University Gallery, entitled, "The Future of Modernism." The final point of the article was to misquote Roche as saying, "Modernism still has a long future," when what Roche actually said was that "Modernism is in trouble." I'm pointing this out to show my own impartiality in the belief that every one should get a fair hearing no matter what their politics.

How you choose to represent the arts is your perogative, but when you misrepresent the arts, you discredit your readers and yourself more than you discredit the art.

If any of your readers are interested in obtaining a copy of SPECTRUM, they are available at university galleries; if not there, try again.

VIOLENT FEMMES

JONATHAN RICHMAN
Oct. 7
Blue Wall

by Gerard Cosloy
Collegian Staff

How serious are the songs? What do you want, percentages? No, I'm not making anything up. But I'm not totally deranged either.

---Gordon Gano (Violent Femmes)

I don't feel strongly at all about "I'm Straight." But when I wrote the song, when I was 18 years old 12 years ago, I meant it completely. I didn't like hippies then, the whole collegiate/spare change sort of thing. I was never putting anybody on. Now it's dated.

---Jonathan Richman

Nineteen-year-old Gordon Gano's atonal sneer sounds alot like a younger Jonathan Richman, 'cept where Richman opted for whimsical folk poetry, Gano's songs are pained, pissed and prodding. Both singers brought their sparse & spontaneous live acts to Amherst last week in what can only be called the season's two sharpest bookings thus far.

The Femmes, a mostly acoustic folk/thrash hybrid have received more than their share of media hype this year with their debut LP (Slash) ranking as one of the year's freshest and funniest. Gano's (possibly) tongue-in-cheek tales of sexual frustration in songs like "Add It Up" and "Prove My Love" coupled with the street busker theatrics of rhythm section Brian Ritchie (acoustic bass) and Victor DeLorenzo (snare drum, trancephone), have won the Violent Femmes an audience as diverse as their musical stylings--from the frantic, largely pre-adolescent crowd that packed their Boston all-ages show last weekend, to the odd mix of hardcore fans, folkies and jus' plain curiosity seekers who jammed the Hangar last week. Running through two exuberant sets of recorded favorites and newer songs (including the hilarious "Country Death Song"), the Femmes showed that their on-vinyl verve is no novelty fluke. Like label-mates the Dream Syndicate, the Violent Femmes are a sloppy, unpretentious ball of fire; a brash, uncompromising sensibility that's closer to the wildness of locals like the Pajama Slave Dancers than it is to nude wave opening act The Standards.

Brash isn't a word I'd use to describe Jonathan Richman; I'd prefer to compare him to Mr. Rogers, 'cept Jonathan's got a better sense of humor.

While a cynic might call the Violent Femmes snotty or (worse) misogynist, Richman remains sensitive, shy, and ...(yup) uncomprimising. Refusing to play a greatest hits set for the slightly intolerant Blue Wall audience, Richman rebuked requests for "Roadrunner" early in the night, then later refused to return to the stage for an encore despite the large ovation he received. He's still leaving people confused, as good a sign of consistency as any.

Houston Ballet remarkable

THE HOUSTON BALLET
Oct. 4
Fine Arts Center

by Mary Beth Hebert
Special to the Collegian

When I was five, my life-long ambition was to be a dancer. Had I stuck with it, I probably would have been dancing the lead in the Houston Ballet's production of The Sleeping Beauty last Wednesday night at the Fine Arts Center.

But, as luck will have it, I had my first ballet lessons from an ill-mannered Russian lady who looked like she had been born in her leotards. She also seemed to take a perverse pleasure in attempting to straighten the posture of young imps with a wooden cane whose purpose was usually reserved for counting out beats. The end result of this tramatic experience was that it was Suzanne Longley dancing the lead in The Sleeping Beauty instead of Mary Beth Hebert.

Not that Longley didn't know what she was doing. Instead, of the more traditional aloof, drooping, melencholy monarch, her interpretation of Princess Auror was lively and vivacious. However, it was her execution of the solos in the dream sequence of Act II that proved her for the fine dancer she is. Longley's slow, fluid movements were the epitome of grace and precision. It's easy to see how she's able to snag a prince every night.

Prince Florimund was danced by Li Cunxin, who was born in the People's Republic of China and trained at the Peking Dance Academy. Although many of his more impressive leaps and bounds were reserved for the Grand Pas de Deux, they were worth the wait. Cunxin delighted the audience with his seemingly effortless jetes and oftentimes seemed to hoover above the stage's surface.

As talented as the two principle dancers were, they far from outshadowed the rest of the production's dancers. The Houston Ballet travels with its own thirty-one piece orchestra, conducted splendidly by Glenn Langdon. And for a road company that travels up to five weeks at a time with this production, they were able to create three complete set changes, each remarkably detailed and complex for a group doing such extensive traveling.

Other notable dancers were Rosemary Miles as the evil Carabosse, and Jeanne Doornbos as the Fairy Temperament. Miles, who has been a soloist with the Houston Ballet since 1976, was fantastic. Her gestures were dramatic and forceful not to mention emphasized by three inch fingernails and her agressive dancing was well-complemented by her six attendents. Fairy Temperment's presentation, was executed with sharp, intricate steps by Doornbos. The featured dancers in Act III also deserve special recognition. Carole Dunn and Timothy O'Keefe were utterly feline in their respective roles of The White Cat and Puss-in-Boots. Janie Parker, Princess Florise, and William Pizzuto, The Bluebird, proved they deserved their award as "Best Couple" at the 1982 International Ballet Competetion. And Jay Kilmurray, Kevin Poe, and Daniel Jamison delighted their audience with their gymnastics as The Ivans.

Maybe it's just as well I wasn't dancing the lead in The Sleeping Beauty, I had an awfully good time watching it.

Black Affairs

UMass racial "hushed-up" policies

By RHONDA SWAN
Collegian Staff

As it was mentioned in a recent editorial published in "Black Affairs", incidents of racial harassment seem to be the least publicized events of public concern.

Murders, rapes, and robberies, all of which are crimes against the person, seem to scream at the public through the headlines of the newspaper everyday. However, events involving issues of racial dissention are saved only for the political arena.

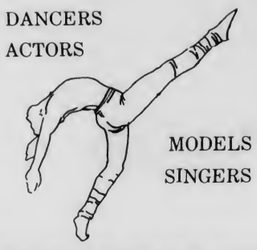
The way in which the news media covers this issue one would think that they were only prevalent when minorities were seeking public office, as was the case recently in the mayoral races of both Chicago and Philadelphia.

However, the media, although it definitely has its faults, is not totally to blame for what seems to be a coverup that affects us all. Under normal circumstances, the media cannot report these events unless they are blatant, public displays of racism or in the case of institutional racism, someone volunteers to report it.

Unfortunately this volunteer is often hard to find.

During the spring semester, several incidents of racial harassment took place here at the University of Massachusetts. These incidents resulted in the formation of a working group, appointed by the Chancellor, to investigate the problem and propose some solutions for it. However, what exactly took place that would prompt the chancellor to take such action is known only to selected members of the University community.

Commentary



Several of these individuals were approached by a Collegian reporter last semester for information regarding the incidents but the reporter was given the proverbial "run around" and led from one person to the other only to give up pursuing the matter upon the realization that her attempts were futile.

The reason given for the "hush" policy applied to this matter was that those involved were giving the chancellor a chance to respond, and any press coverage would impede his ability to act. This, of course, may have been true since the "Boston Globe", among other prestigious newspapers, were also interested in the story and such coverage may have blown the matter out of proportion.

However, one very point must be made concerning this issue. "Knowledge is power" and with the power comes the ability to act.

If the citizens of the United States were made aware of the racially discriminatory events that take place in this country, where "all (men) are created equal", then those concerned can make a conscious effort to deal with the problem in an effective way.

But, as it is known, too many Americans are ignorant to the problem, thinking that it doesn't exist and everything is "peachy keen" with the racial minorities. Unfortunately, too many of us naively believe that the civil rights laws ended racial discrimination and harassment; however, there are still many obstacles to break.

Minutewomen breeze to fifth win

TIRED MINUTEWOMAN: UMass back Lori Stukes chases after the ball in last week's match with UConn. Stukes spiked in the winning goal in yesterday's 3-0 win over UNH.

When a fourth-ranked-in-the-nation University of Massachusetts women's soccer team kicks off against a first-year-varsity University of New Hampshire team, it should be no problem predicting who the victor will be.

For everyone who chose the obvious, buy yourself a popsicle because the Minutewomen came back from N.H. with a 3-0 shutout over the young team and a 5-1-2 record. But, it was not as easy as it should have been.

"We could have done better," Assistant Coach Natalie Prosser said. "We were a little shakey at first because we tried too hard to put the ball in the net. The field was very narrow and they just cluttered everyone in front of the net. We were kind of going after them and then we had to pull them away from the net."

The first half was rather slow since the Wildcats spent a lot of the time protecting their goaltender. UMass had a few problems getting on the ball proving how easy it can be to relax a little when a win is expected.

Back Lori Stukes broke the ice for the Minutewomen when she chipped in the first goal. Standing in front of the net, Stukes turned and placed a Mary Sztela pass in behind the Wildcat's goaltender.

In the second half of the match, the Minutewomen turned on the power and had better scoring opportunities. Chris Taggart took advantage of one of those opportunities when, assisted by Jamie Watson, she scored on a breakaway.

Ellen Taggart finished the scoring unassisted as she stole the ball from the UNH goaltender and snuck it in behind her.

On Thursday the Minutewomen will do battle against Springfield with hopes of making the Indians their sixth victim.

UMass mens soccer loses close one

By TONY BETROS
Collegian Staff

It was just your typical, UMass soccer game.

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, coming off a fairly good weekend in the Umass invitational, suffered another disappointing loss, this one to Providence College by a 1-0 score.

The only goal came with 22:11 left in the second half, as junior midfielder Martin Hayes--fresh from Dublin, Ireland--took a pass from Eric Labranche and placed it past goalie Jamie Firmage for the only tally of the game.

The first half had all the similiarities of a tennis match, the ball going from one end of the pitch to the other, with neither side taking control. Both clubs played and palled well in between the penalty areas. But, once it came time for a shot, there was either one pass too many, or a good defensive play.

Kayvan Khatami had the only real scoring opportunity for the Minutemen in the first half, but his rifled shot sailed past the side of the net.

Somebody must have liked the script from the first half because the second half wasn't that different. Again, both clubs showed good passing and setting up near midfield, but neither could make that one key pass.

Khatami had another opportunity with about 30 minutes left in the game but had too difficult an angle and couldn't put it past goalie Peter Rothman. After that, the next opportunity went to Providence, and they made it pay off.

LaBranche had a direct free kick from the far left side of the Minuteman goal after a Friar was shaken up. Hayes snuck around to the right hand side of the goal and LaBranche lofted a perfect pass to him and just like that it was 1-0.

The Minutemen started to play a little more aggressively, and the result was Providence College players dropping like flies. UMass did start to control the game and with 4¼ minutes left Herb Sidman took a beautiful pass from Simon Ostrov but blasted it over the goal. UMass was not to get another opportunity as its record dips to 1-6-3.

The Minutemen's next home game is Friday against Rhode Island and then a week from today vs. the always tough UConn Huskies. When asked how tough these games would be, head coach Jeff Gettler could only reply, "They're always tough when you don't score." No more need be said.

Minutemen Notebook

When a team is suffering through a dismal spell, like the University of Massachusetts football team is now, for example, people start talking about tradition and how it helps a losing team.

Everyone talks about tradition when it comes to the UMass football team, and why not? Of the five teams the Minutemen face in their Yankee Conference schedule the Minutemen hold the series lead to date. The University of Rhode Island (28-27-2) is close but the University of Maine wallows behind with a 23-5-1 mark.

So, while the Minutemen enter this week's home game against Maine 1-4 overall they are 0-1 in the slate that matters most, the Yankee Conference record.

No doubt about it, the Minutemen will win their next four Yankee conference games if they want a shot at the title. But, you never know what's going to happen in the six team league because 3-2 records for more than two teams cause problems in the Yankee Conference.

Take last season, for example, when four teams, including UMass finished with 3-2 records. Boston University went to the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs by virtue of a complicated tie-breaker system.

******

Bob Simeone is the leading receiver after five games with 14 catches for 254 yards good for an 18 yard average and two touchdowns.

Tri-captain Gary Freker is averaging 15 yards a catch on nine grabs at tight end and flanker Kevin Jackson is third with seven receptions for 132 yards, an 18 yard average, and one touchdown.

Sophomore quarterback Jim Simeone has completed 44 passes in 103 attempts with three touchdowns and nine interceptions.

Senior fullback Rich Jenkins is the leading ground gainer with 200 yards in 48 attempts. Duckworth Grange is second with 198 yards on 48 carries and Frank Fay is third with 159 yards on 41 attempts.

Tennis routed by UNH, 9-0

By ARIEL FOWLER
Collegian Correspondent

It was hard luck for the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team as it wrestled for a victory but went down to Connecticut 9-0 on Tuesday.

UMass singles players showed good footwork and agility while the doubles teams moved in well to punch back crisp volleys at the net. Their opponents had tremendous depth and consistency which enabled them to overcome the Minutewomen.

"I anticipated a very tough match," said UMass Coach Pat Stewart. "Everyone has been putting out and I've been very happy with their performance."

In singles action, Lil Sullivan demonstrated deep concentration and intensity but was defeated by Donna Bindeglass 6-7, 5-7. Anne Tauger (2) moved rapidly but was ousted 2-6, 1-6 while teammate Anne-Marie Mackertich (3) lost in two sets to Kathy Eckert.

Diana Biagioli (4) ran down ball after ball before falling to Laura Raslousky 0-6, 2-6.

Karen Orlowski (5) fought long and hard before losing to Sue Atkinson 5-7, 3-6 while number six player Karen Krannick was clipped in two sets.

Maureen Hanlon and Jill Nesgos (1) played assertively but were nipped by Meg Howley and Joanne Roberts 4-6, 3-6.

"We were both up for this match and played well together but I feel we haven't played enough to be tournament tough," said Hanlon.

The second doubles team of Trish Sullivan and Laura Morgan had some astonishing shots but were defeated 2-6, 4-6 while Joyce Girasella and Lisa Corbett (3) were routed by Mary Shields and Carrie Silver 2-6, 3-6.

Philadelphia Phillies Garry Maddox bobbles a Fernando Valenzuelo fly ball last week in the division playoffs last week. The Phillies topped Baltimore 2-1 to win game one of the World Series last night.

Phillies take game one, 2-1

BALTIMORE AP - Garry Maddox led off the Philadelphia eighth inning with a home run to break up a World Series pitching duel between John Denny and Baltimore's Scott McGregor and give the Phillies a 2-1 victory over the Orioles in Game One Tuesday night.

The game was attended by 52,204, including President Reagan, and played at tilmes in a light drizzle. It matched two of the finest pitchers in baseball but it was decided in a battle of home runs. Baltimore's Jim Dwyer, one of the Orioles, platoon players, belted a first-inning homer and oldtimer Joe Morgan tied it in the sixth for the Phillies. The victory put the Phuillies one game ahead in the best-of-seven Series, with rookie right-hander Charles Hudson pitching Wednesday night in Game 2 against another rookie right-hander, Mike Boddicker of Baltimore.

State may toast older drinkers

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff
and The Associated Press

It looks as though the drinking age in Massachusetts may be raised to 21, and while some younger University of Massachusetts students were angry about that possibility yesterday, students over 21 years of age seemed to think a new law would be useless.

On a voice vote with no debate yesterday, the Massachusetts House of Representatives passed a bill which will raise the legal drinking age to 21. A second vote is needed to send the bill on to the State Senate. Gov. Michael S. Dukakis told a meeting of college newspaper writers and editors last week that he would support such a measure.

The legal age was dropped from 21 to 18 in 1973 after voters in the 1972 election narrowly approved the change, and then, in 1979, the age was raised back up to 20 under former Gov. Edward J. King.

Backers of the bill passed by the House yesterday said it would save lives.

"We're convinced that it will save lives," Richard W. Hoover, American Automobile Association spokesman, said after the vote.

"It was filed last December...because this is a national policy of the AAA and a national goal of most safety organizations."

UMass students interviewed yesterday disagreed with this theory.

Bill Morano and Bob Peterson, standing at the corner of the Blue Wall bar said yesterday the law could be unfair to 20 year-olds.

"Most of the people who are drinking now are two or three years out of high school," said Morano, 21, a senior in the Stockbridge School of Agriculture. "I don't think it's fair to take away their priveledges."

Peterson, 25, also a senior Stockbridge student, said,"Twenty is a fine age. What does a year matter?"

"It's not going to solve the problems you see on the road," he said.

Mike King, a 19-year-old first-year student, said, "since I'm going to be legal in five days, I think it's unfair."

"I feel that most people who are 20 are getting more responsible, especially since the new drunk driving laws are so strict," King said.

Celeste McCabe, 19, said she thinks "Twenty-one is too old. Twenty is reasonable because it keeps it out of the high schools," McCabe, a sophomore in the School of Management, said. She said the drinking age should be 18 for bars and 21 for liquor stores, "because you can be cut off in a bar."

Rose Longo, 19, said,"It's ridiculous to raise the drinking age.

"They should just leave it at 20," she said. "If you're at college and living on your own you should know enough to take care of yourself."

Some first-year students were more angry than analytical, though.

"It stinks. What else can you say about it?" said George Maklys, 18. "I'd rather see it lowered to 18 or something." Still, Maklys said, getting beer "is easy around here."

Rep. Michael Rea, Jr., D-Billerica, said he thinks the legislature "made a mistake when we lowered it to 18 and we recognized that.

"I think the votes are there in the House," Rea said. "The leadership seems to be in favor of the legislation."

Several bills proposing the hike in the drinking age were sent to a study by the Governmental Regulations Committee, but this version surfaced this week when the House Ways and Means Committee recommended its approval.

Dorm residents are all fired up

By MARY ANNE BEEN
and JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Residents were evacuated for the sixth time since Sept. 25 from Crampton dormitory in the Southwest residential area at 3:30 a.m. Wednesday, University of Massachusetts police said.

UMass police said they are investigating the fires which have occured in the trash rooms of the second and third floors, with the exception of one that was set in the laundry room.

"We have no theory on whether it's one person or two who is setting the fires," said Gerald T. O'Neil, director of the department of Public Safety. "It's very difficult to figure it out."

"The only similarity is that the fires are in the trash rooms," said O'Neil. He said police are now searching for the "common denominator" and are not saying yet whether the fires are related in any other way.

According to Keith Hoyle, UMass Fire Prevention officer, UMass police "have to be careful about what they say right now."

Hoyle said he believes too much press could be dangerous and that the suspect is probably setting the fires for attention. "It's somebody crying for help," he said.

"I'm not at liberty to give details of the investigation," Hoyle said. "We (Environmental Health and Safety) can only investigate the fire itself. Once the fire is determined suspicious, that's breaking the law."

All fires have been small and contained in metal trash cans, according to police reports. Smoke alarms were activated and fires were extinguished quickly. There have been no injuries, police said.

"I just can't believe somebody's doing this. It's crazy," said Marie Powers, 19, a Crampton resident. "Everyone is so frustrated. It's a real inconvenience."

"I, like everyone else, am furious. It's such a hassle, especially getting out of bed at 3:30 in the morning," said Julie Gershon, 19, another Crampton resident. "We're getting pretty sick of it."

Both students said the dorm had a special meeting Tuesday night to discuss the problem. Extra security, with a possibility of 24-hour security, is being anticipated.

"The student's safety is always utmost in our minds," O'Neil said. "We feel we're doing everything we can."

"Doors that weren't locked before are locked now," said Powers. "We have to show picture I.D.s. We can't get in with just a key anymore. A lot of people think it's dumb, this extra security, but until the problem is solved, it's the best that can be done."

This week is National Fire Prevention Week, and Environmental Health & Safety (EHS) is conducting fire safety workshops on campus for residents, custodial and secretarial staffs.

"The staff receives fire training. They put out actual fires with extinguishers," said Dave Beaudin, fire inspector. "We conduct presentations on safety and prevention for the students. We tailor these workshops to each residential area. We make sure the students know evacuation routes and procedures in each building."

Student senators discuss dispute

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night supported a motion calling for the University of Massachusetts administration to cooperate with students in reversing the policy which prohibits University departments from buying from Student Controlled Businesses (SCBs).

With last week's elections providing a full Senate for the first time this semester, the motion made by Student Government Association (SGA) Treasurer Eric Nitzsche passed unanimously.

The motion stated that since "Student Controlled Businesses play a vitally important role in the Student Activities Trust Fund," and since "SCBs should be able to provide goods to any individual or group who desires them," and since the University has a policy "which prohibits University departments from purchasing from SCBs," then "all avenues should be explored to have it reversed."

Official caught taking bribes

TOKYO (AP) — Former Prime Minister Kakuei Tanaka, one of Japan's most powerful politicians, was sentenced to a four-year prison term Wednesday for taking bribes from Lockheed Aircraft Corp. But he defiantly rejected demands he resign from Parliament.

The Tokyo District Court said Tanaka, during his 1972-74 tenure as prime minister, accepted 500 million yen to promote the sales of the U.S. firm's passenger planes in Japan.

The court found him guilty of bribery and foreign exchange violations and fined him the equivalent of the bribes, worth $2.1 million at current exchange rates.

Tanaka quickly appealed the verdict and was released on bail.

Guilty verdicts against Tanaka, his former secretary and three others culminated Japan's most sensational postwar trial, lasting almost seven years and resulting in convictions of 15 political and business figures.

Tanaka, 65, heads the largest faction in the governing Liberal Democratic Party and is immensely popular in his home district of Niigata Prefecture, which has re-elected him several times. His support was instrumental in Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone's rise to power last year.

The opposition, led by the Japan Socialist Party, has demanded Tanaka resign from the lower house of the Diet, Japan's Parliament, because of the scandal.

Israeli shopping spree ends

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) - Israel's frantic pre-devaluation buying spree died down Wednesday, but the finance minister was reported under pressure to resign for his handling of the economic crisis.

Israel radio, Israel television and several newspapers said senior members of the governing Likud bloc were working with top backers to dump Yoram Aridor in favor or Ezer Weizman, the popular former defense minister.

No one would comment publicly on the delicate issue, but Israel radio quoted a source close to Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir as saying he had no intention of dropping ministers from his new government "in the coming weeks."

However, the radio said, Shamir did not rule out changes once his government was stable and firmly in office. Aridor said he did not intend to resign in the face of charges he had mismanaged the economy and lost his credibility.

Two weeks of economic turmoil climaxed Tuesday with a 23 percent devaluation of the Israeli shekel and 50 percent increases in the prices of basic foodstuffs.

Israelis responded by stampeding to grocery stores and electronic goods shops Tuesday in search of items still being sold at pre-devaluation prices. By Wednesday, merchants had raised their prices and there were no bargains left.

Lebanon calls for peace talks

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) —President Amin Gemayel on Wednesday scheduled a "national reconciliation conference" for Oct. 20, but factional violence raged on. Moslem-Communist fighting left 47 dead and 70 wounded in Tripoli and six soldiers were wounded in a Druse attack on the town of Souk el-Gharb.

Although Gemayel set a date for the reconciliation conference, he did not announce a site for the meeting — the major obstacle to holding it. However, he said a preliminary committee should begin working Thursday to set an agenda for the conference.

Meanwhile, there was another break in the cease-fire, with six Lebanese soldiers wounded, two seriously, in the Druse attack on Souk el-Gharb. The town is in the Chouf Mountains overlooking Beirut airport, where the Marine Corps commandant, Gen. Paul X. Kelley, met with U.S. Marine peacekeepers Wednesday.

A Lebanese army spokesman said the army at Souk el-Gharb, nine miles southeast of Beirut, returned fire after its positions were attacked with mortars, small arms and rocket-propelled grenades from surrounding Druse-controlled positions.

In Tripoli, the port 50 miles north of Beirut, 47 people were killed and 70 wounded in fighting between Communist militiamen and the Islamic Unity movement for control of the seaside slums, the state radio said. The second day of fighting left many buildings in flames, it said.

Gemayel's decision on a date for the reconciliation conference was announced in a broadcast that said the site was still being discussed. Gemayel wants the talks to be held in suburban Baabda or Saudi Arabia, but his foes oppose this and want to meet on a ship off the Beirut coast.

The reconciliation talks were called for in a truce that stilled fighting in the central mountains Sept. 26, but squabbling over the site has delayed the start of the dialogue to find a new power-sharing formula for this tiny nation of 4 million Moslems and Christians.

Gemayel, a Maronite Catholic, directed that invitations be sent to senior politicians to attend the reconciliation talks. Including Gemayel, those taking part would include five Maronites, two Sunni Moslems, two Shiite Moslems, and one Druse— Walid Jumblatt.

The cease-fire agreement also calls for the conference to be attended by Saudi Arabia, which with the United States helped arranged the truce, and by Syria, which supports Jumblatt and his anti-Gemayel "National Salvation Front."

One million to attend funeral

SEOUL, South Korea (AP) — At least 1 million mourners were expected to attend the funeral Thursday of 16 South Korean government officials killed in the Burma terror bombing. An anti-communist rally was to follow the service.

Four of the dead were members of the South Korean Cabinet, while others were key aides and advisers to President Chun Doo-hwan, who escaped last Sunday's bomb attack in Rangoon by minutes. In addition to the South Koreans, four Burmese were killed.

The bodies of the Korean dead were returned Tuesday to Seoul. They were taken first to Seoul National University Hospital, where they lay in state until being moved to Yoido Plaza, a vast site on Yoido Island in the Han River where massive meetings often are held.

After the funeral rites and movement of the bodies to the National Cemetery for burial, an anti-communist rally was to be held at Yoido Plaza.

The government officials killed in Rangoon included Suh Suk-joon, who was deputy prime minister and economic planning minister,Foreign Minister Lee Bum-suk, Minister of Commerce and Industry Kim Dong-whie, Minister of Energy and Resources Suh Sang-chul, chief presidential secretary Hahm Pyong-choon, and senior presidential economic adviser Kim Jae-ik.

Chun has blamed Communist North Korea for the Rangoon bombing and Rangoon police say they have captured two "Korean terrorists" and killed a third in their hunt for the attackers, but North Korea on Wednesday denied the accusation, calling it "preposterous and ridiculous."

Neither Chun nor other government officials offered evidence that North Korea carried out the bombing, but the charges fitted the pattern of exchanges that have taken place regulary between North and South Korea since an armistice in 1953 ended the Korean War.

South Korea's military and police forces were put on a special alert shortly after the word of the bombing reached here Sunday, and U.S. forces, numbering about 39,000 in South Korea, were reported to have taken what were termed appropriate defensive precautions.

Test helps stall cancer

BOSTON (AP) -A new blood test that shows whether cancers of the ovaries are growing or shrinking should help doctors pick the best treatment to eliminate the common tumors, researchers say.

Until now, doctors have needed to operate again after the cancers were removed to make sure that traces of the tumors were not growing and spreading.

The new test "will give some early indication as to whether the tumor is getting larger or smaller under treatment," said Dr. Robert C. Bast Jr., who directed a study of the procedure.

About 18,000 women get ovarian cancer each year, and it accounts for 6 percent of all cancer deaths among women.

show prompts reunion

NEW PALTZ, N.Y. (AP) — Since a film about a child abduction was broadcast on network television this week, the phone has been ringing constantly at an agency dedicated to finding missing children.

Child Find Inc. has taken approximately 3,000 calls since the film ended at 11 p.m. Monday night, agency spokeswoman Alice Burn said Wednesday.

"It's phenomenal, but people are still interested," she said. "The calls already have led to one reunion," Ms. Burn said.

Child Find, based in this Hudson Valley community, began receiving the calls after the Monday night broadcast of the NBC-TV movie about Adam Walsh, who was abducted and slain two years ago.

Time capsules dug up; Polish jokes taken out

LONGMEADOW — Workers using a backhoe dug up the town green Wednesday after irate Polish-Americans demanded that a book of Polish jokes be removed from a bicentennial time capsule.

"I think it's wonderful," said Julie Strzempek of nearby Three Rivers as she watched the crews exhume two capsules in this affluent suburb of Springfield.

Mrs. Strzempek, who had vowed to get the book removed— even if "I have to get a shovel and do it myself" — was one of a half-dozen Polish-Americans who gathered on the green and followed the capsules to a Springfield burial vault company to watch their opening.

"If it's permissible, I'd like to burn that book with these matches," said Joseph Kszepka, president of the United Polish-American Organizations of Palmer, another Springfield suburb. The book was inserted by a child, who had been one of many spectators to accept an invitation to put something in the capsules just before they were buried Monday, officials said.

Judge nudges Times

WASHINGTON (AP) — Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor has ribbed The New York Times, reminding the newspaper that the nation's highest court is no longer an all-male club.

In a letter to the editor published in Wednesday's editions, Mrs. O'Connor noted that a recent Times articled referred to "the nine men" of the Supreme Court.

"According to the information available to me, and which I had assumed was generally available, for over two years now SCOTUS (Supreme Court of the United States) has not consisted of nine men," Mrs. O'Connor said.

Newly appointed chaplain challenging sex roles

By MARIANNE A. MORAN
Collegian Correspondent

As a newly ordained minister in the American Baptist Church and as a Protestant chaplain for the United Christian foundation at the University of Massachusetts, Reverend Robin Harden has challenged a common stereotype.

"People are surprised that I am a minister because I don't fit into their sterotype because one, I am a woman. Two, I'm balck and three, I am young," she said.

Although denominations are beginning to acknowledge women as ministers, Rev. Harden said she feels, "ordination is inherently political."

"I think people are intimidated by the changing roles of women," she said.

Rev. Harden graduated from Harvard Divinity School last spring and this fall was ordained by the American Baptist Churches of Massachusetts.

While Rev. Harden said she is aware of sexism on a large scale level, she prefers to deal with it on a personal one.

"You can get in the door but it is important to be aware of what happens once you are in the room," she said.

Her main goals at UMass are to help women deal with issues and to better the quality of their lives, she said.

"There is a great need at UMass to connect. People need to see a greater sense of community. Everyone is looking for their own niche, their own subculture. I am looking to initiate yet another group," she said.

Among her plans are two discussion groups: "Brown Bag Theology," where topics such as liberation, freedom and women are discussed and "Sojourners," a place for open discussion on issues especially pertinent to women.

At the Harvard Divinity School, Rev. Harden focused on New Testament theology and pastoral counseling. Her experience has included hospital visitations, prison counseling, work at a women's center and counseling of other students.

Also during her career at Harvard, Rev. Harden was an assisting minister at the Grant A.M.E. Church in Roxbury, Mass. and a ministerial intern at the Shiloh Baptist Church in Washington, D.C. and at the Charles Street A.M.E. Church in Dorchester, Mass.

She has also been a member in Harambe, a black student fellowship group at Harvard, and a member of the Massachusetts Chapter of the National Conference of Black Seminarians.

Amherst rent control is topic of discussion

By MELISSA KORNFELD
Collegian Correspondent

Rent control in Amherst, a town issue since 1969 and up for vote approximately 10 times, will go to the floor of the Town Meeting once more later this month.

Article 13 of the meeting warrant, unanimously endorsed by the Select Board, proposes that a committee be established to study rent control and "depoliticize" the issue, article author and Board of Amherst Housing Authority Chair Ken Mosakowski said.

Mosakowski's proposal calls for a seven-person board which will research the issue to determine if there is a need for rent control in the area. Mosakowski said he wants to get a cross section of people for the commission who have more than a casual knowledge of the housing market, as they will be responsible for analyzing housing market data.

If the Town Meeting votes in favor of the commission, Mosakowski said he does not know what the commission will recommend.

"Basically we will be establishing a credible commission. If there is a conclusion drawn, it will have some credibility," he said.

One of the questions the committee will explore is whether rent control would have an effect on tax assessments or not, Mosakowski said. Opponents of rent control say if an ordinance is passed, property would deteriorate due to landlord apathy, while proponents of rent control argue that if rent control is not passed, owners could continue to raise rents, Mosakowski said.

Another question to answer is if rent is much higher in Amherst than other area regions. Statistics indicate that Amherst rents are 30 to 35 percent higher than in Hampshire County as a whole, he said. Opponents of rent control argue that rents are not that high in Amherst, but use statistics from eastern Massachusetts for comparison, Mosakowski said. The commission should compare Amherst rents to those in Franklin and Hampshire Counties, he said.

Mosakowski said he felt a rent control study conducted by a commission 10 years ago was brief and not thorough enough. The commission's conclusion was that rent control was not that necessary at that time, he said.

Joanne Levenson, seven year director of the UMass Off-Campus Housing Office said, "I look forward to anything that will generate information on rental rates in town and make information available to the public so they can decide."

Task force to study needs of disabled

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Correspondent

In an effort to service the needs of the approximately 1500 University of Massachusetts students with learning disabilities, an eight-person task force has been formed.

Relatively little has been done in the past to accomodate such students and the Learning Disabilities Task Force is in basically an examination/study phase at present, said Acting Provost for Undergraduate Education Fern Johnson. The group will be investigating the problems the UMass learning disabled population encounters.

"We are not talking about a recent increase in the amount of disabled students at UMass," Johnson said. "Rather it has been an increase in awareness about the problem."

"Much has been done for the physically handicapped," said task force chair and director of the Communication Skills Center, Dr. Shirley DeShields. "But this is the first time any real focus has been given to this part (learning disabled students) of the University population."

The task force will review data they have compiled in this area and they will be looking at the few similar programs other colleges have established, Johnson said.

Johnson said, there are two groups of learning disabled students: those who have already recognized their disabilities and have been in programs and those students having academic difficulties attributed to undiagnosed disabilities. This second group will receive the most attention, she said.

DeShields estimates there are between 1000 and 1500 learning disabled students attending UMass. But she said she feels these numbers may increase in the future because of two pieces of legislation in effect: Chapter 766, which requires special education programs for disabled college students, and Law 344, which has abolished the Scholastic Aptitude Test requirement for college admissions for learning disabled students.

Primary election reveals strong support for King

Five College area students to help at polls

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

In an effort to aid the campaign of Boston mayoral candidate Mel King, the Third World Caucus at the University of Massachusetts is working to send students from the Five College area to work at election polls in November.

George McKenzie, Caucus coordinator and campus task force organizer for Mel King, said 15 UMass students went to Boston Tuesday to work at primary polls and hopefully 500 will be able to go next month "to make Mel's candidacy a reality — his victory."

"We are interested in participating because we think for the first time in historical Boston there is a real chance to get beyond the vestiges of racism in the city," McKenzie said. "We want to unleash a Five College campaign to mobilize students of all creeds, race and class who believe in the inevitability of change to ensure that Mel King will not just be a candidate but that he will become the mayor of Boston."

McKenzie said the similar working class backgrounds of the two contenders, King of the South End and Raymond Flynn from South Boston,will lead to a different kind of leadership for the city.

"It is important that the political tokenism practiced by Mayor White will be put to rest once and for all," he said. "Mel's election is the first step in helping to bring some sanity to a political process, which, if not bankrupt, is on the verge of bankruptcy.

"Having won the primary, we must now unleash an effort that will put to rest the legacy of Kevin White's reign in that city," he said.

"Mel King is not just another black man running for mayor," McKenzie said. "He may be the first black mayor who also stands a chance to become the first socialist mayor in the city of Boston."

Students interested in working at the election or those registered to vote in Boston who need absolute ballots can call the Office of Third World Affairs at 545-2517.

About 30 students polled randomly in the Campus Center Wednesday voiced surprise and overall approval of the results of Boston's primary mayoral election.

While nearly half those interviewed were not aware of the primary or its results, those who responded seemed especially impressed by the victory of Mel King, the only black candidate, of the city's South End. Others noted the competition between David Finnegan of Dorchester and victor Raymond Flynn of South Boston.

"I thought Finnegan would be there instead of Flynn," said senior communications studies major John Folan of Stoneham. "I think King will win it. A large majority of the black population will vote now 'cause they have a chance."

Scott Brill, 21, from Connecticut said, "It will be an interesting race. There are very clearly divided candidates — they won't have similar views. They will be looking for votes from very specific socio-ethnic groups.

"If I were a Boston resident, I'd vote for King," he said.

"We've gone from a Nobel Prize winning photo of the sailing of Old Glory to a probable black mayor of Boston," said 25-year-old English major Dan Opacki. "This shows people can overcome race problems."

Julia Courtney, a 21-year old communications disorders major from Dover, agreed.

"I'm psyched that King won. I think he will represent the needs of Boston as a whole. I hope and think he'll win," she said. "I would vote for him if I could."

"Finnegan was ahead in the polls but I noticed a lot of Flynn ads lately. He ws doing a last minute bid and it paid off," Andrew Dion, 19, of Andover, said. "King seems like a good candidate for the people. It will be a change from the 16-year incumbency of White."

There was one dissenting view in the poll.

"I don't like any of the candidates," said 21 year-old HRTA major William Pierce of Arlington. "I think Kevin White should hve stayed in."

Nitzsche said he hoped the Senate's action on the matter would strengthen his position when he meets with Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance John DeNyse to discuss the problem today.

While the University "legally (has) the right to enforce any restriction on any trust fund," Nitzsche said, "politically, it's another story."

The policy has been in effect since 1979, but student protest was sparked last week when Student Activities Office Business Manager Leslie G. Bridges sent out a memo reinforcing the policy. Nitzsche said his office will be working with the Economic Development Office and SCB managers to oppose the policy.

Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan welcomed new senators at the beginning of the meeting. He explained the role of the senate within the SGA, demonstrated the rules of parliamentary procedure the senate follows in its procedures, and reviewed the rights and responsibilities of senators.

"Being a senator can be fun," Sullivan said, "but it is also a responsibility. The senate allocated a lot of money and senators are expected to really work, to make sure we meet the needs of students on this campus."

After the senate approved the election results for all on-campus residential areas and the commuter area, special approval had to be made for the results of the Greek area elections.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The first exam is traumatizing

When I first came to college I expected that the exams would be fairly difficult. I knew that I'd have to study for a few days in advance to prepare for them. I also figured that I wouldn't do very well on the first one I took and I'd probably be a little nervous about taking it. What I did not expect was the all-out terror and panic that it actually invoked in me.

Gale E. Argentine

The first hints of insecurity hit me when I was waiting outside of the Worcester Dining Commons for one of the women in my class. I looked up at the sky and a slight queasiness began to creep into my stomach. There were dark, ominous clouds everywhere. I somehow got the feeling that they were a sign of how I was going to do on the exam. It was not a good feeling. I found myself waiting for it to start raining on me and I almost began to hope that a bolt of lightning would hit me just so I wouldn't have to take the exam.

I made it to the auditorium. I found a seat and opened my notebook hoping to squeeze in a few last minutes of studying. Nothing looked familiar. It felt like I was reading the material for the first time. I couldn't remember anything. I was starting to blank out. My head began to ache and a slow sinking feeling began to claw at the pit of my stomach. I started to wish that I hadn't eaten any dinner and I wondered where the nearest bathroom was, just in case.

It was 6:29. I hoped that the professor had forgotten about the exam. I looked around the auditorium. People were whispering last minute explanations over the backs of seats. Others were gnawing on pencils or staring off into space. Some were even giving wide-eyed, panic-stricken glances around the room. At least I wasn't the only one who was terrified.

The professor showed up right on time. He walked down the center aisle at 6:30 on the nose. As he passed out the exams, my hands began to sweat and I couldn't stop my leg from shaking. I looked over the first page and started answering the questions. I thought to myself, "No sweat, this is easy. I shouldn't have worried so much." Then I turned the page. I had a sudden feeling of impending doom. The questions looked completely foreign to me. If I possessed the knowledge to answer them, it escaped me at that moment.

I kept trying to stall handing in my paper in the hope that a sudden burst of knowledge would enlighten me with the answers. After ten or fifteen minutes I decided that that wasn't going to happen so I passed in my exam feeling thoroughly depressed. I didn't feel any better after I left the auditorium. In fact, I felt worse than I did when I got there. All the way back to my dorm I kept telling myself that next time it wouldn't be so bad. I hope I was right.

By the way, on the way back to my dorm I remembered three or four of the answers to questions I had guessed on. Perfect timing.

Controversy

Will the bill to raise the drinking age to 21 ever pass the state legislature? Will Mike Dukakis veto it? Does anyone (over 21) care?

Now that Mel King won a spot in the preliminary election for Mayor of Boston, will the city recognize this as a major symbolic victory for the "Rainbow coalition" which voted him in? or will the city get as ugly as Chicago (or Boston a few years ago)? and does King have a chance now that he's running against only one white candidate (who used to be, and still might be, anti-busing)? Did Flynn and Finnegan REALLY split the white vote?

Will Chancellor Duffey's threat to withhold SGA money until an administration-proof (I mean approved) constitution is established by Oct. 28 work? and if it doesn't, will he go through with it? and if he does, will he get away with it? Will students and administration ever come to a compromise? Will the student government ever write their version? Does anyone know about Duffey's proposed new tuition increase? Would the fees be able to stay within the school budget for curriculum improvements? Would students in non "special" programs (non high-tech) get anything from their $50 contribution?

These are 11 questions that have come up with increasing frequency in the recent past. Some might be answered soon, and some might never be answered.

Revolutionary parallels are not there

One of the most common bits of advice offered by liberals and leftist apologists for "popular and indigenous" revolutions throughout the Third World, is that we should remember our own revolutionary heritage, and leave well enough alone.

Even a cursory glimpse of history by the most uneducated would detect the inherent flaw in this "advice." Our revolution hardly resembled many of the revolutions which occured since.

Steven P. Barrett

For one, our revolution was hardly "a people's struggle against the ruling oppressors." It would do great injustice to the memories of Thomas Jefferson and even Thomas Paine to include them with the proletarian masses. Plebians they weren't.

The American Revolution was led by the upper and middle classes who were largely sick and tired of paying inordinately high and capricious taxes to the Crown without any real representation in Parliament. Hardly the setting for a Spartacus, Lenin, Rosa Luxembourg, Castro, Khomeini, or even Nicaragua's Ortega brothers.

Yes, we did receive aid from another nation, to wit France. But unlike our most recent nemesis, Nicaragua, we didn't receive aid immediately, (or even before) the first shots were fired at Lexington and Concord. We had to wait until the British were defeated at Saratoga in 1777 before any substantial aid could arrive. In fact, it didn't arrive until the following year, and only after Benjamin Franklin was able to use our victory at Saratoga to convince the French that we were for real, and worthy of investing in.

On the other hand, the new breed of Sandinistas, formed in 1961 — in Havana — were receiving aid and indoctrination right from the start. So much for the indigenous "popular-based" quality of the Sandinista revolution.

Let's examine other distinguishing factors: post-revolutionary repression, loss of previous rights, and violence. Admittedly, we did tar and feather a few Tories, and they did lose their property when they left for Canada and other parts of the British Empire. Their losses, and embarrassments, however, don't even begin to compare with the losses endured by those overthrown and displaced by the revolutions in France, Russia, Cuba, Vietnam, etc.

Unlike the revolutions which took place in France and the Communist nations, there weren't any massive and repressive schemes to decapitate (both literally and figuratively) the previous ruling elites here in the United States. Primogeniture and royalty were eliminated by legal means. Any doubts? Well then, read Jefferson's memoirs.

Did we engage in a blood-bath for revenge like the lower classes in France, Russia, Germany, Cuba, Vietnam, Cambodia, Iran and Nicaragua? No!

Did we set up massive "re-education camps" and death camps throughout the thirteen states after the signing of the Treaty of Paris in 1783? No! With the exception of the French, the nations listed above are guilty of instituting such camps. But watch, some ignorant soul will try to compare our unfortunate mistake of putting the Japanese-Americans in concentration camps during World War II with other gulag systems.

Granted, the formation of our national constitution took nearly eight years to bring about. And slavery wasn't abolished then either. But in the time span between the Battle of Yorktown in 1781, and the final ratification of the Constitution in 1789, our citizens enjoyed a far greater amount of democracy than their revolutionary counterparts already listed above.

Perhaps there's one major reason for this — our English heritage, (at least insofar as governmental matters are concerned.) Yes, Great Britain was nowhere near as democratic then as she is now. But compared to the autocratic systems in France and Russia, etc.; we at least avoided the self-depracating and cannibalistic violence which occured after the previous ruling system was overthrown. These other nations had no tradition or democratic reform to fall back on for advice. They had no temperament — yet alone tolerance — for democratic rules of self-government. The French and Germans learned to discard despotic tendencies; but the other nations haven't, and it appears unlikely that they ever will.

So, those who wish to use revolutionary parallels to justify non-interference or non-belligerance towards a nation, like Nicaragua for instance, (which spat in our eyes after receiving $118M in post-revolutionary aid) do so at their own peril. The case of Nicaragua is fitting to discuss concerning the "indigenous" quality of their revolution, and others in Central America. Consider these words of Commandante Humberto Ortega, and then ask yourself if the Sandinistas really represent an "indigenous" body: "...on one side the camp of imperialism, the camp of capitalism headed by the United States...and on the other side the socialist camp, composed of distinct countries of Europe, Asia, and Latin America, with the Soviet Union as their vanguard."

Random Notes

— On Chemical Dumping —

I work for MassPirg as a door-to-door canvasser. Many people dread that kind of thing, but I could shatter some of the myths associated with the job I do. I could say how great it is not being "supervised." How refreshing it is to work outdoors; how beautiful it can get as the sun sets each evening. I won't dwell on it, though.

I will shatter your consciences with something else — some interesting feedback I got from a person I met.

He works in the computer field and he seemed to be an educated, reasonable man. As he wrote out a check for the year's membership, he told me:

"I work at ..., and we have some regular dealings with the chemical industry. I know how big they are."

"One day I was bullshitting with a guy from '...' Chemical. I was acquainted with him not very well, but I asked him 'C'mon, what do you people do with all that hazardous waste material?'"

He answered quietly and seriously, "Well, sometimes when it snows...when it snows we load a tanker and haul it to Vermont and back, leaking the stuff all the way."

The computer man looked me in the eye and said, "That's why I'm giving you money. If you can do anything to solve this kind of thing, it'll be worth it to me. There are places on that road where nothing will grow."

He went on about the Mafia-type element involved, and the relative cheapness of the operation. He described how these criminal operators approach a rural farmer with the threat of "raping your daughter in the worst possible way" unless the man agreed to dig a hole in a distant field.

All of this I picked up from the computer man who supposedly got it from the Representative from '...' Chemical.

Let's assess the situation so far. Would it be possible for a tanker truck to trickle a full load of hazardous waste onto and off of I-91 on a snowy night?
The answer is — Yes.

Is there a disposal means cheaper than the legitimate, government-approved method? The dumpers at Love Canal, before they became exposed, would have voted Yes.

Is there a group to do this dirty work? Is there a quasi-legal organization that exists solely for the purpose of profiting from sinful demands, including those of corporate America?

Who controlled the bootlegging? The drug trade? The gambling casinos? The government? Yes. The Mob.

The rape clause sounds, and is, especially distasteful. So are the torture methods that occur, even in America.

When money is involved, the greed of humans can never be underestimated.

Maybe it's time for some more concern.

Thinking through the abortion issue

My mother always jokingly referred to my younger brother and me as unplanned, "mistakes." But we knew she loved us and never took her seriously. If she'd meant it seriously, I might have been aborted and then I wouldn't be a student at this university to tell you about it.

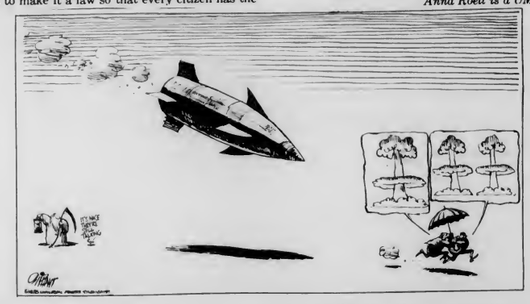
A lot of women, married, or single, are surprised to find out they've become pregnant. Isn't life full of wonderful surprises? Given the opportunity whether she "wants" the baby or not is a strange way of welcoming a new life.

Anna Roell

I went to listen to Dr. Mildred F. Jefferson, a general surgeon from Boston University and the president of the Right to Life Crusade, last night speak on the topic of abortion. I guess I'd always straddled the fence on the subject, but this articulate woman helped me to think it through further and make a stand. We all need to; this is a basic right to life. When it comes to life and death, being wishy-washy and sitting in the middle of the road won't get you very far.

Dr. Jefferson reminded us that the creation of life takes place before birth. "The point of transmission of human life is at the time of fertilization (conception)." The Geneva Declaration of 1948, was composed by the World Medical Association and it states: "I will maintain the utmost respect for human life from the time of conception." Remember being taught, "Respect your elders?" Respect life...of all ages.

We're all so busy planning our lives the way we'd like them to go. If a child comes along and disrupts the organization we're given the option whether or not to accept it.



The high court in this country is oscillating back and forth on the abortion issue, whether or not to legalize it. They want to make it a law so that every citizen has the right to choose: to keep life, or to kill it. Those "citizens" usually exclude the father's choice, and totally eliminate the youngest member of the family as counting at all. What might be considered legal, doesn't necessarily make it moral.

In order to justify abortion, one needs to regard it in light of some absolute moral laws; to redefine what is moral and what is not. To leave it as a choice or personal decision, only serves to further confusion on the issue. Is it killing or is it not? There cannot be two correct answers. Dr. Jefferson maintains that we are part of a "Judeo-Christian sanctity to life." How much do you value life according to your standard? People don't have control over their own destiny; how can they have the right to choose for someone else? If we do indeed have a soul, then every part of a woman's body is filled with that soul.

It was back in the late 1940's that a young doctor set out with a group of his contemporaries to strike down restrictive abortion laws. Dr. Bernard Nathanson, a New York obstetrician and gynecologist and co-founder of the National Abortion Rights Action League, admits that: "In those years the knowledge concerning the fetus was sketchy at best." Dr. Nathanson goes on to explain, "The science of fetology which emerged in 1972 was still unformed, and, in fact, even unanticipated." Today, after performing 75,000 abortions and have presided over a fetology unit for years, Dr. Nathanson has learned otherwise: "I came to believe that the systematic destruction of the fetus was nothing more or less than a crime."

Every twenty seconds a child is aborted in the United States. Last year, one-and-a-half million babies had their right to life taken away from them. We fight to save the whale and protect baby seals; how can we, at the same time, be a society that is destroying its survival instinct? As Dr. Jefferson described us, "We're on our way to becoming extinct."

Letters

Chastity, not birth control

To the Editor,

This letter is in response to Miriam Zoll's column on abortion and birth control (Collegian, 10-11). Before I begin, I would like to clarify that I am not a Catholic and this letter is not intended to discuss the pros and cons of abortion or birth control. It is, however, an attack on Ms. Zoll's logic.

In her column, Ms. Zoll condemns her friend's Catholic morality for 1) getting her pregnant and 2) for not letting her get an abortion. That is ridiculous! Catholicism advocates premarital chastity, and in only one case that I can think of has chastity ever led to pregnancy. And condemnation for not having an abortion! Instead, her friend should be congratulated and supported for her strength of character for not taking the "easy way out". By keeping the baby the young lady has stuck by her convictions and morals, despite the potential hardships that she may face as a single mother.

In general, Ms. Zoll, let's give credit where credit is due, or in this case blame where blame is due. It was not Catholic policy which caused the mishap, but the friend's and her boyfriend's irresponsibility.

No racist soldiers here!

To the Editor,

As one who spent three years in the military, I found Dakin Ferris's description of "institutional racism" in the military in his column of October 4th to be far removed from the reality which I experienced. Mr. Ferris would have us believe that in the military minorities are placed in the stockades and then given dishonorable discharges merely because of their minority status. In contrast, according to Mr. Ferris, whites are not sent to the stockade, no matter what they do. Fortunately, however, this description bears little relation to military reality. During my enlistment I knew of many individuals who were sent to the stockade, both black and white, and they were invariably obviously guilty of the crimes for which they were convicted, most commonly stealing or drug dealing. In addition, I never knew of one person who was "let off" when caught in such acts. While it is true that minorities make up a disproportionately high percentage of military prison populations this is clearly the result of factors other than racism.

We're deaf, dumb, and blind

To the Editor,

I had an experience which clearly made me see the mood existing on the UMASS campus on Sept. 29. The event was a demonstration outside the Student Union against the presence of United Technologies Corporation on campus. I had been on the organizing committee and was prepared to speak on behalf of the University Peacemakers.

It was a beautiful fall day for the demonstration and two hundred people came to listen. When it was my time to speak, I spoke of the paradise that we could create on earth if we reverse the arms race and replace it with a social system using alternative energy, communal living, and holistic health care practices. Technology is here to feed everyone nutritiously, shelter everyone comfortably, and educate everyone peacefully. Our technology is not here to destroy civiliation. If we can organize our talents together around the idea of creating world peace we will gain the power to change the war hungry governments terrorizing our world. Now we must live to fulfill this dream so that the next generation can further dream into the future.

With a student population of 25,000, two hundred people seemed like a small amount of students to oppose an international military corporation, the second largest defense contractor. Where were the educators and students? This was the most important event happening on campus and the masses on their way from classes walked by the speakers as if there was no one there. Some organizers gave out leaflets about UTC, but many students refused to read them. Is education failing society? Has it made students deaf, dumb, and blind to the future of civilization?

After the rally 30 of us went to the 9th floor of the Campus Center where UTC was having its conference. Many protesters yelled "UTC out, UTC out." The Campus Center officials barricaded doors in the middle of the floor so we could not walk to the end. As they were closing the door one student had his foot in the door to keep it from closing. A Campus Center official yelled, "You better get your foot out of here before I cut it off."

Another protester said, "This is our campus and we don't want war-makers on our campus." The official said UTC paid for the rooms therefore they were entitled to conduct business like anyone else. When students asked about what kind of business UTC was doing at the university, the officials would only say that they were training. When we said we had a right to know what they were training, they ignored us. All the protesters began questioning the meaning of academic freedom since it obviously didn't exist on the 9th floor of the Campus Center.

What I learned from the experience was that the majority of students at UMASS are not politically aware or committed. They are slaves to their own blind appetites and loyalties. Their families, state, religion, and consumer lifestyles came before freedom. Those of us who are free spiritually still have to deal with the physical slavery of getting money to pay for the human necessities of life.

I admit the problem is immense but we can at least have a vision. Educators must give such a vision so we can begin to see the direction the future must take in order for the planet to survive. Then students will be able to speak about their individual roles in the new world society, no longer allowing the corporation to corrupt and dictate our lives.

The little known Student Union Gallery gets a sharp new look.

An improved S.U. Gallery

By CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

The many technical improvements that have been made in the Student Union Gallery (located on the main floor of the S.U.) have greatly increased the potential of the gallery.

"We've upgraded the gallery," director Marilyn Coplin said. Professional quality gallery walls, new lighting, and new curtains are some of the changes that have been made in an effort to draw new viewers to the gallery.

Coplin, a graduate student interning as manager of the S.U. Gallery, stressed the "by students for students" philosophy that she and others at the gallery work under.

"We try to reach a broad base of the campus population through the universal appeal of art. By mounting works in progress and BFA-MFA exhibits, as well as outside shows, we hope to attune people to what's going on with the arts on campus," she said.

There will be a dedication of the new gallery on October 16. From the 16th through the 28th the Student Union Gallery will feature the latest work of Susan Bass. Bass's show will include works in fabric and free-standing sculpture, such as her well-known banner hanging in the Campus Center Music Room.

Liquid Sky: a fascinating glimpse of hell

By ALLISON MALOON
Collegian Correspondent

Liquid Sky. However do you describe Liquid Sky? For lack of a better way, I guess I'll start with the plot. Liquid Sky, loosely labeled a science-fiction flick, is the more-than-imaginative story of aliens from outer space who come to New York City in search of heroin. They set their power upon a new wave fashion model, Margaret, whose punk subculture crowd constantly turn on to herion, (an up-to-the minute nickname for which is liquid sky). The greedy aliens are also searching for a euphoria-producing chemical which is secreted by the brain during orgasm. Margaret, who suffers a constant onslaught of rapists and "lovers", seems to the aliens a perfect way of obtaining this chemical. In the end, the aliens obtain Margaret as well, as she floats away, cloudlike and ceremoniously, into their spaceship.

Despite the implausability of the plot, which is reminiscent of Cat People, Liquid Sky isn't a movie, but more of a phenomenon. It is at times humorous, but often disturbing in its imagery. Russian emigrant director Slava Tsuckerman visciously satarizes the narcissist life led by those engulfed in this self-centered subculture. From the beginning the audience is manipulated by Tsuckerman, whose script makes the punks seem more alien than the aliens themselves. The eerie, electronic music rings of outerspace and the alien imagery. Two particularly chilling songs are performed by Margaret's lover, Adrianne (Paula Sheppard), a powerful, witchy songstress, whose style is a combination of Patti Smith and Lene Lovitch.

The fantastic photography and special effects are the result of Yuri Neyman. The film alternates between conventional photography and animation. This animation consists of exciting, unusual, fluorescent kaleidoscopic effects that splash on screen after one of Margaret's lovers achieves orgasm and is simultaniously zapped away.

Part of the sucess of Liquid Sky lies in the performance of Anne Carlisle, a haunting, androgynous actess who also co-wrote the film's screenplay. In addition to the role of Margaret, she also plays Jimmy, a Bowie-type sullen male model, who is eventually overtaken by the alien. Carlisle's dry, almost monotone acting style stereotypes the self-centered world that Tsuckerman seems todespise.

This movie's promise is impossibly far out, yet that glimmer of reality exists in it. As you leave the theatre, you find yourself gazing upwards at penthouses, wondering what's really happening. Liquid Sky, called the key to heaven in the movie, leaves you feeling chilled and bewildered, more like you've just seen the key to hell and frightened because you were fascinated by the view.

Live Wire
by Dave Chevan

With a slew of big name acts coming to the valley next week, the bill of band fare for this weekend seems skimpy. But don't be fooled, there are several good shows this weekend for anyone with an ear to the sounds.

Tonight, the Incredible Casuals, an offbeat NRBQ-like unit will be at the Hangar One, and Bratt will perform at the Wok. Friday night's big concert features Steve Smith, the monster drummer from the platinum group Journey. Smith is also an incredible fusion drummer and has played with the likes of Jean Luc Ponty. He'll be at Danny's Place. If you don't want to travel all the way to the sticks, Mitch Chakour, former guitarist with Joe Cocker is at the Hangar. Country fans might want to inspect Wailin' Dave and the Blue Dogs at the Avenue.

Saturday night the Iron Horse features a cult folk, George Gritzbach. Nearly everyone has heard his material covered by the "big" names, but the best way to hear these tunes is by the writer himself. My personal favorite Gritzbach song is a slightly obscure number, No Spare Parts [for Broken Hearts]. For those who want to dance, I'd suggest Billy and the Buttons over at Sheehan's where the dance floor is small but congenial.

Those concerts I mentioned earlier start this Sunday with an on campus double whammy. Jack DeJohnette and his Special Edition will perform at Bowker Auditorium. DeJohnette is one of the big names in jazz drumming to emerge from the sixties. His line-up is an all-star who's who in modern jazz, featuring Howard Johnson of the Saturday Night Live Band, and David Murray on sax. At the Bluewall, John Mayall, blues specialist, will perform with Canned Heat.

Other shows next week include Ellen McIlwaine at the Hangar Oct. 20, Wilson Pickett at the Rusty Nail on the 21, George Carlin at the Nail on the 26, and Eddy "Electric Avenue" Grant at the Fine Arts Center on October 27.

And now (drum roll please) the amazing Arts/Livewire Trivia Contest! Our prizes this year are better than ever. First prize is a pair of tickets to the November 3 Hot Tuna and Bobby and the Midnites concert (courtesy C Group Concerts), and there will be runner up prizes of new album releases by your favorite artists. The questions are rated by difficulty from 2-10. There is a possible 60 points. Send your answers in no later than Wednesday Oct. 19 to the Arts Desk, UMass Daily Collegian, Rm 113 Campus Center. In case of a tie, we will hold a drawing. Best of luck to all.

Drum extraordinaire Jack De Johnette will bring his all-star lineup to Bowker Auditorium on Oct. 16.

1. Only two Beatles performed on the song "Ballad of John and Yoko". Who were they? 2 points
2. Who "discovered" the Jackson Five? 3 points

4. Two eyes was simultaneously the drummer for one eye and no eyes, identify the eyes. (Hint: two eyes was also the drummer for George Benson) 10 points
5. Who was the Sex Pistols' manager? 2 points
6. What Carl Perkins song catapulted Elvis Presley to fame and fortune? 3 points
7. The Mod scene in England was dominated by two bands. One of them, the Who, is still with us (to some extent) today.
   A. Name the other band, and their members. 10 points
   B. What happened to this group, and who were the two famous new members? 10 points
8. Before Chrissie Hynde formed the Pretenders, she was a member of an infamous British punk band. What was the group's name? 4 points
9. What famous rock star was rejected from the Monkees because he had bad teeth? 3 points
10. Who sang on Python Lee Jackson's only hit, In A Broken Dream? 8 points

UMass spikers shoot down Hawks

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

After the University of New Haven won their second straight game from the University of Massachusetts volleyball team last night to take a 2-1 lead in their best three of five match, several spectators left the match.

After all, New Haven had stolen away all the momentum that UMass had built in winning the first game and the Minutewomen just didn't have their defense up to par.

Those several spectators missed quite a comeback as the Minutewomen regrouped and took the next two games to win the match 3-2, last night at the NOPE gym.

"I'm really proud of them," said a very happy head coach Elaine Sortino. "They did everything that they had to. That's a sign of a great team."

UMass took a while to get into the swing of things. They came from behind in game one and thanks to some hustling plays by Sally Maher and Debbie Cole, UMass took a tough 15-12 win.

However, in games two and three, New Haven built a wall that the Minutewomen found hard to breach. Wanda Bacon (5'10), Marie Kunda (5'8) and 5'7 Geraldine Mattaur made life tough for UMass with numerous blocks and quite a few spikes of their own.

Faced with elimination, it was Massachusetts turn to block out New Haven. UMass ran out to a 7-3 lead and thanks to some fantastic defensive play- blocks by Mickey Barys and Ellen Deady and super digs by Maher and Cole — the Minutewomen romped 15-3 to set up the decisive fifth game.

"The defense made some key adjustments," explained Sortino. "They started to read the offense. And the block came back for us."

The two teams struggled to a 6-6 tie before UMass, with Patty Grant serving, scored five unanswered points to take a 11-6 lead. Deady finished the hard fought battle with an ace to give UMass a 15-10 win and the match.

"This is definitely the nicest win since I've been here," said Sortino. "It was a hard fought match between two good teams."

With the win, UMass moves to 19-5 and is ranked fifth in the Northeast, division II. New Haven is ranked third in division II. The Minutewomen hope to move up in the poll next week and should. New Haven also beat top ranked Army earlier this week.

The key to this win was the defensive play of UMass. They dug the ball well and kept a lot of rallies going with diving digs and heads up play. Coupled with a powerful spiked by Maher and Barys, UMass did the job, and those spectators missed quite an ending.

Women's soccer faces 19th ranked Chiefs today

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

The fourth ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team will face another tough test this afternoon as they face nineteenth ranked Springfield College on Boyden Field at 3:00 p.m.

"They haven't won many games (3-4-1 record) this year, but that is misleading. They are a very strong, physical team, who like to play a kick and run type of game," said UMass coach Kalekeni Banda of his opposition.

The Minutewomen bring an impressive 5-1-2 mark and a top rated defense that has only allowed three goals all season, and not more than one in any game.

"The defense must play really well for us to do well, and the offense will come through. We must play a slow down game, almost to a walking pace if we can, and try to play more of a passing game. If we have to run a lot, it will be a long day," said Banda.

Debbie Harackiewicz who has been out of action the last two weeks with a broken nose, has looked good in practice and might play either today or on Sunday against Cortland State. Jeanne Paul who shutout UNH earlier this week will again be in the nets for the Minutewomen.

Another freshman goalie Lisa Ellis had been minding the nets earlier and has compiled a 0.43 goals against average.

UMass is led in scoring by sisters Ellen and Christine Taggart, as well as Lori Stukes, all with six points so far. Tri-captain Stacey Flionis follows with five, and Jamie Watson rounds out an otherwise balanced scoring attack with four points.

"This is like a second season for us, and things are starting to get tough. We have a very good team, but we have to play heads up soccer back to back to still be in the thick of things," added Banda.

Women harriers topple NU

By M.E. Murray
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's cross-country team overran the opposition this past weekend, capturing five of the top seven spots and defeating host Northeastern University by a score of 22-33. The low score wins in cross-country.

NU's Mia Mahedy pulled a Joan Benoit and held a race of her own, covering the 3.1 mile course in 17:58, winning by over a half-a-minute. Minutewomen Dana Mikesell, Kim Baker and Chris Pratt finished second, third and fourth respectively and were followed closely by Deirdre Doyle (sixth) and Sally Howes (seventh).

Sophomore Doreen Erickson averaged a solid 6:31 per mile and finished a strong sixth among the UMass women. The team will travel to Worcester for the Holy Cross Invitational Saturday.

The UMass men's cross-country, although showing some improvement overall, could not put it all together as they finished third behind Dartmouth and the University of Connecticut at Hanover, N.H. on Saturday.

"We are getting better each week," said Coach Ken O'Brien, "but we are still a notch below where we want to be."

The team had no illusions of beating Dartmouth, who captured the top three places, set a course record (22:25, 4.5 miles), and simply dominated the competition, but they had hoped to show better against UConn, a team O'Brien felt the Minutemen match up against.

Rod LaFlamme and Rick Doiron finished top among UMass runners, with a seventh and eighth, while Tom Carleo came in 11th, missing tenth place by less than one second.

"It was a fast race," said O'Brien, and we did have improved performances but not as strong as I had hoped."

The men will be in Boston Saturday, running against Northeastern and Lowell Universities in Franklin Park.

Stickers undefeated, top NU

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

"It (the game on artificial turf) wasn't as fast paced as when we played Springfield or North Carolina," University of Massachusetts field hockey coach Pam Hixon said, "but we still had a good day."

The fourth ranked Minutewomen defeated unranked Northeastern on Tuesday, 3-0, on the turf in Boston to raise their record to 9-0-1. It was a good day for UMass.

The stickers outshot their opponents 21-4, and out tallied in corners 12-6. But numbers don't matter.

The score was 2-0, UMass, at the half. Back Carol Progulske and forward Diane Kobel each scored an unassisted goal in the first half. Both were taken off a rebound after the initial shot.

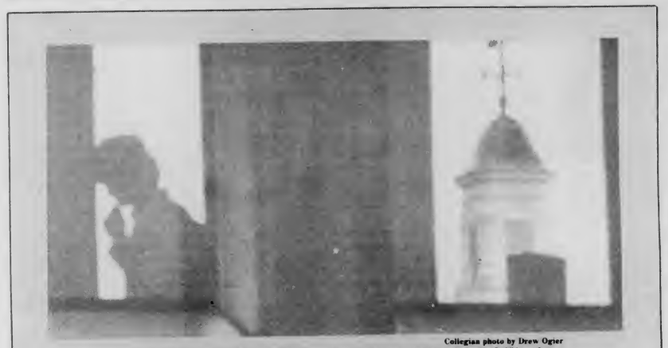
"It's nice to have a player like Diane who can come off the bench like she did and score like she did," Hixon said.

"She (Kobel) came off the bench kind of like a secret weapon," Hixon said. "That's nice."

Hixon also praised the UMass defensive effort against Northeastern.

"We definitely played well defensively," she said. "Meagan (Donnelly) and Carol(Progulske) both had especially good days."

Forward Chris Kocot scored the third goal for the Minutewomen, also unassisted, off a rebound from an initial shot.



"We used our stick work well," Hixon said.

This game also saw senior goalie Patti Shea post her seventh shutout of the season. Shea has allowed only one goal so far this season.

It was a good day for UMass. Let's hope the weekend goes just as well. UMass travels to Philadelphia to face ninth ranked Temple and second ranked Old Dominion.

Depression a possible campus epidemic

By DAVID MUNIZ
Collegian Staff

Midterm exams and bad weather can be enough to make anyone feel depressed, an illness which, according to a University of Massachusetts mental health expert, could be currently considered a campus epidemic.

"Right now there is more pressure because students fall behind in their work and then all of a sudden they get behind with exams," said Dr. David P. Kraft, director of the University Health Services mental health division.

Kraft said many factors can cause a person to feel depressed.

"The weather also can add to depression. The fact that summer is over, and the prospect of fall and winter coming can be especially depressing--except for skiers, he was quick to add.

At this time of year, everyone gets kind of frazzled at the same time. Kraft explained friends who are normally attentive to problems may not be able to listen because they have enough trouble dealing with their own.

"Most people can handle one problem at a time. It's when two or three major problems come up at once that it

UMass budget holdup persists

By STEPHEN HOWE

Collegian Correspondent

Budget problems persist for the University of Massachusetts despite last week's announced approval of the $114.3 million budget for the 1983-84 academic year.

The Board of Regents of Higher Education and the Senate Ways and Means committee worked out a compromise budget last Wednesday, but the University has not yet received any funds, said Vice Chancellor for Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse. Funds from a 30 percent allocation granted by the Legislature in June "are running out," DeNyse said, but "we've still got some left," and UMass personnel will be paid this week.

The University should receive the full budget allocation by early next week, DeNyse said.

The money has been held up in Boston by state budget procedures, according to Mary Spolidoro, director of Budget for the Regents. Spolidoro said the State Secretary of Administration and Finance must sign the appropriation "before the State Comptroller can actually put the money on the books."

Paul Page, director of financial affairs for UMass, said the budget holdup continues to make planning difficult and could raise costs.

"Planning is just a mental exercise until the money gets here," Page said. Because of the budget delay the University has had to sign short-term contracts for equipment and maintenance, and this will cost the University money that is usually saved on discounts given for full-year contracts, he said.

Page said money is tight, but "somehow we've been able to squeeze by. It hasn't been easy."

Meanwhile, purchase orders have been piling up in the accounting offices, according to Director of Procurement Jake Bishop. These orders cannot be processed until the money is received, Bishop said, and this means bills are not being paid and equipment is not being purchased.

Womonfyre Books not just a bookstore

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

The owners of Womonfyre Books in Northampton never thought they would be more than just a bookstore. But since they opened five years ago they have become a women's center "by default."

Kiriyo Spooner, co-owner of Womonfyre, said the bookstore is "a business that aims to serve women" in a town without a women's center.

"Sort of by default we do a lot of women's center-type activities," she said.

Women who work at the bookstore make referrals to social agencies, recommend doctors, and sometimes do emergency crisis counseling for women over the phone.

"It's something we never expected to get into. We feel somewhat uncomfortable because we don't have the training."

But something Spooner and her partner Jil Krolik did want to get into was selling "non-racist and non-sexist books that spoke to people's needs and interests and not simply the latest bestsellers."

Spooner said she and Krolik decided to open their own bookstore after working in both general and women's bookstores in Michigan. She said they could not carry the types of books they wanted in the general bookstores "because they wouldn't make money," and that the business end in the women's bookstores, which were run by cooperatives, operated too slowly.

"We felt you could carry progressive books and still make a success as a business," she said.

Newman Center celebrates anniversary

By STEPHEN GEIGER
Collegian Correspondent

The Newman Center at the University of Massachusetts will celebrate its 20th anniversary of service this Sunday with a televised ceremony for students, faculty and residents of Amherst.

Bishop Leo E. O'Neill of the Springfield Diocese will preside over the 10 a.m. mass to be televised on channel 22.

The Center was first dedicated on May 15, 1963 but Oct. 15 was chosen for the ceremony so it would not confliet with final exams and to accomodate the television station, said the Rev. John Smegal, a Newman priest.

When the Newman Center was founded, and financed by Bishop Weldon through the Catholic charities of the Diocese of Springfield, the University had a student population of 7,676, tuition was $200 per year, dormitories were single-sex, and the Collegian was published tri-weekly. Now there are 24,949 students, 49 per cent of whom are Catholic, and Newman has grown as well. From daily and weekend masses to prayer and older student groups, events like hayrides and the annual "Run for Ritter," and with its study lounges and snack bar, the Newman Center is open to all community members, regardless of religious affiliation.

The Newman Center now in its 20th year of service at UMass.

Rev. J. Joseph Quigley, director of Newman since its inception, said he sees the Newman Center as "an island of humaneness" in an age characterized by "convulsive growth."

Quigley said that following the two world wars, society became "uprooted", families divided, traditional values were challenged.

During his 20 years in Amherst, Quigley noted "real anger" in the 1960s, the result of an alienated youth distrusting and rejecting the establishment. There was more constructive anger in the 1970s, he said, and today, with economic instability and technology changing the structure of society, there's a new pragmatism, evident on campus in students' great concern for job security.

But, with the "terrible money crunch," Quigley voiced his concern that "humanitarian desires" are being compromised. People today, he says, having often been "enslaved by neglect" in the past and not taught responsibility for each other, are suffering a widespread loneliness. "the number one problem on campus."

Smegal, with Newman for four years, points out that "though the social atmosphere has certainly changed, people's needs remain the same."

On this anniversary, Quigley said he is stressing the role of the Newman Center as an "atmosphere of warmth," the faith of Catholicism at its base, yet with the purpose of simply spreading the non-denominational "golden rule" of "doing unto others as one would have others do unto oneself."

William P. Clark succeeds Watt

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan on Thursday named his national security adviser, William P. Clark, to succeed James Watt as secretary of the interior.

"He is a God-fearing Westerner, a fourth-generation rancher, a person I trust and I think he will be a great secretary of the interior," Reagan said.

The president made the announcement at the end of a talk to women leaders of Christian religious organizations.

"I think he is succeeding a very fine secretary of the interior," the president said.

Reagan told his audience that "I want to share with you a decision that I've just made. After examining the records of more than two dozen fine potential nominees for the position of secretary of the interior, I have decided to turn once again to someone who has been a trouble shooter and a result-oriented professional.

"So it is with a good deal of pleasure that I tell you that I have asked my assistant for national security affairs, Judge Bill Clark, to be my nominee for this cabinet position," Reagan said.

Clark once was Reagan's chief of staff when Reagan was governor of California. Reagan appointed him in 1973 to the California Supreme Court.

Rent-a-casket for Halloween parties

INDIANAPOLIS (AP) — With Halloween coming up, Charles Owens' company has a lay-away plan fit for just about anyone alive — rent-a-casket.

"Theatrical companies, office parties, birthdays, country clubs," Owens said Thursday. "We rent for any purpose you would dream of — except burial. Our units are brand new and we wouldn't want to get into that end of it."

Since he first placed a tiny newspaper ad a week ago, Owens — "an auctioneer by trade" — estimates he's had 65 responses. The ad says in capital letters "CASKET RENTALS" and gives no other information but two phone numbers.

"The results have been fantastic," he said. "Within the first four days of the ad, we had a lot of phone calls. People are coming in. Every now and then, someone will call to see if this is a legitimate business."

The caskets come in three sizes and rent from $75 to $25 for 24 hours.

The smallest, says Owens, "is animal size," the medium one is about 4¼-to-5 feet and the largest "would be big enough for an average body."

Owens, 35, said he got the rental idea after liquidating "one of the larger funeral homes in the city.

"We had some caskets left over and my two partners asked what we were going to do with the caskets. They started coming up with some ideas, and I said 'Why don't we rent them?' The three of us talked it over and decided we could make a go of it," he said.

Owens, who expects "somewhat of a letdown" in business after Halloween, has 14 rentable caskets, but only six or seven were available Thursday. The rest were rented. He estimated he has rented "at least 10 caskets" since he started, but doesn't want to say how much money he's made.

Candidates agree on arms control

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. AP - Presidential aspirants John Glenn and Walter Mondale defended their arms control records Thursday night and used a televised debate among all seven Democratic candidates to wrestle for the party's center.

"My personal views are consistent all the way through," former Vice President Mondale said in response to a question by Sen. Glenn, D-Ohio. Mondale said he privately opposed the Carter Administration's policy on building an MX missile.

"Both as a senator and vice president, I think my record on arms control is superior," Mondale said, adding that he campaigned on behalf of the SALT II weapons treaty.

Questioned about his opposition in the Senate to SALT II, Glenn said the Startegic Arms Limitation Treaty with the Soviet Union was flawed by the lack of verification.

"It could not be monitored," Glen said, adding that members of the military Joint Chiefs told him privately they had doubts as well.

The hour-long debate, sponsored by the Massachusetts Citizens Coalition for Arms Control and Harvard University's Institute of Politics, was televised live from the John F. Kennedy School of Government at Harvard.

"There is no greater test of this nation's political system than our ability in the 1980's to stop and reverse the nuclear arms race," Sen. Gary Hart of Colorado said.

Sen. Alan Cranston of California repeated his strong indorsement for a nuclear freeze. "I would seek to stop everything instantly" if elected, he said.

Former Sen. George McGovern of South Dakota supported a temporay unilateral nuclear weapons freeze by the United States, saying the United States had enough weapons to risk such a strategy.

Sen. Fritz Hollings of South Carolina said the nation needs better conventional military force. "We are over-prepared for nuclear and under-prepared for conventional," he said.

"We must avoid the use of even one nuclear weapon," said former Florida Gov. Reubin Askew. He also argued for a conventional weapons buildup.

Reagan, Bush to be candidates for re-election as of Monday

WASHINGTON — President Reagan gave the goahead on Thursday for the establishment of a campaign committee for the re-election of himself and Vice President George Bush. Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., who will head the effort, said "I have no doubt ... that Ronald Reagan will be a candidate for re-election."

Laxalt, the general chairman of the Republican party and the chairman of both previous Reagan campaigns for the presidency, said he would formally establish the re-election panel on Monday and file the necessary documents with the Federal Election Commission.

Also on Monday, the president will sign a letter formally authorizing the step, Laxalt said, noting that "He will legally be a candidate at that point."

Laxalt spoke to reporters in the White House driveway after Reagan gave him the green light. The White House press staff took pains to call attention to his visit.

He said that Reagan would delay a full declaration of his candidacy until the current congressional session ends, probably shortly before Thanksgiving.

Legal secretary in Florida illegally practices law for poor

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — To Rosemary Furman, it's a matter of "giving the people back their courts." To the Florida Bar, it's a case of practicing law without a license for which she should be punished.

Whatever the issue, Ms. Furman's business of providing legal forms to the poor and illiterate for a fraction of the fee a lawyer might charge has generated controversy.

She now faces a four-month prison term for violating a 1979 order by the Florida Supreme Court to stop giving legal advice. She will go to federal court next month to get a jury trial in her battle.

Ms. Furman, a 56-year-old widow, says her 22 years as a legal secretary and court reporter left her with an overriding impression: "Lawyers are stupid."

§They spend their time, she said, getting secretaries and assistants to fill out forms, check details, file papers and perform other routine chores that require little training and no hefty fees.

§If the forms were readily available, 70 percent of the court case load and lawyers' revenue would be eliminated, she contends.

Eleven years ago, she opened Northside Secretarial Service in Jacksonville. The business, she says, has helped thousands of people gain access to the courts — for such simple procedures as uncontested divorces, adoptions and name changes — through forms she provides and helps fill out for $50.

New stop light in 1986 models reduces collisions, injuries

WASHINGTON -Automakers will have to install a third rear stop lamp, mounted high, on all cars starting in the 1986 model year under a new safety rule issued Thursday by the Transportation Department.

The extra easy-to-see high-level light is expected to significantly reduce rear-end collisions and annually eliminate 40,000 injuries and $434 million in property damages, Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Dole said in announcing the regulation.

U.S. Marine injured by grenade

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — An assailant in a speeding car hurled a hand grenade at American Marines guarding the temporary offices of the U.S. Embassy in Beirut on Thursday, slightly wounding one of them, an Embassy spokesman said.

John Stewart, the spokesman, said the grenade was thrown at the main Marine security checkpoint in front of the Duraford building. "The Marines had no time to react. The car sped off toward the (heart of the) city," Stewart said.

He said "one Marine was slightly injured," but would not give the name or the rank of the wounded guard.

U.S. Embassy offices were set up at the beachfront building after the bombing of the U.S. Embassy, about 400 yards away, on April 18. That bomb demolished the entire facade of the embassy, killing 63 people, including 17 Americans.

Primaries become caucuses, Wisconsin tradition to end

Madison, Wis. -Primaries open to all voters have been a tradition in Wisconsin ever since the early part of the century, the legacy of Gov. Robert "Fighting Bob" La Follette's victory over political kingmakers and their caucus system.

But because of a directive from the Democratic National Committee, the Wisconsin Democratic presidential primary - the political testing ground that helped propel John F. Kennedy and Jimmy Carter to the White House - will be virtually meaningless next year.

The selection of delegates to the party's national convention will revert to caucuses.

Alumni oppose tuition increase

"We clearly need more staff. We are doing everything to promote excellence in education, but we just don't feel that now is the time to raise tuition."

Paul Cronin
Clerk, UMass Alumni Board of Directors

The Board of Directors of the University of Massachusetts Alumni Association earlier this week voted 24 to 9 to oppose all increases in tuition through the end of the 1984-85 academic year.

The resolution is not binding on the University's Board of Trustees and was made in response to Chancellor Joseph Duffey's request for a $50 increase. Many factors were cited for the decision.

One factor is that tuition has risen 61 percent in the last four years while the average family income of a UMass student has risen only 31 percent, according to Paul Cronin, association clerk.

"Things are pretty tight right now," Cronin said. "We liked the idea of what the funds could be used for, but this is not the time to increase tuition."

Cronin said many students are having trouble paying tuition now, and, although a $50 increase is not a lot, it "could drive some of them over the edge."

"We clearly need more staff. We are doing everything to promote excellence in education but we just don't feel that now is the time to raise tuition," he said.

Another argument against the tuition increases is that "nearly half of our students come from families with at least one other child in college at the same time" which compoinds the effect of the increase, Cronin said.

Other reasons include: that many students will lose the "benefits of a quality education" because they are "now struggling to meet college costs. The fees at the University are already high when compared with those at peer institutions across the country" and financial aid has "not kept pace with the rapid increases in college costs, leaving thousands of students with demonstrated financial need unable to receive assistance," Cronin said. There were 4,518 such students who did not receive financial aid for the most recent year with available statistics, 1981-82.

Cronin said he has also heard the Regents will ask for an increase in tuition in the near future.

The Island at the South end of Campus Center pond is scheduled to be renovated.

Campus pond island to be work of art

By CAROLINE SAMOILOFF
Collegian Staff

Construction on and around the island at the southern tip of the campus pond will resume later this month after having been commissioned for more than a year.

Frequently used by university students, the small chunk of land is due to be functionally and aesthetically improved by sculptor George Trakas, who plans to landscape it and construct two small bridges on either side of the land, one leading toward the Fine Arts Center and the other leading toward the university chapel.

Trakas also plans to build a small platform on the island, which, acting director and registrar of the Fine Arts Center Betsy Sierma said, could be "possibly used as some kind of outdoor theater."

One bridge will replace the wooden one near the chapel side of the pond.

The waterflow near the banks of the pond has been changed to avoid the buildup of "all the mud and lots of gross squishy stuff," Siersma said.

Funds were contributed by the National Endowment for the Arts in Washington D.C., which funds artists, museum programs, individuals, special exhibitions and many others.

"We apply to them and we get about one grant a year," Siersma said.

The plan was also approved by the Campus Planning Committee for the project and the sight.

Presently Trakas is in Europe, but when he returns he will continue building the bridges that he did not complete before he left. The island is expected to be finished next year at this time.

"We're kind of excited about having it completed. It will be a beautiful result. Students and people will respect it," Siersma said.

Trakas doesn't want to change the character of the island, just make it more accessible, Siersma noted, adding they plan on making the island open to the public.

UMass' positive achievements overshadowed

By RITA MURPHY

The University of Massachusetts must improve its external relations in order to increase alumni contributions, said Deidre Ling, Vice Chancellor for University Relations and Development Thursday while addressing the Faculty Senate.

In order to increase alumni contributions the University must "define further and shape external relations," Ling said.

Another way the University can increase money donations is to explain to outsiders exactly what it is the campus is all about, she said.

"As the competition for students increases it is all the more critical to articulate our mission with clarity," to outsiders, Ling said.

Parents are one group of people which Ling said the University has "neglected" in the past. Parents are a strong source of potential money contributors and the University should include them more in public outreach ventures.

Ling announced her office has just created five councils: marketing and public relations, parent relations, faculty relations, long term press involvement, and employee relations to help handle the improvement of the University's image.

The "positive achievements (of UMass) are overshadowed" by the public's "negative perception" of the campus and what the University is trying to do, Ling said.

One way the University is trying to improve its public image is through the publication Contact, which is mailed to alumni, parents, and other potential contributors to the University.

Contact has changed its format and style and is now very "attractive" she said.

Ling said she thinks the university will make "significant progress in the months and years ahead."

Grad Senate questions GTO's goals

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

Members of the University of Massachusetts Graduate Teachers Organization (GTO) responded at last night's Graduate Student Senate meeting to questions about its goals and objectives, and about the organization's present status.

The questions were raised in an editorial by 33 graduate students in the departments of Geology and Geography which appeared in the Collegian on October 3rd.

The editorial, entitled "Grad politics - secret affairs?" voiced concerns about the organization, duties, and accountability of the GTO, and about the effects of the organization on the number of Teacher assistant and assoicate positions available.

Members of the GTO, a group of UMass students attempting to unionize, assured the students that these issues will be settled through a contract formulated by graduate student representatives and ratified by the whole organization, and only after the organization is accepted by a majority of T.A.'s and T.O.'s.

GTO members further assured students that the authorization cards currently being circulated call for only an election to accept the organization, and do not pledge membership, allegiance or dues to any organization.

Greg Graham, a member of the GTO Steering Committee, said the organization is currently checking into the gains of Graduate teacher organizations at U.C.L.A., the Universities of Oregon, Florida and Wisconsin, and other schools.

Although last night's debate occurred at a regular Graduate Senate meeting, senate President Sanjiv Dugal restated the senate's role in the controversy.

"As far as the senate is concerned, we represent both sides of this debate," Dugal said.

After much debate, some senators suggested that the questions be dealt with in a formal debate sometime in the near future. The GTO will look into organizing the debate.

SWAG elects two co-presidents

By ANDREW WOLFF
Collegian Correspondent

The Southwest Area Government (SWAG) gained two co-presidents, but lost its vice presidents last night in its third meeting of the semester.

Lisa Stratuli, co-vice president, submitted her resignation letter through her partner, Scott Kogos.

"My apologies to SWAG," she wrote. "But my schoolwork has begun to suffer."

Her resignation, the second in three weeks, has promoted another special in-house election next Thursday. Kogos must run again, and nominations for Stratuli's seat are open.

Stability, however, came to SWAG when it was determined last night that Dave McCarthy was not violating any constitutional clause by not resigning from his position as communications coordinator before being elected co-president. News of that alleged violation sent the assembly into mass confusion last week, when it was believed that the special elections would have to be nullified.

After close consideration of the constitution and no discovery of wrongdoing, the assembly unanimously accepted a motion to approve last week's election results.

"I was wrong on the technicality," Kogos, originator of the motion to nullify the election, told the assembly. This week he urged them to approve the votes.

In other action, SWAG selected its committee chairpersons for the year. Karena Paukulus, of Coolidge Tower, was elected to chair the Finance Committee, Blake Boland was chosen unopposed to head the Issues committee, Jill Neustadt was chosen to lead the Social a Cultural committee and Dave Chapman to lead the communications committee.

Police charge two men with DWI

University of Massachusetts police arrested Joseph P. Krieger, 20, of Lynnfield, shortly after 1 a.m. Thursday for driving while intoxicated. Krieger was also charged with endangering, having a rejected inspection sticker and driving with defective equipment, police said.

In other police action:

Robert L. Tousignant, 19, of South Hadley, was arrested at 2:25 a.m. Oct. 13 for driving while under the influence of alcohol, according to UMass police. Tousignant was also charged with driving an unregistered and uninsured vehicle and was cited for failing to stay within marked lanes.

Michael D. Potter, 27, of Cleveland, Ohio, was arrested at 1:30 a.m. Oct. 12 for driving an unregistered and uninsured vehicle, according to police. Potter was also cited for driving without a valid license, police said.

becomes hard to cope," Kraft said, noting breakup of a relationship, a deadline, a midterm, can be too much.

Kraft has some advice for anyone who wants to get out of depression or alleviate pressure.

"First determine what's causing the stress. Then ask yourself what problems you can just drop for a while, handling problems one at a time instead of all at once.

"If it's an academic problem, talk to your adviser or try to get an extension on work that is due if it is impossible to complete by the deadline."

The doctor stressed that anyone who is depressed should "stop long enough to think about the factors causing depression and then analyzing those problems."

"One by one try to solve the problems," he said. "Use your friends to help you sort out your problems. If you are close to your family, use them, too.

"If someone comes to you, listen. Hear them out. The person can usually figure out his or her problems on his own. He or she only needs to know that you understand what he or she is going through." This listening and understanding is called "active listening," he said.

Some depression or pressure is normal, Kraft said.

★Womonfyre

Womonfyre chose to locate in Northampton because of the colleges in the area and because of the town's reputation of having a strong women's community, Spooner said.

Spooner said that while most of Womonfyre's clientele are women, they do have men as regular customers. "We've never tried to exclude anybody," she said.

The store, one of 85 feminist bookstores in the country, and on of several progressive bookstores in the area, carries many other items besides books. They also sell cards, buttons, posters, diaries, records, jewelry and shells. Their books are arranged in general categories, such as literary critisism, art, science fiction, and romantic novels.

"We want our focus within the category of women to be as broadly defined as possible. We encourage all types of women to come into the store."

Spooner said the store has been overidentified with lesbian and gay issues. "We've been erroneously labeled as a lesbian business and I think that in inaccurate," she said.

"We're not a lesbian bookstore, but we do carry lesbian books. We're not going to hide the things we believe in."

Last summer the store was a target for harassment because it was the "most accessible" representation of the gay community, she said.

Discover New England

Club offers "break from it all"

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

Tired of studying, bored of routine, or simply want to get away from it all and gain a bit of cultural insight of the east coast at the same time? The recently founded Discover New England Club at the University of Massachusetts offers just that.

UMass student and club president Brian Reynolds, said the ideas for organizing the club were based on students' interest in going on one day trips around the area at a low cost. "That's how we coined the name," he said.

"The club gives students the opportunity to become culturally aware and exposed to the natural beauty of New England," Reynolds said. "Alot of students come here because of its location and what we want to do is to give them full exposure of it. Wherever we go, the club will represent the University," he added.

The first of the six tentatively scheduled activities is a foliage expedition tomorrow bound for Grey Lock National Park in the Berkshire Mointains, Reynolds said.

"There are various activities planned to stimulate the learning of the surroundings but also to have some fun and to take away some of the pressures of campus life," he said.

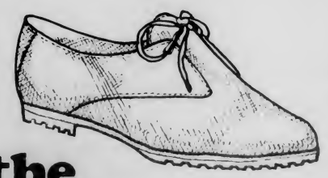
Getting the club off the ground was not an easy task but Financial Director of Student Activities and advisor for the club, Les Bridges, was a great help, Reynolds said.

"We first had to establish a strong financial base as all new clubs have to do to become a self-sustaining organization. We were alloted $249 from the Student Senate and then later bacame a Registered Student Organization (RSO) which will entitle the club to various opportunities," Reynolds said.

Presently with about 30 members, the Discover N.E. Club is hoping to attract "a broad range of people."

"It's geared more towards the average student whereas alot of other clubs require certain skills," he said.

An important asset to the club is the weekly Monday night meetings at 7 p.m. which include guest speakers and an audio visual film and slide presentation by Bridges, Reynolds said.



Fees for the expeditions can be expected to be as low as $1 for members, $3 for non-members. The yearly membership fee is $10.

Those interested in the Saturday outing should contact Laurie Hegerich at 546-5274 or can consult Hypercurricula for other scheduled trips.

James Bond is sucked dry

Never Say Never Again
Mountain Farms Mall

By JOE SHARTRAND
Collegian Correspondent

Never say Never Again, is proof that the James Bond has finally been sucked dry of all originality and excitement. Hollywood has achieved what Bond's nemesis's have been trying to do for the last twenty years; namely dispose of Bond. He isn't dead yet, but he is on his way and when his movies stop making money, James Bond will be put out to pasture. There are several reasons for Bond's slow demise and many of them can be seen in the latest escapade with Sean Connery. The biggest reason Bond is slowly fading is because the action sequences have become quite unmoving. Everyone knows that whatever mess Bond gets himself into, eventually, he'll come out on top; especially with the women. So who really cares if Bond is punched, stabbed, shot, or bitten by a shark? We all know that he won't really get hurt. Sean Connery, as James Bond, could have helped to enliven the action by acting with more conviction but he doesn't even attempt it. Instead, Connery goes through the motions and pretends that he is still young, strong and virile. Connery can act as he has proved in other films, but in this one he is as bland as Roger Moore.

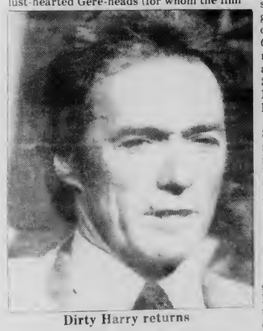
James Bond has become a bore, which has accelerated the process of his decay. It is tiresome and frustrating to repeatedly watch someone get all the girls, and beat all the villians all of the time. How many aging, gray-haired men can say hello to a girl and immediately afterward have intercourse. Not too many it would seem to me, but Bond does it everytime and with every beautiful girl.

Bond is a bore, because he never loses. Whenever he gets into a scrape, who cares? He'll come out of it with the villian dead and the heroine in bed. For example, in Never Say Never Again, Bond is lifting weights at a health farm, when suddenly, a henchman for the bad guys pops in and traps Bond under the weight machine. Predictably, Bond escapes and he kills the villian, but not before smashing everything in sight and grunting profusely. There is one funny touch in this scene when Bond, supposedly at wit's end on how to stop the henchman, desperately flings a beaker of fluid into the bad guy's face. The villian backs, screaming, into a stack of bottles which become embedded in his back. Bond looks at the bottle in his hand to see what caustic solution had burned the villian's eyes; it was his urine sample. That is pretty good comic relief, but it still didn't erase the fact that Bond is no longer an exciting fantasy figure.

The last stake in the heart of the Bond character is the blandness of the villians. In the early Connery films, the villians were exciting and even a little kinky, like Goldfinger, but now the villians only act like stupid imbeciles. For example, Blofield who has been resurrected in many Bond films, seems in this film, to have a fetish for his white cat that he always holds in his arms. The camera always focuses on that cat, even though we know the identity of Blofield. It seems to be emphasizing that the leader of SPECTRE likes cats, so what? The other villian is somewhat exciting but he never really gets too evil. Bond has only had to contend with impotent villians, who couldn't even scare a baby into tears, much less an audience.

With no real villians, action, and without the original theme music, Never Say Never Again, is a failure and Sean Connery returning as Bond is a disappointment. One expects so much more from Connery than Roger Moore, because Connery had always been the best Bond, but now it seems that no one can generate the excitement of the old films. Bond has become nothing more than a guaranteed money-making machine which Hollywood has been cranking too long.

Connery's James Bond: an aging bore?



Trailers by Andy Gordon

Richard Gere has a bunch of new films in the works. The former UMie has taken the title role in The Story of David, playing that wacky ol' King of Judah from his roots on up to royal big-time. The Bible picture apparently opens with Gere as a shepherd (so he probably has some big scenes with sheep). Filming won't start until next year, when Gere is done shooting The Cotton Club under the direction of Francis Ford Coppolla. In a role originally intended for Sylvester Stallone, Gere plays a struggling musician in 1920's Harlem. His new flick, Beyond the Limit, meanwhile, is currently playing here. It's lame as Hell, and only lust-hearted Gere-heads (for whom the film is obviously aimed) will truly enjoy it. Avoid the matinees; the showing I caught was packed with [illegible] girls who screamed every time there was shown in anything closer [illegible] And when he [illegible] I thought the management [illegible] have to call in paramedics.

John Landis [illegible] Because of his legal hassels [illegible] Marrow's accidental manslaughter [illegible] has lost the rights to his Dick Tracy (TRAILERS, April 83). Walter Hill has picked them up and hopes to start shooting early next year. While Landis was pursueing Clint Eastwood for the title role, Hill has Warren Beatty in mind (Beatty is already making a silly sounding movie: Mermaid, in which he falls in love with one). Hill is busy now in post-production of Streets of Fire, the first of a proposed action trilogy. Much on the lines of his Warriors and 48 Hours, the urban adventure stars Michael Pare, Rick Moranis and The Blasters.

Speaking of urban settings and Clint, detective Harry Calahan will find his way to movie screens this Christmas in Sudden Impact. When he threw his badge away at the end of Dirty Harry three pictures ago, he must have only been kidding. I'm not complaining, coming attractions for the new flick look great. It opens December 9th.

Steve Martin also has a promising new film opening this Christmas. He stars as a struggling New York writer whose girlfriend, played by Robyn Douglass, dumps him for another man. The Lonely Guy, as he becomes, must cope with his new life. Also starring are Charles Grodin as Martin's equally lonely best friend and Steve Lawrence, who's not lonely at all. Neil Simon adapted the screenplay from Bruce Jay Friedman's book.

Dirty Harry returns

Mike Nichols' Silkwood, with Meryl Streep in the title role, is being readied for release this Christmas, but Nichols is busy in preproduction for Heartburn, based on Nora Ephron's semi-autobiographical novel. Although the picture hasn't been cast yet, the female lead is a cook show host, whose marriage to a newspaper columnist is on the rocks. Sounds totally fascinating.

This just in off the Associated Press wire: Dolly Parton and Sylvester Stallone will star in Rhinestone, a movie in which Miss Parton plays a New York singer who transforms the "Italian Stallion" into a country performer on a bet. Nashville, Tennessee Governor Lamar Alexander said yesterday that 20th Century-Fox will begin filming next month in neighboring Williamson County. He blew off Cotton Club for this?

Old business: My professor has threatened to fail me if I don't amend last week's comments about My Favorite Year. The film was undeniably silly, but Peter O'Toole, as matinee idol Alan Swann, was terrific. The role, which was based on the late Erroll Flynn, won O'Toole an Oscar nomination for best actor (the award went to Ben Kingsley for Gandhi). Now about my grade...

Finally ready for release is Phil Kaufman's long awaited film version of Tom Wolfe's The Right Stuff, about the first Americans in outer space. Kaufman, who directed the excellent genre films The Wanderers and Invasion of the Body Snatchers, has put together a tremendous cast to portray everyone from Chuck Yaeger to the Mercury astronauts. Sam Shepard, Scott Blenn, Dennis Quaid and Jeff Goldblum are only a few of the cast members in the drama, which was photographed by Caleb Deschanel (Black Stallion, The Last Waltz). It's due for national distribution on the 21st.

Local Best Bets: Brainstorm opens today, and although it's being hyped as Natalie Wood's last movie, it's supposed to be as interesting film in it's own right. Special effects wizard Doug Trumball directed the film, which might coincide nicely with mind altering substances (not that the Arts department condones such behavior). The Big Chill is still showing at the Hampshire 4. Everyone except Roger Ebert and the Smith Sophian loved it. It's really good and shouldn't be missed. Although elsewhere on this page are words to the contrary, Never Say Never Again is damn good. Connery blows doors off that other smug fop. And at Engineering East tonight is Fast Times at Ridgemont High, Amy Heckerling's tender comedy about 80's youth. I must have seen it over a dozen times and I still laugh.

TRAILERS Trivia: No one got last week's question. Looks like I'm the only one who skims Cinefantastique magazine at Hastings. Subliminal cuts of John Lithrow's eyes exploding were added to George Miller's episode of Twilight Zone: The Movie to enhance the terror. The cuts come when Lithgow opens the airplane's window shade and sees the gremlin in close-up. This week's question: In what recent film do the main characters drink Tsingtao beer? Good movie, good beer. The first correct answer will receive the Right Stuff's commemorative program.

Sam Shepard and Barbara Hershey star in Phil Kaufman's The Right Stuff, due out this month.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Freshpersons- the hard life

Yesterday I tried to sit through what my psychology professor termed "probably the most important lecture of the semester." It was all about "conditioned behavior" and "conditioned responses", supposedly some of the basic stuff of psychology, but I couldn't concentrate because there was something more interesting behind me. Two girls -- and I use the term 'girl' deliberately -- were reviewing, and subsequently discarding as, unworthy, most of the personality traits of their "friend", a "naive freshman" who evidently had all sorts of "weird, fuckin' problems," according to the pair, who between insults stopped to criticize the professor's choice of a longsleeved shirt to wear on an Indian Summer day.

Mary Cresse

One girl in particular seemed appalled by her friend's inability to recognize cocaine.

"I pulled out the mirror and started laying out the lines and she looks at me as if I were crazy. I said coke. Lines. Dollar bill. And I hold the mirror up and she doesn't wanna say anything, so I said 'haven't you ever seen this before' and she said 'no' and that was it. I tried to be generous, and what do I get for it? A really stupid look. She's such a jerk."

For the next fifteen minutes they continued picking and slicing, mentioning especially derisively the girl's tendency to go home almost every weekend to see her family and her boyfriend.

I tried to shut them off, but the professor's words were continually diminished by the sound of those spoken behind me, which kept creeping into my notes.

"We should all get her wasted one night and tape her."

"She wanted to sit next to me in this class today, but I told her I was blowing it off."

"She doesn't drink, even."

"I had a feeling Housing would put me with a freshman."

Pretty soon they became weary of their subject and started rating by number the physical traits of the boy sitting diagonally from them.

I wanted to set the clock back and transform my feline companions into sniveling newcomers attending the wrong class.

But I could only recollect my first year of college, blushing all over again when I remembered the times I wished I was anyplace but college and anybody but a freshman.

I went to Boston University at the time, an urban campus, but somehow even the anonymity of a city didn't save me from making a total ass of myself sometimes.

Like the time I stumbled into what I thought was a great cafeteria (free food!), took a tray and filled it before I realized it was a dining commons line for residents. I was a commuter student.

Or the time I confidently hopped behind a new male acquaintance, pinched his butt hard and sang a hearty "how ya doin' " before looking into the eyes of a total stranger and his three friends, at which time I wanted to evaporate. Completely.

Or the time I strolled into the offices of the daily paper, sat my novice's body in what I thought was a strangely comfortable spot and made a couple of negative remarks about the clutter of the place (which in all newspaper offices is never an anomaly) before I spotted one of the editors smiling at me as I occupied his chair.

I did these things. And I have duplicated these and similar blind actions of naivete -- and stupidity -- but am unable to record them owing to an inability to type with my eyes clenched.

So I admit it. I, indeed, was once a freshman. Sometimes I even tell people that at parties.

But what I don't readily tell them about is the occasional loneliness which can seem as lengthy as the semester, the feeling of alienation two months into school when everyone else seems to have a buddy, or the amnesia-like state I went into when my mother asked me whether I had met anyone new on campus that day.

I was at Boston University.

I could have been at UMass.

Fear and loathing in the CC

Josh Meyer

Joe Student, an old housemate of mine, loved to get stoned and walk around the Campus Center.

"There's so much to do," he'd say, just before taking off.

One day Joe never came home. We found him two days later, next to the statue of Metawampe outside the hatch.

He never told us where he was all that time, but whenever we mention it, he just smiles.

I myself have been subject to following in Joe's footsteps, and whenever I get the chance, I cruise through the Center, trying to find the things I haven't seen yet in my three years here. It never fails; there's always something.

"Take some time yourself, and go through the center, really looking at everything," Joe used to say. He said that people that go through there are always so preoccupied they never really see anything. He took pride in the fact that he knew everyone in the Travel Center, and was even on speaking terms with the CC Barber, Ernie. This was hard to achieve, he said, because Joe had a habit of standing behind the barber chairs and making faces and laughing at the people getting their hair cut. They could see his reflection in the mirror, and would get nervous, upset, or both. Ernie said it was bad for his business.

Joe had a habit of hitting every table on the Campus Center concourse, and even though the groups got less weird every year, he still had a lot of fun with them.

"Go up to the ROTC tables, read the literature seriously, and pretend you're interested. Ask them what kind of neat weapons they were using, and how many revolutions they were going to squelch when they graduated." Tell them you want to sign up, as long as you can skip the exercise and discipline bullshit."

Next Joe would hit the religion tables, and read all their pamphlets with zeal. When he heard that JOSH was coming, he offered his services, as long as he could do his recruiting in all-womens' dorms and write on fashion-marketing class blackboards. They were so excited, they said they'd let him . But it didn't work out.

Joe used to like to cause trouble. He liked to change the channel on the CC TV just when something crucial was happening on General Hospital. People don't like their "Love in the Afternoons" messed with, and Joe made a lot of enemies. But he had a good time nevertheless.

Joe is gone now, but he left some tricks for me to share with everyone. For instance; unplug the video machines in the game room, and watch everyone freak out. Find a conference in the Campus Center, walk in, and pretend you know what your're talking about. If worse comes to worse, you'll at least get a few cups of coffee, before you're asked to leave.

If you're hungry, go to the Hatch. Then go to the Earthfoods, munch on a "mystery burger" and watch peoples' stomachs turn.

Go to the University Store and count how many things have the UMass logo on them. Act like a UMass security agent, and detain people for nothing. See if they listen to you.

Count how many leaks there are in the Campus Center. Move the buckets, and see how long it takes to flood the place. Then go to the Bottom of the Campus (BOC- popular party place), make a lot of noise, smoke a lot, and see if anyone comes to bust you.

Watch the Bruce Lee TV shows at the Concourse, and tell the organizers that you too want to learn to kill people like that.

These are all fun things to do, but when you're done, you'll probably be very thirsty, so go to the Top of the Campus (TOC) and see how long it takes for them to throw you out for "over-inebriation. Joe used to do this all the time. On your way downstairs, run around the Campus Center hotel like a maniac, yelling and screaming, and see if anyone comes out.

Your're finally ready to leave. As a last-minute gesture, go to the check-cashing line in the basement, and yell that they're closed. Watch as hundreds of students get unruly and pissed-off. Then leave, and go home. You've had a busy day. So busy in fact, that Joe Student would be proud of you. If you have enough energy, see if you can find those secret Campus Center passageways, and get lost for awhile, just like Joe did. No one has ever figured out what he did in there, but one thing is for sure - he must have had a good time!

Random Notes - On Going to Bars -

The laws of Massachusetts have made it just about impossible for an-out-of-state student to use a fake I.D. So what's a freshman or a sophomore to do on a Saturday night after doing homework all day long? A person has to be 20 years old to get into most of the clubs in and around town. I know that some people think "most freshmen and sophomores don't have transportation to get to those clubs anyway," however, one doesn't need transportation to get to the Blue Wall if they are living on campus.

Ronda Applebaum

Freshmen and sophomores need a meeting place like the Blue Wall. In either the Student Union Building or in the Campus Center, a club has to be made where, for example, people under 20 who live in Southwest can make plans to meet their friends who live in Orchard Hill. There doesn't have to be liquor served at the club. I don't think too many people will find it hard to obtain liquor before entering the club: that is if they wish to enter the club with a more spirited attitude. It would be nice if people under 20 could have a place where they could listen to a band, dance, talk with old friends and meet new ones. Something has to be done so that people under 20 will no longer feel left out.

SGA Senator Speaks Out

To the Editor,

Anyone who knows anything about the Undergraduate Student Senate would testify that its meetings are often unnecessarily long. Still, on the assumption that this body is comprised of persons of reason, one would expect a trend towards sessions of a more reasonable length. But that is not so.

The point here is not to criticize the activity of senators who sincerely try to protect the interests of their constituencies, nor is it to disparage those who may seek to voice sentiments which stand in opposition to my own. Everyone should have a chance to be heard. That is the point. Over the course of a semester, I have watched the temerity of some senators come to border paranoia. On numerous occasions these "paranoid senators have used the parliamentary process to circumvent democratic ends.

I question the motive behind this practice. Is it, as they claim, in the best interests of their constituencies? Or are these just petty victories, fueling fragile egos. I am not usually so critical, but I am a little bit exasperated. Too often now, others have not been heard because of political subterfuge. Too often, genuine, legitimate, and very important financial requests by RSO's have been neglected through abuse of parliamentary procedures.

It is time for concerned senators to object. If some senators would not permit others to speak, they themselves should not be listened to. If they would not permit others to use the democratic process, then why should their recourse to it warrant anyone's attention? Of course, the guilty parties in question would assert that they are honorable people, even as they forestall democratic rule. But, so did Brutus, in Julius Ceasar, and he stabbed his best friend in the back. I ask you fellow senators, are these truly honorable people?

Eugene Bull

This Desk Can Reach Mach 2.

Some desk jobs are more exciting than others.

As a Navy pilot or flight officer, your desk can be a sophisticated combination of supersonic jet aircraft and advanced electronic equipment. But you can handle it. Because Navy flight training gives you the navigation, aerodynamics and other technical know-how you need.

In return, Navy aviation demands something of you as an officer: Leadership.

Your path to leadership starts with officer training that's among the most demanding in the military. It's intensive leadership and professional schooling combined with rigorous Navy flight training. And it's all geared to prepare you and other college graduates for the unique challenge of Navy aviation. The program is tough but rewarding.

One important reward for Navy officers is decision-making authority. In the air, and on the ground, you have management responsibility from the beginning. And your responsibility grows as you gain experience. No company can give you this kind of leadership responsibility this fast. And nothing beats the sheer excitement of Navy flying.

The salary is exciting, too. Right away, you'll earn about $18,300 a year. That's better than the average corporation will pay you just out of college. And with regular Navy promotions and other pay increases, your annual salary will soar to $31,100 after four years. That's on top of a full package of benefits and privileges.

Before you settle down to an earth-bound desk job, reach for the sky. Reach for the coupon. Find out what it takes to be part of the Naval Aviation Team. You could have a desk that flies at twice the speed of sound.

Black Affairs

El Salvador after bomb damage by terrorists in Feb., 1981.

Cry for Liberation

By YADIRA BETANCES

Its dusk in my Latin America.

The black cloak of death

Covers my pale blue sky.

My land and my people

Are being raped

By killer, foreign hands.

In my neighborhoods,

My children don't play anymore.

Their lives are stomped

By was and poverty.

In my towns,

There's no longer a quiet life

It's been replaced by armaments

Awes and murmurs of war.

In my cities,

While yound and old fight

The pain of birth for liberation

Is felt by every women.

In my Andes,

Bolivar's spirit weeps for his people

Who blindfolded are closer and closer

To a foreign oppression.

My brothers, friends

And family are not the same any more

My dear people

Are lacking peace

They have a broken spirit,

They're hungry for liberty,

But, they're fighting and searching

For their long robbed dream.

Latin American addresses Nicaraguan crisis

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Americans are showing a growing concern over the war waged in Latin America. This is reflected in the number of people who attend national and on-campus activities about Latin America.

Thursday night's showing of the movie Target Nicaragua Inside a Covert War and talk by Nola Rineheart, a professor at Smith College who spent her summer in Nicaragua, played to a full house.

Rineheart, who spoke on the economic situation in Nicaragua began her talk with the basic goal of the revolution that started after Somoza's overthrow in 1979. These basic goals were to improve the materialistic standard of living for the majority (mostly peasants) and increase popular participation, she said. Though the latter was a success, its achievement was threatened by the economic crises the nation was facing then.

The Nicaraguan economic crisis was evident in three individual seetors, according to Rineheart. These sectors were: the rise of unemployment and inflation, and shortages of the basic necessities of people, Rineheart said.

The cause of these crises were, she said, the "legacy of dependency on 'Somozismo'" the economic situation since the triumph, U.S. economy distillation, counterrevolutionary activities, natural disasters and ironically enough, the success of the revolution.

"Reagan did everything he could to destroy Nicaragua," Rineheart said. "It was the worst time to have a revolution," she said.

The movie showed a chronological order of the revolution. The revolution started in July of 1981 as a secret CIA plan, the movie revealed.

The movie focused on the town of San Pedro del Norte, where 15 peasants were murdered by contrarevolutionary guerillas or "contras" from Honduras aided by the U.S.

Since the revolution began, the number of Nicaraguans killed, equal the number of American soldiers killed in the Vietnam War, Rineheart said.

Cry for Liberation Grito Por la Liberacion

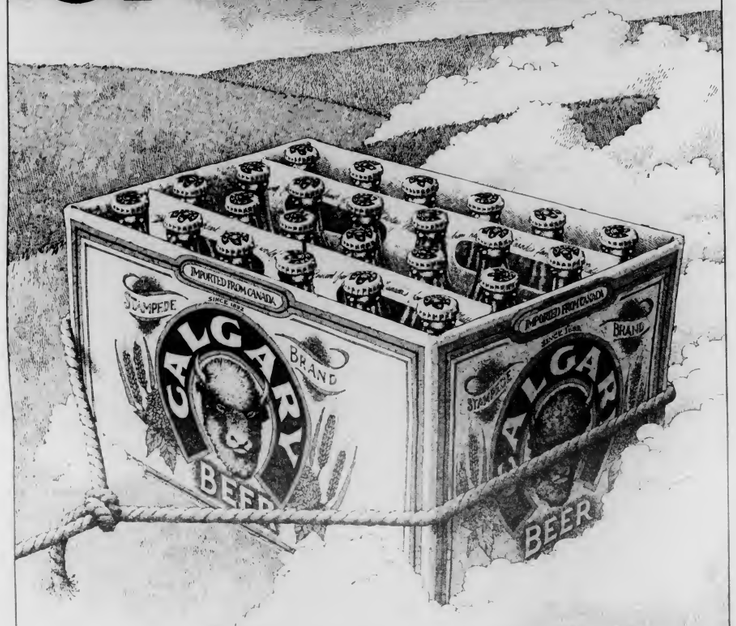
Anochece en mi Latinoamerica.
El negro manto de la muerte
Cubre mi cielo azul palido
Mi tierra y mi peblo son violados
Por manos asesinas y extrangeras y.

En mis barrios,
Ya mi nonos no juegan.
Sus vidas estan pasmadas
Por las guerras y la miseria.

En mis campos,
Ya no hay vida pasajera.
La han reemplazado los armamentos
Los horrores y murmullos de guerra.

En mis ciudades,
Mientras jovenes y viejos pelean
El dolor del parto de la liberacion
Lo siente en cada mujer.

En los Andes,
El espiritu do Bolivar gime porsupueblo
Que con una venda en los ojos
Se acerca mas yamas
A la opresion extrangera.



Mis hermanos, mis amigos
y mi familia, ya no son loa mismos.
Mi gran pueblo querido
Tiene escases de paz,
Tiene el espiritu herido
Esta hambriento do liberta,
Pero estan luchando en busca
De su sueno robado.

TODAY'S PUZZLE ANSWER

Lord Jeffs (19) host Plymouth St. (2)

The Amherst College men's soccer team will seek to prove that they belong in the Division III Top 20 as the 19th ranked Lord Jeffs take on second ranked Plymouth State tomorrow at 2 p.m. at Amherst.

Coach Peter Gooding's troops have had trouble scoring goals with only five in regulation this year. Plymouth St. (10-1-1) finished second in the nation last year in Division III and is led by All-American Mike Farriqua.

Spikers are on the road to Div. I Delaware tourney

By ED CUNNINGHAM

Collegian staff

The fifth ranked volleyball team in the Northeast, Division II, is traveling to Delaware this weekend. Yes, our very own University of Massachusetts spikers are going on the road. The attraction is the University of Delaware's 16 team invitational tournament.

On the heels of a thrilling victory over New Haven on Wednesday, head coach Elaine Sortino is still speaking cautiously of this tournament. "We're just looking to get out of the pool play," stated Sortino.

UMass has once again drawn a tough pool. Their foes will include Division I teams George Washington University and Princeton University as well as James Madison, a Division II squad.

If UMass can survive, they will then have to face some very stiff competition in the semis and finals. Sortino expects to see the likes of Maryland, Georgetown and the host team Delaware in the later rounds.

Overall, the 19-5 spikers are heading out today on a cautious upbeat. The injured players (Kirsten and Leslie Smith) are returning, the entire team is playing well and there is an air of confidence in everything they're doing.

UMass has to be one of the teams to watch this weekend for some exciting action. Coach Sortino predicts at least the following: "We'll play better against tougher competition and we'll be much better after this weekend."

Lady linksters travel to Princeton

The University of Massachusetts women's golf team travels to Princeton this weekend after finishing sixth in the Eastern Regionals held last weekend at Dartmouth.

Junior Judy Guzy, who finished 20th out of a field of 50 with a 94 and a 89, hopes to improve playing near her hometown just outside of Princeton.

"We're anxious to see how Judy scores," said coach Jack Leaman. "She usually plays very well at Princeton."

Captain Jane EGan shot a 93 in the first round of the Easterns but dropped back in the second round.

"Egan is consistent and usually shoots around 90," said Leaman.

UMass will play against a field that includes Eastern's winner Dartmouth, Boston College (4th), and Rutgers.

"Dartmouth is the creme of the crop," said Leaman. "We hope to do well against the rest of the field."

Traditionally, this weekend is one of the biggest of the season for UMass. Hixon emphasizes each game is as important as the last, but this weekend and these teams mean just a bit more to the Minutewomen.

The hunt this weekend in Philly will be for victory. The weapons for UMass will be a tough defense, speedy offense and senior leadership. It's hard to say what it all means. It will tell a great deal about Massachusetts' National Championship aspirations and will have an effect on UMass' national ranking. UMass is playing top ranked teams and the difference between victory and defeat won't be great.

UMass faces Temple today at 3 p.m. and plays Old Dominion tomorrow at 1 p.m.

UMass meets Maine in crucial contest

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

It is like the New York Giants versus the San Diego Chargers - a stubborn defense opposing an explosive offense - This Saturday at Alumni Stadium as the University of Massachusetts Minutemen (1-4) host the University of Maine Black Bears (2-2) at 1:30 p.m.

In what can be termed a must-win game for both teams, the Minutemen will be looking to rebound from last Saturday's tough 16-13 loss to Delaware and snap the rampaging Black Bears' two game winning streak. Last week Main knocked off previously unbeaten Lafayette, 39-38.

"The morale is excellent. The players still believe in themselves," said UMass coach Bob Pickett. "We are very confident going in against Maine."

Historically, UMass has reason to be confident, having won 16 of the previous 17 meetings between the two schools. However, the Minuteman defense will have to be at its best if UMass is to continue its dominance.

The Black Bear offense has of late been led by quarterback Mike Beauchemin who is filling in for the injured Rich LaBonte. LaBonte may be able to return to action this weekend, but Beauchemin has been so effective that he may have won himself a starting job.

"We don't care which quarterback is in there. They're both great athletes," said Pickett.

Facing a team that has compiled 776 total yards and scored 62 points in its last two games will be a stiff test for the Minuteman defense, but they should get some support from the offense since the Black Bear defense lets up points as fast as the offense scores them.

The UMass offense was to be centered around the arm of quarterback Jim Simeone this season and though the UMass offense has gained 693 yards passing as compared to 525 yards rushing, Simeone, with only three touchdowns and nine interceptions in five games has not quite lived up to preseason expectations.

"Simeone is improving. We were hoping he would come along a little faster. He needs a big game. He is still young and learning," remarked Pickett.

The contest Saturday is vital to both teams because each is winless in the Yankee Conference (UMass 0-1; Maine 0-2) and each team has lost to the University of Rhode Island, who is undefeated in the conference. If either team hopes to win the league title and a spot in the Division 1-AA playoffs, they better start winning tomorrow.

For the Minutemen, who started the season with a schedule ranked sixth toughest in the Division 1-AA and have proceeded to get off to their worst start in 26 years, Saturday is their second to last home game and their last chance to salvage their season.

Contrasting styles and desperation should make tomorrow's game a classic. Remember the Giant-Charger thriller three weeks ago?

Minutewomen post a convincing 5-0 win

ELUSIVE OBJECT- Nadia Komarowski (4) of UMass and Springfield's Sue Serafino vie for the ball in yesterday's 5-0 UMass win at Boyden. With the win, UMass moves to 6-1-2 and faces Cortland St. Sunday at Boyden at 1 p.m.

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team increased its record to 6-1-2 as they overcame injuries and a sloppy field to put together an impressive 5-0 blanking of 19th ranked Springfield College at Boyden Field yesterday.

The fourth ranked Minutewomen who were without the services of Susan Bird due to illness, welcomed the return of Debbie Harackiewicz who wore a faceguard to protect her broken nose. She experienced some head pounding and blind spots, but adjusted pretty well according to coach Kalekeni Banda.

The booters started out a little slow as they took time to adjust to the field conditions and get their game going. They were also slowed down by an injury to Jamie Watson(right knee), who initially came back into the game, but was removed for good when she re-injured it a few minutes later.

Nadia Komarowski opened up the scoring for UMass as she took a Kristi Kelly pass and came down right wing alone and put a shot into the left corner to make it 1-0, which is the way the first half ended.

At the 12:30 mark of the second half, the sister tandem of Ellen and Chris Taggart put together a good run which resulted in a 2-0 lead. Coming in on a two on two break, Chris passed to Ellen on left wing, who outran the Springfield defenders, came in alone on goalie Cheryl Sullivan, and chipped a shot which was initially saved, but she got her own rebound and went around the goalie and put it into the back of the net.

The Minutewomen set up many good scoring opportunities for themselves throughout the second half as the Springfield defenders began to tire. Lori Stukes made it 3-0 as she took successive passes from Ellen Taggart and Harackiewicz and put a shot into the left corner at the 18:07 mark from the top of the box.

Komarowski, who was termed explosive by Banda, had several good scoring chances, including a breakaway at 28:30 that Sullivan barely tipped over the crossbar. She came through four minutes later as she took a pass from newcomer Martha Riuble and hit the post, only to get her own rebound and easily put UMass ahead by a 4-0 count.

Stacey Flionis continued the offensive attack as she completed the scoring at the 35:43 mark when she took the cross from Riuble that was meant for Komarowski, but slid under her foot.

The booters nearly made it six at the 39:22 mark as Komarowski was tripped inside the box by the goalie and UMass was awarded a penalty kick on which Chris Taggart hit the crossbar. Seconds later Harackiewicz put another shot on net which again was tipped over the crossbar by Sullivan.

UMass will now face third ranked Cortland State Sunday at 1 p.m. on Boyden Field in what should be a tough matchup.

Stickers face two Top 10 teams in Philly this weekend

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

"We're in the hunt," coach Pam Hixon said yesterday. What hunt? What are the weapons? What does this all mean?

It doesn't matter too much now that the University of Massachusetts field hockey team soundly defeated unranked Northeastern on Tuesday. It doesn't matter that goalie Patti Shea posted her seventh shutout of the season.

What matters now, is the next two games for the Minutewomen. This weekend, UMass travels to Philadelphia to play ninth ranked Temple and second ranked Old Dominion, on the artificial turf at Temple.

"Did you see the rankings?" Hixon asked. "We're sandwiched right between Temple and ODU. What a weekend it will be."

For the second week in a row, UMass is ranked fourth in the nation with a 9-0-1 record. The Minutewomen are between undefeated ODU (6-0) on the top, and undefeated Temple (7-0) on the bottom.

Soccer hosts URI today

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The second best soccer team in Rhode Island will be at Boyden field this afternoon at 3 p.m. when the hard-luck University of Massachusetts men's soccer team hosts the University of Rhode Island.

The Rams are currently ranked fifth in New England with a 6-3-1 record. Brown University is the best team in Rhode Island and ranked second in New England behind UConn, who UMass faces next Wednesday, in Storrs.

UMass sports a tough luck 1-6-3 record and many of those defeats and ties could have just as easily been wins, but...the ball just didn't bounce Massachusetts' way. North Adams State was the only Minutemen victim, a 1-0 loser last Friday.

Part of the problem has been the Minutemen's inability to score. They have scored only five goals all year. Against Rutgers and Providence, UMass displayed sound defense and they moved the ball well. What was lacking was the shots that score.

Hopefully, Massachusetts will be able to reverse the trend against URI this afternoon. They'll have to.

Male profs make more, study says

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Staff

Women faculty members at the University of Massachusetts comprise only 15.6 percent of all faculty and receive an average of $5000 per year less than their male counterparts.

Of the 534 tenured professors on the UMass campus, only 46 are women who receive an average of $3000 per year less than their male co-workers. For untenured professors, the salary difference is $7,686 per year, according to the 1982/83 UMass factbook.

Charlotte Rahaim, Chairperson of the Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Women, said she is "appalled" by these figures, and cited statistics that showed an increase of only 1.9 percent in the past 12 years in the number of female faculty members here.

"Affirmative action is not alive on this campus," said Rahaim. A 1981 study done by the Committee on the Status of Women found that "no division met its affirmative action goals," she said.

James Boylan, President of the Massachusetts Society of Professors said there is only a "1 in 1000 chance that the discrepancies are due to legitimate reasons."

"It's illegal, that's all there is to it. We are very concerned with this, as a lost opportunity for diversity on campus," Boylan said.

The Equal Pay Act of 1963 "prohibits sex discrimination in payment of wages to women and men performing substantially equal work in the same establishment." Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibits sex discrimination in hiring and promotion.

Responding to allegations on the lack of affirmative action, Thelma Griffith-Johnson, Director of Affirmative Action, said "We have not been able to address all the issues we would like, not only about the lack of women, but minorities as well."

"There is a historical roadblock in terms of perception of women's competency," she said. "There are problems not only with attracting women but in keeping them here. Tenure is voted by staff members in their same department; usually a group of all white males."

All 22 departments at the University have responsibility for the hiring of their own staff. The Provost's office signs the papers bringing staff officially into the University system, but does not traditionally intrude into the process of selection and hiring.

Susan Pearson, spokesperson for the Provost office, said "We are involved in a study to determine whether there are sex-based inequities."

There were no statistics available on the number of applicants for faculty positions, how many were men, women and minorities, or who was eventually hired.

Ron Senecor of the Affirmative Action Office said "Although I stand behind the system, there are serious problems."

"We are making tremendous gains, not as fast or as many as we would like, but gains nonetheless," said Senecor.

"Unfortunately, I would have to agree with Dr. Rahaim," said Griffith-Johnson. "Affirmative action (results) are relatively dead at the University of Massachusetts."

On a larger scale, a report by United Press International indicated that among all women in the United States who are over 25 and college educated, "women average only 62 percent of the annual pay for men in the same category."

Reagan candidacy opposed by NOW regional director

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

The main goal of the National Organization for Women is to oust Ronald Reagan from office in 1984, NOW's Northeast Regional Director said Friday night to members of the Hampshire County chapter of NOW.

Rosemary Trowbridge, former president of Boston NOW and board member of the national board of NOW, said there is a new effort to ratify the Equal Rights Ammendment and to educate women voters about the Reagan administration.

"There is this perception that (Reagan) is such a nice man, but his policies are devastating," she said.

NOW has established the "Women's Truth Squad on Reagan" to inform women about the implications of Reagan's policies, "so they won't vote for Reagan," Trowbridge said.

She said NOW will endorse "that kind of candidate that can take off enough votes to make sure a certain Republican is not elected," and will not support any third party or independent candidates in the 1984 election.

Reagan's policies, including cuts in Aid to Families with Independent Children, job training programs, and other social services in favor of defense and high technology have repealed the "hard won" protections against sex discrimination, she said.

Reagan's programs are accelerating the poverty of women by decreasing protections against discrimination for employed women, eliminating women's jobs in the public sector, and cutting back job training programs that assist the poor, she said.

"Women make 59 cents to a man's dollar. The majority of budget cuts fall on those with incomes under $2,000. What we're seeing is a feminization of poverty," she said.

It has been estimated that if "women continue at their present rate of poverty, by the year 2000, one hundred percent of the poor will be women," she said.

NOW is specifically attacking sex discrimination in insurance because of a lack of affirmative action in the Reagan Administration. Trowbridge said that while employers have to offer the same pension and annuity plans to men and women, "regular insurance can discriminate because it is constitutional to discriminate on the basis of sex."

"The insurance industry has $400-500 billion in assets. One of the ways they get it is by cheating women by overcharging (women's) premiums and underpaying in benefits," she said.

The ERA is a tool for insuring sex-fair operations, she said.

Future of frats shaky at Amherst

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The future of fraternities at Amherst College was again brought into question this weekend after a memorandum drafted by its late President, Julian Gibbs, was recirculated by his successor.

Gibbs, who wrote the evaluation of the college's fraternities after one house was abolished last year, died this year before discussion of it could begin. In the memo, scheduled to be released by the college today, Gibbs said "this issue is not whether we maintain fraternities forever but, rather, for how much longer?"

The paper is "to open the question of fraternities with the realization they may be closed as a result of it," said John Auty, president of Phi Delta Sigma and treasurer of the Interfraternity Council (IFC), one of the groups acting college President G. Armour Craig sought formal comment on the paper from.

Craig, who will be replaced by President-elect Peter Pouncey in June, said the Board of Trustees approved a resolution this weekend after receiving the comments from the IFC and three other student, faculty and alumni committees. He declined comment on it, however, except to say it did not immediately conclude the college's 13 fraternities should be abolished.

In the paper, which Gibbs wrote after disciplinary problems with fraternities including the 1982 closing of Delta Upsilon Delta, he said "we are once again at a point when reform of the fraternity system is necessary..."

While trustees and administration officials refused specific comment on the situation until a general college meeting on Thursday, Auty said he feels most faculty would support banning fraternities, most students would oppose it, with alumni "not so sure."

Auty said as alumni get "out of touch" with the college, they tend to lose support for fraternities, forgetting their importance in campus spirit, campus social life, and in providing "the ability of alumni to come back and meet people they know just through the fraternity.

"They have to offer something in return," Auty said of the college if it does close the fraternities, which began going coed after the college's first women freshmen were admitted in 1974. "My guess is that whatever they offer, the students will reject."

However, "in the end it's the administration's decision, and the trustee's decision," Auty said. "There's nothing legally anyone else can do about it.

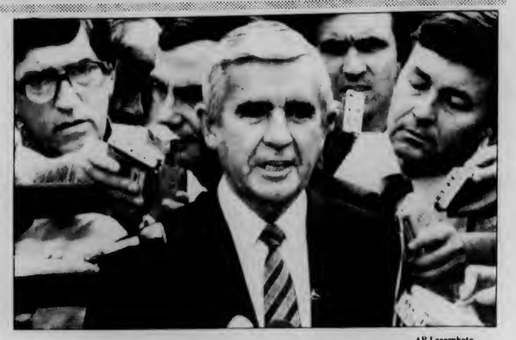
Reagan advisers are filing papers, "convinced" he will run in 1984

WASHINGTON (AP) — Lacking only a formal declaration from their candidate but working with his blessing, President Reagan's advisers are filing today, 1,000 days into his first term, the documents that legally will make him again a presidential candidate.

Two of the president's key advisers said Sunday they were positive the president would seek a second term, despite Reagan's refusal to make that declaration himself.

"He is going to run, and those who work with him on a day-to-day basis all feel that way," chief of staff James Baker said.



"I'm 100 percent convinced the president will be a candidate for re-election," said Edward Rollins, the presidential assistant who has been chosen to run the campaign.

But, said Baker, "in his own mind" the president will not consider himself a candidate until he makes a formal announcement of his plans to seek a second term next year.

Today, Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., a longtime Reagan friend who will become general chairman of the Reagan-Bush '84 committee, will deposit with the Federal Election Commission the documents establishing the committee and making Reagan, legally, a candidate.

Acting every bit the candidate, Reagan is using nearly every public opportunity to draw attention to what he sees as the economic improvements of the past three years — a key theme to a new campaign effort, aides say. On Saturday, he said in his weekly radio address that "the quality of American life is improving again."

Reagan and his aides say he is reluctant to declare his candidacy because such a step would leave him open to allegations that each action he takes in the future was dictated by political motives.

Reagan's Middle East envoy to be national security adviser

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan has decided to appoint Robert McFarlane, his special Middle East envoy, to be his national security adviser, filling the post being vacated when William Clark becomes secretary of the interior, White House officials said Sunday.

Reagan was not expected to announce his decision until today at the earliest.

One official, speaking on the condition that he not be identified by name, said the president's key foreign policy and national security advisers had been notified of the president's decision, reached during the weekend.

"All that remains is the presdient making it formal," said another official.

The officials said that Reagan had not taken the final step of actually offering the job to McFarlane, who, in addition to the Middle East job, is the deputy national security adviser.

The president, returning from Camp David., Md., where he spent the weekend, was asked by reporters whether he had spoken with McFarlane about the job. "Nope," Reagan replied.

Earlier in the day, White House chief of staff James A. Baker III said on the CBS News program "Face the Nation" that Reagan "has not made a decision as yet."

But, said one White House official, "the foreign policy advisers were told it would be McFarlane and that he'd have the same role in the White House as Clark had."

"It is pretty clear to everybody" that McFarlane is getting the job, he said, adding: "It's just a question of his being asked and accepting it and the president announcing it."

One Marine killed, three injured by Beirut bombings and snipers

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — One U.S. Marine was killed Sunday and three Marines were wounded in a seven-hour series of sniping and grenade attacks against the Marine peacekeepers at Beirut international airport, spokesman Maj. Robert Jordan said.

Jordan first announced that a total of five Marines had been wounded, but then changed the figure to three.

It was the third consecutive day of attacks on the Marines and raised the toll of Marine combat deaths to six since the American peacekeeping contingent arrived here 13 months ago.

Jordan said the Marines serving with Alpha Company at the southern end of Beirut's airport first came under fire at about 4:20 p.m. (10:20 a.m. EDT) and that firing from small arms and rocket-propelled grenades continued until after 11 p.m. (5 p.m. EDT).

Jordan said the Marines fired back with anti-tank rockets and small arms.

20th century monk canonized, pontiff names St. Leopold

VATICAN CITY (AP) — Pope John Paul II on Sunday canonized a 20th-century Croatian monk known for his work as a confessor as crowds celebrated the fifth anniversary of the pope's election.

More than 100,000 tourists and pilgrims gathered under a hazy sky at St. Peter's Square for the double ceremony to name the Capuchin friar Bogdan Mandic as St. Leopold and to commemorate John Paul's election as head of the Roman Catholic church on Oct. 16, 1978.

"St. Leopold did not leave theological or literary works behind him; he did not fascinate others with his culture," the pope said in a homily from a red pavilion set atop the wide steps of the square.

Ice sinks Soviet freighter, endangers 45 trapped boats

MOSCOW (AP) — Massive ice floes have crushed and sunk one Soviet freighter and now threaten 45 other vessels trapped in the swiftly freezing East Siberian and Chukchi seas in what could become a Soviet shipping disaster.

News that 50 ships were trapped in the Northern Sea Route skirting northeast Siberia near the Bering Strait first was reported last week in the government newspaper Izvestia. It said grinding ice already had sunk the freighter Nina Sagaidak, but rescuers from sister ships saved its crew and cargo.

Mi-2 helicopters are standing by in case other crews need rescue, the press said.

The official news agency Tass said that five of the ships, including the crippled and listing freighter Kolya Myagotin, were freed Sunday, but winds hampered further rescue operations. It said the Kolya Myagotin "was ripped by ice like a dagger and has been struggling with the elements for 10 days and nights." It reported crews had managed to patch the damage and pump out water.

Tass also said winds out of the north and northeast were building up the pack ice and giving it a solid grip on the ships.

One million Israelis show up for massive economic strike

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP) — Nearly a million Israelis — 70 percent of the workforce — went on strike for two hours Sunday to protest government economic moves that threaten to increase the cost of living by 10 percent, union officials said.

The union strike was peaceful and virtually complete, said officials of the Histadrut labor federation. The union represents 1 million salaried workers in the public and private sector, or about 70 percent of the nation's work force.

In Jerusalem, the Cabinet failed to announce a replacement for former Finance Minister Yoram Aridor, who quit Thursday in the worst economic crisis in the Likud coalition's six years in power. Prime Minister Yitzhak Shamir's preferred candidate, Deputy Premier David Levy, refused the job.

Workers from the government, municipal offices, state television and radio, and public public companies walked off their jobs, most between 2 p.m. and 4 p.m. Schools closed early when teachers struck. Some shops closed, but most store employees are not unionized.

El Al, the national airline, put a tape recording on its telephone switchboard saying "We are on a national strike. Please call back after 1 p.m." An El Al spokesman said the shutdown came during slack hours and did not seriously dislocate schedules.

Israel Radio was off the air for two hours.

Whale stuck in Gloucester, town refuses to part with it

GLOUCESTER, Mass. (AP) — The mayor of Gloucester says if nature brought the carcass of a whale up on the rocks in Braces Cove, then nature will have to dispose of it.

"There isn't much we can do," said Mayor Leo Alper after a Sunday inspection. "You can't get a derrick in there. It's falling apart; it's in pieces; it's rotting.

"The gulls are having a heyday."

Alper said it would take heavy duty public works equipment to move the whale carcass, but it's impossible to get any to the rocky site.

"It's a catch-22 situation," the mayor said. "I don't see any possibility of us going in there and removing it. But there's no way to bury it; it's right there on the rocks."

The 43-foot finback whale washed up on the rocks Thursday, according to Dick Whittaker, assistant special agent for the National Marine Fisheries Service. He said the whale had been dead several weeks.

Whittaker said the whale was above the high tide line, and was too badly decomposed to be hauled out to sea by the Coast Guard.

Residential education increases social skills

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

This is the first story in a five-story series highlighting student affairs activities at the University of Massachusetts.

Even though it is five weeks into the semester, there may still be some things in your dorm you have yet to find besides the trash room and the TV lounge.

Instead of sitting around studying or trying to find out whether Luke and Holly have indeed found true love, you might find time to speak with your resident assistant and find out just how they got to be one, or stroll into your residential college's art gallery, usually next door, or get yourself a list of the colloquia offered in your area.

The opportunities are there, like the ads say, "in your local neighborhood," your dorm.

For, most of the time, your RA and your art gallery and even your TV lounge have one thing in common: they were all put together by the office of Residential Education, which educated your RA and set up the colloquia so you, as Joseph Zannini, director of housing services at the University of Massachusetts says, can get "the most of education by developing any number of skills that support student's academic interests and personal goals."

"Residential halls can be cold and frightening places," said Charles Durant, assistant director of Housing Services for Residential West. "We have to build an environment where that is not the case. That is what is really important."

The residential education system is divided in two parts: west, which consists of the Southwest residential area, and east, which is made up by Sylvan, Northeast, Central and Orchard Hill.

Programs offered in dorms

These are the facilities and programs offered by the Office of Residential Education.

RESIDENTIAL EDUCATION EAST:

Wheeler Art Gallery, Martin Luther King Center, English workshops, Math tutorials, Colloquia offered: Courses offered, Arts activities in conjunction with Fine Arts Center, Area Governments, R.S.O., Study Centers, Computer Centers, Jazz Series (Orchard Hill).

RESIDENTIAL EDUCATION WEST

Hampden Art Gallery, Hampden Computer Center, Colloqs offered: Courses offered, English workshops, Math tutorials, Hampden Theater, Malcolm X Center, Southwest Women's Center, Southwest Week, Area Government, Craft Shop (Hampden).

Residential Education, in its present state, is relatively new to the University of Massachusetts. Both Durant and Larry Moneta, assistant director of housing services for residential education east, began their jobs in January. Before Durant and Moneta, there were three residential education programs: Southwest, Northeast/Sylvan and Central/Orchard Hill.

"We're a whole different organization," Moneta said. "We have gone to a system of larger communities with working specialists, as opposed to three independent communities with generalists."

Durant and Moneta each have two area coordinators, a staff development coordinator, and a program coordinator. Each week, Durant and Moneta and their respective staffs meet.

"Essentially Durant said, We have redefined the mission of residential education. The resources are all there. We are doing all we can to integrate as many university programs and resources as possible."

For example, Residential Education may offer a colloquium on stress/anxiety management. Durant said he would not hesitate in asking someone from mental health services for advice.

Moneta agreed, "I have absolutely no doubts about calling people outside residential education and asking for their help," he said.

Moneta added he is excited by this kind of support.

Moneta said he sees his job as to serve as a catalyst to student growth.

Durant emphasized the point. "Our job in the residence halls is to increase social skills of people so they can learn who they are and how they fit into the local community," he said.

"We want to help people feel secure while they are moving from one life to another," Durant said. "People tend to forget that there are certain life stages students pass through."

World Food Day celebrated in Amherst and worldwide

By TOM KELLEY
Collegian Correspondent

"There's absolutely no reason for any people in this world to be starving."

John Barrus, former legislator and current lobbyist, urged a crowd of 40 attending the World Food Day celebration on the Amherst Common Sunday to join him in his fight against hunger.

The basic theme of the gathering was to recognize the people who produce food in the world and to "affirm our everlasting commitment to fight hunger," according to Ron Gisick, coordinator of the local celebration, which was also held in more than 150 other countries.

The event began with a "Crop Walk" through the town to raise money for Crop which is the Community Hunger Appeal of Church World Services, and continued with speakers, entertainment and information booths set up by various organizations which deal with local and international food problems.

Barrus, Assistant Commissioner of the State Dept. of Food and Agriculture, said the main problem with world hunger was not supply but the delivery systems of the food to the people who need it.

"Much of the food intended for the hungry does not get there," Barrus said. "There is an inability to talk among many nations, and there are those who propose to use food as a weapon."

According to The Hunger Project, an organization that seeks to abolish hunger world-wide, an estimated 15 to 20 million people die of hunger and starvation each year.

Rod Gisick, former Community Coordinator of the Hunger Project, said he was disappointed in the poor showing but added, "The issue of hunger scares people a lot. I really don't know why people don't get off their asses and do more."

Some of the organizations represented were the Western Mass. Food Bank, Unicef, Bread for the World, Jesse's House which provides emergency shelter for homeless families, The Soup Company which serves lunch on Saturdays and Sundays at the First Congressional Church in Amherst and some local farmers with their produce.

Speakers discuss the future of journalism, technology

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

In five or six years, there won't be any more newspapers.

Instead, people will tune in to their home computers, browse through lists of stories, choose a topic that interests them and request a more detailed report. For those who prefer to do their reading on the subway or in the coffee shop, corner newsstands — a computer housed in a phone booth — can provide instant printed material for 10 cents and the push of a few buttons.

Such is the destiny of the newsprint media which, through computer technology, has already begun to revolutionize itself in a society where technology will eventually be responsible for the redistribution of employment and incomes, a professional journalist said Saturday at the University of Massachusetts.

Bob Hodierne, metro editor of the San Jose Mercury in California, was one of seven speakers addressing a crowd of 50 working journalists, editors, professors and students during a seminar "Reporting the Future." Speakers discussed the role of computers as devices to gather information and Hodierne concentrated on the effects both the information explosion and its form of distribution will have.

Newsroom computers, or video display terminals, can now spell, create graphic designs, and compile data. At the Mercury they are connected to public offices so breaking news such as election tabulations, are entered directly into the newsroom system.

But while the computer age will modernize the newspaper industry in many ways, the role of the reporter will remain unchanged.

"Technology is changing and changing very rapidly, but person involvement is still the same." Hodierne said.

Frank Faulkner, a UMass professor of journalistic studies and city editor of the Springfield Daily News, said information can now be obtained so quickly by computer that reporters are often aware of situations before the people involved.

"Reporters are often dealing with stories or information, trying to get a responsible reaction from people who haven't even gotten word yet," he said.

Faulkner said today's reporters are not those with master's degrees in journalism but in varied fields like business or chemistry.

"Reporters are becoming more professional," he said. "They're people who can do analysis, who can rely on what they learned in college and what they think. Information is no good unless reporters can come up with some sort of design."

Hodierne said electronic news will benefit the public by eliminating space restrictions on stories and providing views with in-depth reports on news of their choice.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

What savage budget cuts?

Editor's note: This is the first in a two-part series on Reaganomics.

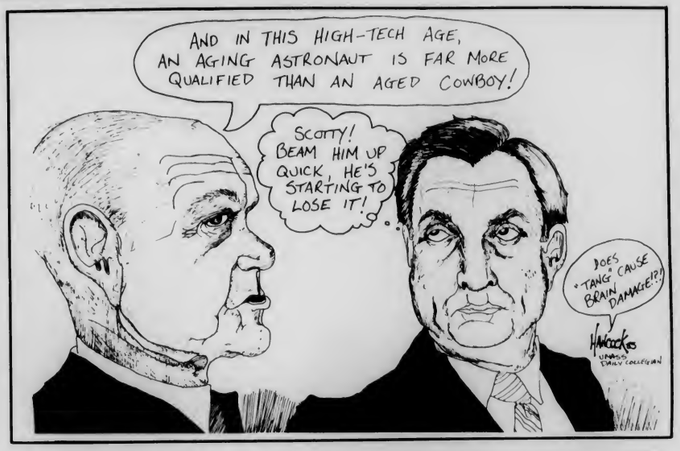
Way back in December of 1981 a Washington Post editorialist made an interesting observation about ketchup. And I quote"... the notion of substituting ketchup for vegetables never appeared in the proposals at all. It was a horrible possibility conjured up by a nutrition advocacy group as something that state agencies might do under color of a new authority to increase menu variety." This fact, however, did not prevent scores of congressmen, reporters, and other leftist types from screaming at the top of their collective lungs that once again Reagan was hurting the poor. In fact, the chant, "Reagan loves the rich" has been used so much by politicians, reporters and others with demagogic tendencies that a statement has been awarded the title of a fact. However, if the curious person sweeps aside this partisan rhetoric to look at the facts, an entirely different picture emerges.

Katherine Curda

Just such a study was recently completed by a neo-conservative scholar and writer Michael Novak of the American Enterprise Institute, utilizing such sources as the Internal Revenue Service (IRS), Social Security, and Congressional Budget Office Records. In the area of budget cuts described as "savage", "brutal", "icky" and so on, Novak reveals that, "As for gross expenditures on welfare programs, even adjusting for inflation, there are a few, but only a few, welfare programs on which the government is spending less in 1983 under Reagan, than was spent in 1980 under Carter."

For example, Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid spending from 1980-1983 went up roughly $78 billion dollars for a 1983 total of $244 billion. Other examples of spending increases include $2 billion dollars for food stamps, $400 million for women and infants, $458 million for Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) and $2 billion for Supplemental Security Income. In all social spending from 1980-1983 rose $107 billion dollars, with food assistance alone going from $14 billion to $17.8 billion dollars. Savage, ain't it guys.

"But wait!" cries the leftist critic with pompous indignation, "What about the evil tax cut? Surely that helps only the rich." Again let us look at the facts. Using 1980 IRS tables we find that the top 3 percent of the population earning over $50,000 paid $79 billion in taxes, or roughly, 31 percent of the $250 billion collected from individuals by the IRS. On the other hand, the bottom 50 percent who earn $12,000 or less paid $14 billion in taxes or roughly, 6 percent. Therefore, concludes Novak, "One cannot say that those in the top layer benefit unduly from a cut in tax rates that is of the exact same proportion granted every other taxpayer. For by saying this one would simply be calling attention to the far greater proportion of taxes such persons are now paying."



However, in the interest of mollifying leftists who simply can't stand the thought of giving anything to the rich, the Congressional Budget Office has noted that under the Reagan program, "the largest tax cut in dollar terms has gone not to the very rich, but to the $10,000-$40,000 middle income groups, which as a group also has the most households and the most income." Brutal, ain't it folks.

Yet in the name of "fairness" (that quasi-mystical quality which along with "compassion" the left claims is missing from conservative diets) it should be stated that under the current Administration some cuts in social spending have occurred, the most prominent being in the misty area of "projected rate of increase." This translates into the idea that if the current administration fails to increase a programs funding by as much as some outgoing Carter official or advocacy group thought it should be, this is equal to a budget cut.

In examining the actual cuts made in domestic programs it should be noted that as of 1981, 42 percent of all dollars expended on low-income benefits went to households, which when that aid was included, earned incomes 150 percent above the poverty level or roughly $13,390. What the so called "savage cuts" amounted to was a case of deciding that those who had work would find their welfare benefits declining at a slightly more rapid rate. For example, Congress limited food stamps to those no higher than 130 percent above the poverty level or $12,280. Yet for those not working and on welfare, benefits such as AFDC, food stamps, Medicaid etc. are greater now than under Carter.

Nevertheless it is true that some people's benefits have been cut and to this the outraged voices demand to know why these peoples benefits were cut. The answer to this can be found in Novak's observation that, "Just above their ranks are others who could use a little help, and also above those." Where, one must ask, can we successfully draw the line? In the United States today we spend enough on welfare to fund every poor family at the poverty level 10 times over. Just how much is enough?

Tuition hikes – education a la carte

In an effort to get themselves off the hook for their inadequate funding levels for public higher education (Massachusetts is 48th in the country in aid to public higher education), the state legislature, for one year only, will allow state schools to raise tuition a maximum of 15 percent and retain this money on campus. If you happen to be a legislator who has little concern for low cost education, this is a great idea. Schools get more money without costing the state anything — Unless of course you're a student, then you will pay. But students are political sitting ducks; they don't even vote and they barely scream anymore.

Joel Weissman

Unfortunately for the University of Massachusetts community, someone has taken the bait — the Chancellor of the University. Duffey, armed with this new legislation, has proposed a $50 increase in tuition. This money would be used for "providing greater student access for courses and majors in "high demand areas" among other things. While the concern is real, the solution that Duffey has proposed should be opposed by all who are concerned about the University.

A $50 increase in tuition will have little or no impact on over-subscribed courses. It is apparent to many that any new monies generated will not be available in time to search and hire new faculty for courses with high demand, nor will the hiring of graduate students be a panacea. Additionally, it is not at all clear that the state legislature has any intention of extending the one year provision of the legislation. Thus, programs begun with the new money may have to be cut back after only one year.

Over the past 20 years tuition and fees have risen 500 percent at UMass (at the same time the consumer price index has risen 211 percent). Students attending UMass already are paying comparatively high tuition and fees. According to the National Association of State Universities and Land Grant Colleges, the tuition and mandatory fees for UMass are already higher than 90 percent of the 190 schools in its survey.

Duffey is badly out of step with public opinion when he suggests a tuition increase to finance public education. In a national opinion poll over 60 percent of Americans thought tuition levels at institutions of public higher education were already too high. A staggering 85 percent of those polled said that they would support increased state funding for public higher education and that education was second only to medicine in terms of funding priorities. In light of this, a mid-year tuition increase might cause a major public relations boondoggle for the University.

With the Reagan cuts in financial aid, there is an increasing gap between available financial aid and their financial need for many students. The proposed increase in tuition will only increase this gap. Students who have already received their financial aid package will not be able to have it renegotiated to reflect the higher tuition cost. For the many students who exist near substinence level on financial aid, the mid-stream increase in financial aid is certain to cause problems.

Probably the most disturbing aspect of Duffey's proposal is the philosophy that it epitomizes. The proposal implies that the state cannot afford the burden to adequately fund public higher education. That burden must be transferred to the users of the service. This philosophy is at odds with the concept of public higher education because it denies any social benefit of higher education. His philosophy implies that students can and should pay more for their education. He is wrong on both counts — UMass is an expensive land grant university and its students have a large amount of unmet financial need. It is a defeatist strategy that will make it impossible to approach the legislature for increased funding. Unfortunately, Duffey is not the only administrator who holds this position. When the administration could not obtain state funds to renovate the Curry Hicks gym a student fee was quickly suggested.

This line of reasoning is tinged with more than a little irony. It was only 10 years ago, as the General Secretary of the American Association of University Professors, that the young Joe Duffey urged the Democratic Party to commit themselves to the concept of low tuition for public higher education. In a speech to the Domestic Affairs Task Force, Duffey said, "Some persuasive and eloquent spokesman, both in government and from the business community, have begun to argue that the cost of providing low-tuition post-secondary education is too great for the public to bear, even with a mix of federal, state (funds), and philanthropy." He argued forcefully against the attempts to shift the funding of public higher education from the state to the individual. He said that this approach "leans heavily upon the argument that the main benefits of higher education accrue to the individual rather than the society itself and therefore the individual should pay the main costs of such an education." This approach to shift funding "persuasively advocated by prestigious spokesman...(is) a failure of nerve and leadership."

Where is the Joe Duffey of old? Seemingly he has joined the cacaphony of powerful voices that he warned us about ten years ago. Regardless, his proposal to raise tuition is ill advised and should be opposed by all of those who are concerned about the University. A $50 increase in tuition will not alleviate the problem of over-enrolled classes, but it will be a financial hardship upon students. It will not create a better university, but will only result in a public relations disaster. It will not, in the long run, mean more money for the University; it will only send an unmistakable message to the legislature that anything that the legislature doesn't fund will be picked up by assessing students higher and higher tuition and fees. Clearly, Duffey's proposal is a short term solution to some long range problems.

Due to administrative demands, a preliminary decision on the tuition increase must be made by November 1st. Any tuition increase is bound to be controversial. A November 1 deadline will not leave adequate time for the University community to have any input on this very important decision. Are we to understand that input by students, faculty, and the citizens of the Commonwealth is not important and should play no role in this important decision? Duffey would do well to remember his former commitment to low cost quality public higher education "for every young person capable and willing to take advantage of the opportunity."

Jorma talks about his music

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

This week Hot Tuna started it's first tour in five years with a new rhythm guitar player, Mike Falzarano and a new drummer, Shigemi Komiyima. John Dwork and I spoke to Jorma about a week before the tour started.

Interview with Jorma Kaukonen 10/5/83 1:50 p.m.

JK: . . . and the drummer's name is Shigemi Komiyima.

PW: Oh, where did you meet him?

JK: Well Michael used to work with a band, this was about three or four yars ago. He's from Yakohama, Michael was living over there for a while.

JD: Didn't Mike Falzarano do layout for Barbaque King, the inside cover?

JK: Jeez, I don't know, you know I really don't know. He does do art work so you know it's conceivable. I really have no idea.

JD: Is he going to be filling the same shoes as Craig Douglas did in '75?

KJ: No, Michael and I had been doing some work on an album together before the Hot Tuna project started. We've been writing some songs together. He also has his own band in San Francisco called Vauxhall. And so he and I both sing and we both play really good together, so its much more of an ensemble approach.

JD: So there will be new music as well?

JK: There will be actually mostly new music.

JD: So this new stuff, is it more New Wave, more Rockabilly? I remember seeing you at the Savoy in 1982 when you were doing the electric stuff, you were doing some rockabilly sort of stuff.

JK: Yeah, I know. It sounds new. I hesitate to characterize music. One of my keyboard player friends said, "Boy that sounds really new wave," I really don't know what to call it but it is new. It doesn't sound in the same headspace as Hot Tuna did although you can tell who's playing because you play the way you play, but, jee wt's an (unintelligible) thing to say but what can you say about something you haven't heard.

JD: Is it going to be somewhat of the same format, you're going to start a song and then go into jamming?

JK: Well, it's more song oriented. We also jam really well together too and there are a lot of vehicles for doing that. But the songs tend to be much more song oriented then in the past. We go crazy from time to time too.

JD: One thing I was wondering was, the rumor is that there's going to be the Heavy Water Light Show with you guys?

JK: I really don't know. You probably might know more about it than me, I haven't heard these rumors. But I've been surprised before.

PW: What's it like playing with the light show? When you can't really see the light show, does it affect the way you play?

JK: No, I play with my eyes closed most of the time anyway; so it doesn't really make too much difference to me.

JD: You're pretty much the one person that stands out in our mind as the person that's keeping music like that of Gary Davis Jr. alive. It seemed to us that this marks about the twentieth year that you've been doing things like Hesitation Blues.

Jorma: "You have to function in a way that makes you happy."

JK: It's the twentieth year that you've known I've done these things.

JD: It's probably been more like thirty.

JK: It's more like the twenty-sixth year.

JD: Well what we were wondering was; a lot of the musicians that we get to talk to seem to be sort of addicted to the guitar, they can't put it down for a single day. Even if they're not playing for an advance.

JK: I know what they mean. I haven't been able to put one down for about, it's getting close to thirty years.

JD: Is it the type of thing where you can stick with acoustic guitar, I know you switch around a lot. What keeps it fresh for you?

JK: Uh, I've thought about that and first of all I really love guitar music of all sorts and I always have. It's just plain fun to play. That's really the only way I can put it, you know, I think that the guitar's a very sensual instrument, one of the only instruments where, well I shouldn't say that because all instruments you relate to in this kind of way but, it's a very first person instrument. I mean everytime you move or do something some different sound comes out of the guitar.

JD: Would you say over the years that obviously things like drugs had a positive effect upon your aesthetic frame of reference toward the music. Would you say it made any positive or negative influence on you kinestetically. For example, Pete Townsend and Jerry Garcia these days have been having problems with drugs and we the fans have noticed that that's made a difference in their playing.

JK: Well this hasn't been the case with me. I'm a good boy. You got to save that kind of stuff until you have some kind of terminal illness.

JD: So there's no guilty feelings?

JK: Yeah, right. Funny you should say that. One of my friends out here that knows Jerry real well, I used to know Jerry real well but I haven't seen him in a decade or so, was just talking about that. What a drag that was.

JD: Cause you automatically get put in this position that you get looked up to for inspiration and it's just a real drag for me, our whole thing with the Grateful Dead Historical Society is that it's no longer up to the artists, it's up to us to take that inspiration that your generation has provided for us and then be creative in our own life.

JK: You're absoutely right.

JD: And that's real tough, what do you tell a sixteen year old who sees Jerry Garcia or hears about him shooting up? You know, its's a fucked up thing.

JK: You're right. Well you know, what you've got to tell him is that people are people and what somebody does as an artist doesn't necessarily have a whole lot to do with you know, whatever, you know, turmoil, whatever they got through in their own personal life. I personally find that it's a lot easier to be creative when you're not miserable about something. I did an interview a long time ago with B.B. King, he and I were being interviewed by somebody else and the interviewer was saying well, how 'bout it, they were talking about playing the blues, to cut a long story, and B.B. was saying, "Look you play to make other people happy, you can't play when you're miserable yourself." Now this may or may not be a true generalization, but the thing is that if you admire music in somebody then you got to be able to separate the good from the bad. And I personally don't think that uh, that you can say well shit I want to be just like so an so therefore I'm going to do a bunch of dope, I mean that's a dumb way to do it. You have to function in a way that makes you happy. And some ways of functioning tend not to make you happy in the long run. But you know this is a decision that people have to make themselves. Does that make any sense?

JD: Yeah, I'm an athlete by profession and I noticed through my own athletic ability that I've gotten to this level of this zen sort of consciousness where you're at an optimum mechanical facilities level.

PW: Do you still go speed skating?

JK: That's the kind of thing I'm talking about. I haven't had time to do that, in the last year or so.

JD: When you practice a discipline over and over again you get to the point after a while where all of a sudden you don't have to think about it you just do it.

JK: That's right. And there's a good and a bad aspect to reaching that point and the good aspect is obviously that if your ideas are happening you can transfer them to the rest of your body and your body will do more or less what your creative thought wanted to do. On the other hand, what you were saying when you've been playing a song like "Hesitation Blues" for twenty some thing years in order to keep in happening in a fresh kind of way, and I don't mean working out new arrangements, you have to get into the essence of the song every time you play it. And sometimes I'm more successful than other times. That's why being a musician is not always as creative a job as maybe being a painter, say because you're also a performer. And if you're performing a song then you have to play that song and certain things have to be done to make that song work. You have to kind of get into the song and extrapolate these various different nuances and inject little things here and there that nobody else might notice but that at least makes it fresh for yourself. It's not good to go on automatic pilot, which is really a pretty easy thing to do.

JD: Well that's the loose jamming, that I used to see down at the Palladium, but seeing you, for example, at the Iron Horse recently was a completely different thing. I'm just talking about that state of mind where you sort of lay back into a song for a few minutes and just let it go. And it seems like there's a big difference in that whole realm of structure versus improvisation between when you're playing alone and when you're jamming with somebody else.

JK: Like for example, I'm working on this other recording project with Michael, I was mentioning before, and I just got hooked up with a friend of mine name Jerry Longham who's a keyboard player, he's playing with some band that does soundtracks and things like that, he just got one of these Yamaha DX-7S, it's an algarythm with a sixteen voice Polyphonic synthesizer, and he and I and Michael and my wife have been doing some recording at home and were doing lots of real free form stuff that is just so wild I can't even begin to tell you about it. Now we're not going to be doing any of this stuff with the band because it's not rock and roll. This is more like getting into the space of the weird sounds. There is a group (unintelligable) what our private record project is going to be is this because this stuff is blowing me away. But uh, like before we sit down we start playing a theme and all these sounds start happening with the sixteen voice poly. Like Michael and I can be doing guitar riffs and we get all these weird sounds happening and then Jerry can be playing something that sounds like a rhythm and blues thing on the synthesizer and with the breath control all of a sudden these horns, these stacks of horns start playing, it's unbelievable.

JD: Where's your head at these days I know over the last eight, nine years that I've been seeing you, you sort of go in and out with, literally in and out with the amount of boxes, phase shifters etc. I just wanted to know where your head is at right now.

JK: OK, well what I'm doing now is I've really simplified my whole thing. I'm using lots and lots of guitars. There's two reasons for this. One, I love guitars, you can't have too many guitars, and all the ones that I have I play. I don't have any that lay around and gather dust, I'm not a guitar collector, I like things I can do things with. I collected for a while and I wound up selling off all the stuff I didn't use a lot. But anyway, so what I'm using in terms of amplifiers is I'm using a distortion, a distortion — plus, a volume pedal, and then I'm using a pitch transposure and an anolog delay, but with all these things you can get tons of effects. Mike on the other hand has got, shit I don't know, yesterday it looked like he has fifteen pedals on the floor. So who knows. I mean the thing is with the guitar you can get so many different sounds and there are so many ways to go it's just that these guitars that I'm playing now take so many sounds on their own that with just the little bit of processing that I have, I can make all different kinds of noise.

PW: Like I noticed when you played at the Hangar for a while you were playing really loudly, you were just getting different noises and sounds.

JD: Over the P.A. even. Something different was coming out then maybe it seemed like you were hearing.

JK: Yeah, this can happen. It has really weird overtones.

PW: I thought that was real good and I'm wondering do you do that intentionally in different places to get different sounds out of different . . .

JK: Yeah, I do. Actually I can't hear it. Sometimes, I mean, that's the realm where I really like to get out there and experiment around. Sometimes it's more successful than others but, I've gotten to understand my gear pretty well. The Iron Horse is a nice little place, a little minimal on the P.A., but by the end of that tour I was doing, Rob the guy that was doing sound and I that was like our third gig together, by the end of that tour we, he an I, have been working just fantastic together, I played a regular straight folk festival in Sandy Hook, New Jersey. It was really great because these people didn't have the slightest idea who I was and it was like a real challenge it was like a competition of some sort to show everyone hey I can play the shit out of the guitar and really enjoy it. I had a really great time because a lot of the time, which is not to take away from an audience at all, but if you go to a show and people know what they're going to hear, they're kind of programmed to respond in a certain kind of way and it's really fun to play for people who have never really heard what you did before and see if you can win them over.

JD: That's good. I was fascinated with the whole change that took place between the time that you filled in for the Hot Tuna tour at the Palladium, the first show where you played the four hour acoustic set, which is one of the best shows I've seen ever, I walked out of there numb.

JK: So did I.

JD: I was talking with this guy in Florida who is perhaps the biggest Tunahead in the world, this guy Steve Bailey who you may or may not know, he's got like 500 hours of your music . . .

JK: Have mercy.

JD: You know there's still people out there that collect Hot Tuna . . .

JK: Hey listen, God bless 'em.?

JD: . . . that have these sorts of tapes and stuff. It's a big thing.

JK: I must say I really like that aspect of it because when I was growing up and I'd be interested in going around, you know I had the time to go around and hear other people play, see thats of the things. You don't get time to do that, you know when you're playing a lot yourself. But uh, I, we used to go wild with the tape player, taping everything, changing, trading shit, selling, buying copping licks.

JD: So you don't feel there's any of the bad things about people taping your shows? I mean as long as it's not sold.

JK: My approach to that has always been I really like if somebody asks me if they can tape a show I almost always say yes depending on the attitude. The only time I'm a dick about it, an' I am a dick about it sometimes, is if the guy offends me, you know, it's strictly personal. But other than that I figure people are going to tape anyway. It's nice if they ask you, and if they do then you can help them to and they get a better tape. If not then they've got to take their chances.

JD: right, 'cause you know there's two completely different heads as far as that's concerned. I mean a lot of Deadheads are the same way. The last thing on their mind is selling the music.

JK: Well, you know when somebody asks me I almost always say, well look if you're going to make any money out of this send me a percentage of it. Nobody has so they either haven't made any money or ignore me. But I think you're right I don't think this has anything to do with making money, people just like listening to music.

UMass beats Temple, loses to ODU 1-0

By MICHELE DOLAN
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — It would have been great field hockey to watch. Three contenders, all in the Top 10 met this weekend at Temple University.

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team's record split this weekend in their two games against nationally ranked Temple and Old Dominion. UMass toppled ninth ranked Tempie 1-0 on Friday, but fell by the same 1-0 score to second ranked Old Dominion, Saturday.

In the Temple game, the UMass stickers dominated outshooting Temple 22-5. The winning goal was scored by Patti Smith, with an assist from Pam Moryl. Moryl took the ball down the right wing, worked it around the endline, and dumped it over to Smith, who put it in the net.

"Our gamewith Temple was very hard fought," said coach Pam Hixon. Temple goalie Robin Porter is one of the U.S. team goalies in the off-season. It was a big win for UMass.

In the ODU game the Minutewomen were outshot 13 to 5 by the Monarchs. ODU took a 1-0 lead but UMass came back with heavy pressure with 15 minutes to go and had a lot of penalty corners. But the Minutewomen couldn't get the equalizer, according to Hixon.

Patty Shea played outstanding in goal against ODU.

"We were tired on Saturday," said Hixon. Although the Minutewomen were a step slow and didn't play to their potential in their game against Old Dominion, they were much happier with their performance this year than last year. Last year ODU pounded UMass by a 5-0 score.

"We played very well as a team," said Hixon of the weekend. "Our passing game is one of the best around. We received a lot of compliments from our opponents about our playing style."

Perhaps the loss, which gave UMass a 9-1-1 record, didn't speak as loudly as the win. The games were both hard fought for the Minutewomen. Had there been a day of rest separating the Temple game from the Old Dominion contest, the UMass pressure maybe could have been stronger.

It was one of the most important weekends of the season, one in which the best teams play the best teams. "I think we've got to be considered as a contender (for the National championship)," said Hixon. The Minutewomen have been ranked number four in the nation for the past two weeks.

The tournament "put us in a lot better frame of mind," said Hixon. "We were disappointed that we didn't win (against ODU), but if you have to lose, we could take the ODU as a learning experience for us. We see the things we need to work on."

The weekend presented UMass with their two biggest challenges thus far in the season. The played well and came home with a big win, and a tough loss. They came home knowing where they stand.

They meet Harvard next at home. Gametime is at 3 p.m. Wednesday, at NOPE.

The junior varsity field hockey team has been having a successful season as well. They have three wins and one loss and will face Harvard next on Wednesday, 4:30 p.m. at NOPE.

Men's soccer can't cash in, loses to URI in OT

By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Staff

After many University of Massachusetts men's soccer game this season the opposing coach has approached second year UMass coach Jeff Gettler and said something to this respect, "Your team played a great game, it's a shame you didn't get any breaks." Unfortunately for the Minutemen, University of Rhode Island coach Geza Henni approached Gettler with such a statement after last Friday's match on Boyden field.

UMass (1-7-4) bowed to Rhode Island (7-3-2) by the score of 1-0 in double overtime. This was the Minutemen's sixth overtime game this season. They have failed to come up with a victory in any, tying three and losing three.

The team has had a hard time on offense so far this year so Gettler made some changes prior to the game to try to put a spark into the offense.

The changes included benching a veteran and the switching of positions for two other veterans. Fullback Lenn Margolis a key member of the Minutemen's stingy defensive unit was switched to forward and the team's premier defenseman, senior captain Kevin Flynn, was placed at sweeper.

The changes were successful as both players played very well. The UMass offense kept pressure on URI throughout the game but failed to finish up any of their offensive flurries with a goal.

The game was a match up of two defensive squads who both allowed few shots on goal. Regulation time ended in a scoreless tie with neither team having any real scoring threats.

The Minutemen defense, with Flynn adding a helping hand at sweeper, frustrated the Rams offensive scheme. They successfully contained URI's dynamic duo, juniors Tony Fontes and Gil Monteiros the teams top two scorers.

Unfortunately, they weren't able to continue the containment in overtime as Fontes set up Monteiro perfectly with 8:34 left in the second and final overtime to give the Rams the victory.

The Minutemen put on some heavy pressure in the final 8:34 but came up empty handed.

Gettler's troops had their best scoring opportunity in the first overtime when a URI handball right in front of their net set up a direct kick for the Minutemen directly in front of the net about 15 yards out.

URI set up the traditional human wall 10 yards away from the ball. The kick was taken by sophomore midfielder Mike Bellion, who faked the kick and passed the ball to freshman back Peter Geddes who blasted a shot that hit the crossbar.

Volleyball could've beat 'em in Delaware

NEWARK, DEL. — The Delaware Invitational Volleyball Tournament was as tough as it was supposed to be. The five hour ride home was even tougher with the echos of "we had them," filling the University of Massachusetts volleyball team van.

The tournament featured some of the best division I teams in the East. UMass was one of only three division II teams invited to this tourney and yes, they almost had 'em.

The first (best two out of three) match was no indication of what was to happen in this tournament. UMass fell to a powerful George Washington University team 15-10, 15-8.

UMass lost their second match in straight games as well, but things had changed. With the return of blocker Leslie Smith and a tough loss in game one, UMass was tired of losing and were looking to have some fun.

James Madison, a division II school, was the unlucky foe. UMass won the first game handily 15-9. Game two was tougher but the gutsy spikers prevailed 16-14, and the fun had just begun.

The next victim was LaSalle. UMass blanked the woeful LaSalle 15-0 in the first game. The spikers romped all over LaSalle once again in game two, winning by a 15-4 margin.

The next obstacle for UMass was not another team, it was time. The red hot spikers had a two hour wait before facing the host team Delaware in the quarterfinals. It may have been the break which prompted this reflection from head coach Elaine Sortino, "These are the best teams in the East and we can play with them! We're not that far away."

Facing the strong Delaware team, however, victory was just out of reach for UMass. Falling behind 7-1 in game one was a tough start but it wasn't the end. UMass scratched and clawed but fell just short losing 15-9. Game two was even all the way but the final tally showed Delaware on top 15-12.

UMass may not have won this tourney, (in fact they left before a winner was established) but they made some great gains, nonetheless. "Offensively and defensively we executed very well," stated an excited Sortino."The team sense is there, they are playing real well together. We've got to feel good about this weekend."

The spikers, now 21-8, have a well deserved week off until they travel to Vermont next weekend for another tournament. The team goal is to change 'we had them' to 'we got them!'

Cortland coach Chris Malone said that the officiating was fair but inconsistent and said that the refs made bad calls on both sides. He didn't mention, though, about the non-call when Nadia Komarowski was apparently tripped up in the penalty area with less than a minute left in the overtime.

Cortland also had 22 fouls to UMass' 14. Cortland was a very physical ball club on the field

*women's soccer

In the second half Cortland picked up the pace of the game and played at an intense rate, pouncing, pounding and pushing UMass away from the ball. Both teams were playing defensive ball but UMass had the offensive edge. Cortland coach Chris Malone did not want to lose the game and said after the match that he was happy to tie.

"We played poor offensively because we weren't ready to play," Malone said. The game was scheduled to begin at 1:00 but the Cortland team thought 2:00 was the starting time. The start was delayed a half an hour.

"We got screwed because we weren't ready," Malone said. "It took us the first and second half to get ready. We're lucky UMass didn't explode."

Banda attributed Malone's satisfaction with the tie to trying "to make his region look stronger" for the NCAA playoffs. Cortland is ranked third in the Northeast Division while UMass is fourth in New England. UM has lost to first-ranked UConn, 1-0, but defeated second-ranked Brown 3-1 in the Northeast Division.

Harackiewicz, Denault and Bird, who played a great deal yesterday, all had close scoring opportunities in the second half. Denault had one of the better chances when she dashed in from the left side of the net and had a side of the net open but hit the left post.

Both Denault and Kristi Kelly made key defensive plays in the half. Both were involved in one on one plays and won out over the Cortland attacker as they each stole the ball away.

After 90 minutes of play the two teams battled and fought hard but had nothing to show for it. Cortland continued to hover over the Minutewomen, who began to show their tiredness in the first 10-minute overtime.

Jeanne Paul was in goal for UMass in overtime and muffled a Cortland scoring opportunity near the end of the ten minutes. As the ball began to roll in the net, Paul lunged out and caught the ball with her fingertips before drawing the ball to her chest.

UMass back in race with 17-7 win

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts football team gained a quarterback controversy, a tailback, a victory, and a chance at another Yankee Conference title this past Saturday as they defeated the University of Maine, 17-7 at Alumni Stadium.

Events started going the Minutemen's way early when Black Bear quarterback Rich LaBonte was intercepted by UMass linebacker Craig Lesinski, which gave the Minuteman offense the ball at the Maine 42-yard line to start their second possession.

The Minutemen (2-4) traveled those 42 yards on the ground with tailback Frank Fay sweeping in from fifteen yards out for the score, and the George Papoutsidis kick made it 7-0.

The Black Bears tied the score at 7-7 early in the second quarter, going 73 yards on eleven plays. LaBonte scored the touchdown on a keeper from the three.

The remaining 12:19 of the first half could best be described as boring as both teams tried to run the ball down each other's throats to no avail.

As the UMass offense trotted on the field to begin the second half, sophomore starting quarterbak Jim Simeone was conspicuously absent and in his place was senior back-up Barrett McGrath and UMass had a quarterback controversy.

"I thought we needed a change," explained Minuteman coach Bob Pickett. "Barrett ended up doing a good job. We're not giving up on Jim. He is an excellent talent. I don't know who will start next week."

The change McGrath provided was not immediately positive — his first pass was intercepted. However, the UMass defense prevented Maine from capitalizing on their excellent field position (the UMass 20) and four downs later McGrath was back in.

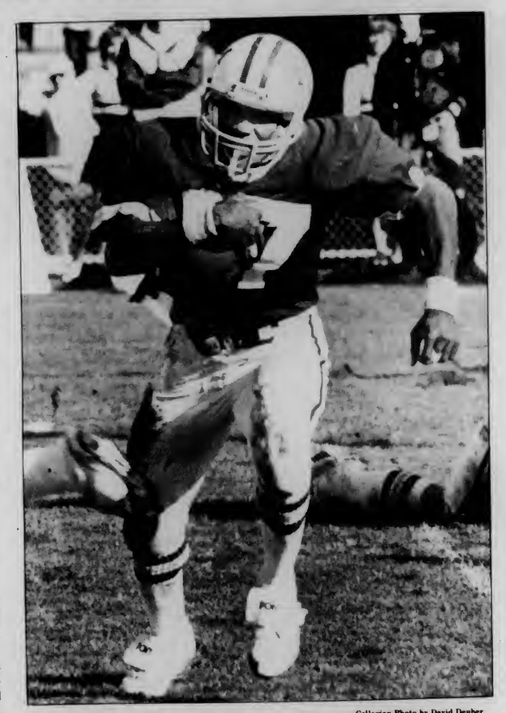
This time McGrath was able to move the offense as far as the Maine 21 before tossing another interception. Two big plays on that aborted drive were passes of 19 and 24 yards to split end George Barnwell whose day was just beginning.

With the Minuteman defense consistently shutting down the Maine attack, the UMass offense was soon on the field again. This time they reached the Maine 19 before losing the ball on downs.

After a Maine fumble and a punt by each team, it was UMass' ball on their own 49. It was also the fourth quarter and thoughts of overtime were dancing in people's heads.

On second and fifteen UMass tried a reverse and Barnwell dashed 24 yards for a first down from his split end position. After that play, the thought that danced into Pickett's head was that George Barnwell should be running the football more often. Four plays later Barnwell was making a spectacular 18-yard run from his new position — tail back — for a touchdown and a 14-7 UMass lead.

A disheartened Maine club fumbled on their next possession allowing the Minutemen to add three points to their lead on the strength of barefoot Papoutsidis' 38-yard field goal.



An intercepiton by free safety Grady Fuller ended any Black Bear hopes of a last-minute comeback and allowed the Minutemen to even their Yankee Conference record at 1-1. Maine dropped to 0-3 and out of contention.

"The defense did a great job. The offense was sluggish and George Barnwell provided a spark. We have used him at tailback in practice,' said Pickett.

MINUTEMAN NOTES: Both Barnwell and coach Pickett received game balls after the game in the very noisy, but happy UMass locker room after the game.

When asked if was going to be moved to running back, Barnwell said, "I'm a wide receiver now. Tailback is from my high school days (at West Roxbury). But I'll go wherever I'm needed to help the team."

In other Yankee Confernce games, Holy Cross outlasted UConn 20-16, New Hampshire pounded Lehigh 52-28 and Boston Univerity beat Rhode Island 24-22. The conference standings now stand at: BU 3-0, URI 2-1, UConn 1-0, UMass 1-1, UNH 0-2, Maine 0-3.

Minutewomen, Cortland battle to tie

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

As the last few seconds ran off the clock and the buzzer sounded to end the second of the two 10-minute overtime periods, University of Massachusetts forward Chris Taggart held her head with frustration before stooping over with her hands on her knees to catch her breath and reflect on the 0-0 tie that UMass and the Cortland State women's soccer team had ended up with, yesterday at Boyden.

The scene around Taggart was basically the same as Deanna Denault walked off the field with her head down in thought and Beth Semonik tried to smile while accepting pats on the back for a well-played game.

The 6-1-3 Minutewomen played with injuries and sickness but fought hard against the aggressive 11-2-2 Cortland team. It was a very long match for UMass which had only nine healthy starters and three on the bench.

Halfback Susan Bird had sat out the Minutewomen's last game because of illness and freshman Michelle Rodney is still not in good health due to sickness. Debbie Harackiewicz played her second game with a face mask because of a fractured nose. Aggressive halfback Jamie Watson is lost to the team indefinitely due to a knee injury suffered in the last game. Taggart had to play halfback with Watson out.

"She showed her character and leadership and even though she's not a captain we needed her leadership," coach Kalekeni Banda said.

"It was a team effort. It was disappointing because they wanted to beat Cortland really bad, but I didn't want to take chances. Everyone was hanging in there by the skin of their teeth."

Kristi Kelly, who made several great defensive plays, fights for control in an earlier game. UMass tied Cortland St. 0-0 at soccer Homecoming at Boyden yesterday.

The first half of the game was UMass dominated. UM had many chances to score but All-American Cortland goaltender, Joan Schockow, seemed to have the whole net covered from top to bottom. UM goaltender Lisa Ellis was not too busy in the half taking only three shots from Cortland.

Harackiewicz plays rough with the Mask

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The walking wounded prowled the field for the UMass women's soccer team yesterday in their hard fought match with Cortland State, which resulted in a 0-0 tie.

Two that hurt a lot and did a lot were sophomores Susan Bird and Debbie Harackiewicz. Bird, who sat out in Wednesday's Springfield game due to an illness, played despite not being at full strength.

Harackiewicz, who played with a mask to protect a broken nose, was less hesistant than in the Springfield game. The mask does restrict her vision and she has a hard time seeing the ball when she's looking down.

Today, she headed some balls with the mask on — drawing a chorus of ooos from the crowd — made some nice passes and powerful corners, got hit in the face with the ball and occasionally lost the ball. Just your average day for any soccer player.

"The referee made me pad the whole thing and it obstructed my vision even more," said Harackiewicz. And when asked about heading the ball, "I'm not really supposed to do it. I just hold on to the mask. I have to (head) sometimes."

Harackiewicz had a hard time dribbling at times because she had to take time to look down and dribble and the Cortland defenders "were on me in a minute." The Ludlow native doesn't care for all the attention she is getting with the mask. She would rather just be number 8 on the field and play.

Third World Theater Steps Into Tomorrow

The Dynamic Duo of King and Shabazz

by Brenda Ling
Nummo Staff

Yolanda King and Atallah Shabazz, daughters of slain Black leaders Martin Luther King, Jr. and Malcolm X respectively, toured with their company, Nucleus, Inc. Saturday night, to open the 1983-4 Third World Theater Series.

King and Shabazz met four years ago. A freelance journalist decided that, with the women having common interests in theater, their being the oldest children of Black leaders and their fathers' political assassinations, he had "a great hook for an article." Although it "was not part of our conscious destiny" to be together when they met at the article's photo session, King and Shabazz were the ones who were hooked.

At Saturday afternoon's informal workshop/discussion, "Changing the Face of the Theater: The Next Step," and at a later press conference, the two women related their life experiences and their shared consciousness of today's Third World theater.

The two were unable to avoid talking about their fathers and the similarities and differences between the two men. Said Shabazz, "Their experiences, strategies, tactics are different, but their drive, their goals are the same." Martin and Malcolm had begun "to blend their thoughts" before their assassinations, and Shabazz described her and King's union as a continuation of " the energy that had been left stagnant by their deaths."

King expressed the women's initial difficulty in moving past the socially accepted incompatability of Martin Luther King, Jr. and Malcolm X. King and Shabazz each "tried to go through all these transitions to define our father in relation to the other man."

The two women found more things in common between their fathers and between themselves, including their both being Scorpios, their birthdays being one day apart -"which is pretty dynamic"-and their relations to the Five College area: King graduated from Smith in 1972, and Shabazz' mother attended UMass.

In talking about theater they traced the origins of Stepping Into Tomorrow; King described the play as "very much a company effort - all of us contributed to the others through improvisation and scripted moments." The production was written as a one-time event, but Nucleus continued to receive offers and so accepted. Two years ago they performed Stepping about six times a year; now the company performs about seventeen times a month.

King believes that this play differs from traditional plays, because it talks about "something all of us can relate to and feel and identify with." Perhaps its being "connected to the consciousness of the people of the world" reflects Nucleus' "commitment to young people and to expressing positive images, positive role models."

Shabazz continued by lamenting that, "People are blinded to politics now; they look at them and turn away." This leaves "the oppressed" always saddled with the blame. She pointed out "underlying negativisms" of t.v. shows that shape our attitudes. Society uses these stereotypes "to preoccupy our time, preoccupy our minds (with) one-sided images."

Such alienation from here-and-now issues alters peoples' immediate demands. They want what they can get now, said Shabazz, snapping her fingers; they don't have the "dedication, consistency, commitment and follow-through that made Martin and Malcolm special."

James Baldwin Speaks

on the Scope of Personal, Political, and Historical Awareness

by Russell Jordan
Nummo Correspondent

James Baldwin, one of America's most renowned and gifted writers, spoke at Hampshire College last Friday. On October 7th at Franklin Patterson's Main Lecture Hall, Baldwin had, in his own words, "a rap session," with a packed audience and various media representatives.

With the ease of a master storyteller, Baldwin wove the connecting threads of his life and times with the sweep of history of the past fifty years. In words as intricate and balanced as his fiction and essays, Baldwin explained his self-imposed exile in France: "I never intended to leave home. Some things happened to me because I was Black, and some because I was Jimmy. I left to find out the difference."

Baldwin covered the scope of the Civil Rights Movement - from the freedom rides, Martin Luther King, Jr. and Malcolm X, to the current political life and struggles of Black America. Baldwin maintained that "the economic system of the western world is still based on slave labor, that is why we can envision and aid an invasion of Central America but not South Africa."

"We have come to a time in our history where either war is obsolete, or we are. This is the first time people are being forced to deal with the meaning of their history," said Baldwin. He accused President Reagan of continuing the mistakes of the past. "If there were no Soviet Union, the people that rule this country would have to invent one. It is perfectly ludicrous to build weapons of destruction while people go hungry."

Baldwin enraptured the audience until the end when they erupted in a thunderous standing ovation. After a brief question and answer period, Baldwin received the congratulations and appreciation of an audience that swept forward to shake his hand.

He is currently working on two books, one a biography of Medgar Evers, Martin Luther King,Jr. and Malcolm X, all of whom he knew personally, and a book about the Atlanta Child Murders. A play by Baldwin, The Amen Corner, is currently on Broadway, and a movie based on his first monumental novel, Go Tell It On the Mountain, which was born in Harlem, New York City in 1924. He was the oldest of nine children, and following in his father's footsteps, he became a Pentecostal preacher at 14. Since the mid 1950's Baldwin has spent much of his time in France.

Destruction of Third World Posters

Within an hour and a half five posters, announcing "Uhuru," the new UMass Third World Performing Ensemble, were torn down Friday afternoon at the Haigis Mall bus stop.

John Ruddock, production coordinator and founder of the ensemble, said that he taped posters inside the shelter area before boarding the 1:10 bus to Mount Holyoke College. When he returned to the Haigis Mall about an hour and a half later, the posters were gone. He found the top halves in a nearby garbage can, but Ruddock believes that the perpetrator took the bottom three-fourths of the posters bearing all the information to make sure no one would get hold of it.

Ruddock thinks the posters were ripped apart very early within the hour and a half because there were posters from two other groups in their places.

"My main question is why was this done?" says Ruddock. "What was the rationale; was it racial? If so, is this a statement being made as to the reluctance of some parties of the community to see the creation of a Third World form of expression?"

Uhuru's aim is to present and preserve the artistic, cultural and social contributions of the many peoples of the Third World. This new University student organization hopes to expand and enlighten the community by revealing the lifestyles and historical experiences of all Third World people, "while realizing the dreams and hopes of each performer in his or her struggle toward recognition and success."

" 'The Year 1oward Civility' was only two years ago, and yet we still have this kind of action (removing the posters) on campus," says Ruddock. "If the University is supposed to be striving toward civility, social awareness and tolerance, as a community, what does this say?" questioned Ruddock. "Was it a superficial pledge (for civility), or is this action a statement warning Third World students not to expand and make their presence felt?"

Note: Uhuru held open auditions for prospective actors, dancers, singers and models on October 15th and 16th. For those people who felt that they might have auditioned had they seen the posters, please feel free to come to the first meeting tonight, Mon., Oct. 17, at 7:30 p.m. in the Hampden Dance Studio, Southwest.

Malcolm X Center Supports King

Mel King, Boston Mayoral hopeful, speaking before supporters at recent press conference

We here at the Malcolm X Center strongly urge efforts to combine the voting strengths of the countless number of Boston residents here on the UMass/Amherst campus with the already strong Mel King mayoral team.

In the October 11th election, Mel King won by only ninety votes, not a large number. That is why all Boston residents are reminded that your support is needed even more so for the Novemeber 15th run-off.

Mel King's views on such issues as jobs, senior citizens and education, along with his approach to running a major city, make him the superior candidate. So VOTE FOR PROGRESS, VOTE FOR MEL KING!

Bridging the Gap

(the second in a series of articles on Minority academic programs)

The Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP) was created in 1974 when a group of Spanish-speaking students and staff began the program, originally named Project 75, to recruit bilingual students to the University. Today BCP offers over 400 students academic, career, placement, and tutorial services.

Benjamin Rodriguez, Director of BCP, said that the program is vital to bilingual students because they "don't have equal opportunity at the University." Bilingual students have to deal with language barriers, high financial need, and academic deficiencies that most white students don't have. "Programs such as ours, and CCEBMS and Minority Engineering are the keys to recruiting and retaining minority students," added Rodriguez.

Recruitment coordination is a very important aspect of BCP. A 1981 study by the Spanish-American Union of Springfield states that 81 per cent of all Hispanic students drop out before they finish high school. "We make regular visits to area high schools to recruit seniors," said Rodriguez. The program also works with first year high school students and does follow-up work over their four years.

BCP also runs a community education project that works with parents, churches, and community agencies to instill the importance of education. Rodriguez said that the project gets a lot of cooperation in the community, but there is not enough funding for the consistent effort that is needed.

Once students reach the University, BCP's efforts continue. "Retention of students is always difficult, and many students depend on our tutorial programs for survival at the University," said Rodriguez. The tutorial program has suffered this year because students' requests have doubled while the budget has remained the same. BCP is interchanging tutorials with the Minority Engineering Program and the Economics department to help alleviate the problem.

BCP has graduated over 400 students and those alumni play an important role in the program. They run career workshops and recruitment drives and are now on the planning committee for next year's BCP 10th year anniversary celebration. The 75 members of the BCP Alumni Association have been very active in the participation and reevaluation of the program.

The staff of the Bilingual Collegiate Program are active in many activities and committees. Along with each counselor's responsibility for 132 students, they are asked to participate on search committees, career committees, fund raising and other activities. "There are so few Bilinguals in terms of staff and professionals," involved in many activities."

Rodriguez said that it is important for the University to continue funding organizations like BCP and CCEBMS because they play a role that no one else does. "The BCP program is opening doors in departments that have been previously closed to bilingual students. We are graduating leaders and decision makers," Rodriguez said.

The Message from Nucleus

The eighth season of the UMass Third World Theater Series opened last Saturday night with a stunning performance of Stepping Into Tomorrow, a play about six high school classmates who meet ten years after graduating to catch up on their life changes.

The play was written and produced by the New York-based theater group, Nucleus, Inc., a small company "dedicated to distilling positive awareness," as was announced just before the actors entered. And as the play progressed, that positive awareness filled every moment, at times joyfully, at times through acknowledgement of the negative, but the overriding tone of the production was that of "wakin' up, shapin' up my life," some of the first words to flow from the stage in a song.

As a small reunion of friends from Filmore High who graduated ten years ago, the play focussed squarely from one charachter to the next. The six classmates met at the beginning to congratulate Debbie on her new act as a club singer. Her opening numbers set the scene: "live every day of your life - you're gonna make it big...when your problems get you down, don't drown in reality...it's the things you do today that shape your future."

Each character unfolded her or his own experiences, beginning with Fred. A basketball star in high school, Fred had begun to rise from rags to richves as a basketball pro. He had signed a contract, had received a cash advance, and had begun to reshape his life, but a sudden injury shattered both his knee cap and his dream of a bright future. "Everything was gone in one fell swoop." Reckoning with the reality of his disability, though, Fred managed to accept the positive option that "maybe I can take my experience, go back to where I came from and teach what I know." So he returned to Filmore High to coach basketball and to help young people develop their talents.

Harry described his early high school career by saying "all they wanted me for was my body" for the football team. His hefty build, though, gave him a hefty tenor that he took to the shcool choir instead. Later in college, his classmates were most attracted to his supply of reefer, and when he ran out of dope, his "friends" disappeared, too. He began to gain popularity when he overcame his shyness and sang out to large crowds. "I was somebody; I didn't have to smoke no reefer." He enjoyed communicating with people, and ultimately became a preacher, "to give some of that back to the people."

Denise began her talk on the note of "I wasn't but fourteen, fourteen and pregnant," continuing on with "for as long time, I hated Gina. She had just come along and changed my life." It took Denise years to accept responsibility for her child, and to make the conscious decision not to enter the welfare rolls, as had her mother and grandmother. Instead she got a job and took college courses, all the while caring for her daughterr, and, after seven years, "as of this past June, I was a college graduate." From her experience she learned to be open with her daughter about sex, to teach her "to love herself," and to "know that whatever happens, it'll be her choice."

Julia, the only drop-out of the group, had won a state talent contest and decided to follow a dancing career instead of finishing school, which had never excited her anyway. "For the first time in my life I felt special," so she disregarded her grandmother's pleas of "Honey, please stay in school."After ten years of dancing the same steps for a show, directors finally replaced her with a younger woman. With no job, and no high shcool diploma, "looks like my granny was right, (but) my granny also said, 'it's never too late.'" A graduation equivalency exam helped her announce to her friends, "I'm gonna be special again, giving to people, I'm gonna be a nurse, y'all."

After that up note, Michelle began to reminisce with "I do remember havin' fantastic dreams about what I was gonna be doin'," teaching or practicing law. She won an award, but it stumped her. She was voted Most Likely to Succeed,"...but at what? I never had a life of my own," she cried, looking back on her years as involved but unfocussed. She had achieved, but had lived for her parents, for their pride. This she realized after her parents' divorce and her attempted suicide. Then she was able to say, "life is fine, I'm livin' and growin' every day." Working with kids as an educator, she stressed to teenagers to think carefully before each move,"because, in the end, dear heart, it is for you."

After a lively stage number with everyone joining in song and dance, the characters left the stage with an emotional high. Immediate audience reaction reflected that high and was positively charged. Said UMass junior, Kimberly Brannon, "I loved it, it had an excellent plot, and the actors are so talented." Kenneth Drarden though it "interesting to focus on every day life problems of ordinary people and (how people deal) with them." Deirdre Samuel, UMass sophomore, "loved it a lot, it had a lot of meaning" for why a college student should get an education.

Nucleus has been welcomed by high schools and colleges all over the country. Nucleus just returned North from a Georgia tour last week. As actor Deborah Malone said, "If just one person can click, that's great." She also commented that "the best audience is the more attentive college audience." However, performing for high school audiences, in Malone's opinion, is most demanding. "They can smell a phony in a minute - you've get to be real."

The reality set on stage Saturday boils down to how Yolanda King capsuled the group's message: "You cannot stand up for a thing unless you know how to stand up for yourself." And at the close of the play, Nucleus left UMass with the clear vision that youth must take on the challenge of self-affirmation, must wrestle with social circumstances, personal mistakes and chance in order to step into tomorrow.

Shabazz also said that "we are being studied; behavioral patterns, sexual, musical, what kinds of food you like, are being studied."She thinks that these studies are used to manipulate our actions by redirecting our attention and energy from the total reality of our existence.

King and Shabazz have co-authored a play with a more religious tone directed at the church community. They plan to collaborate on a theater work about their fathers. Shabazz mentioned the thought, "Can you imagine Martin and Malcolm dancing and singing?" With the imagination, insight and talent of these two women, anything is believable.

UCF Chaplain, Robin Harden

by Donette Wilson
Nummo Staff

Josh has departed, but Reverend Robin L. Harden remains as the Protestant Chaplain, the newest addition to the clergy on our campus. Rev. Harden is employed by the United Christian Foundation. When she first heard about the position, it seemed intriguing to her because of its "duality." She is called to be Protestant Chaplain, which places her in the position of ministering to the larger community, as well as having specific thrust on servicing minority students. In trying to handle and respect the two facets of the job, she "looked forward to the multiplicity and the kind of challenge it would pre>ent."

Rev. Harden's concerns are the quality of students' life once on campus. She believes that "many (Third World) students are lost to the student body and that those who do stay have to fight for their identity, being in the midst of a predominantly white environment." As an Black woman who attended a predominantly white insitution herself, she is aware of what that entails. Therefore, if there is anything she can do to help anyone through that struggle, or any other struggle one may encounter, she "wants to be there."

She is concerned with letting the community know that she "is here, cares and is available." Gaining access to the student body has become a major issue, because in recent years there were two chaplains. Now that there is only one, it seems a bit more difficult to do. In finding this out, Rev. Harden wants to "make (her)self a part of the community." She wants to be supportive of student-run organizations and also to initiate programs of her own.

Rev. Harden is now planning different events for the end of this month and for the end of the semester. She also will look at concerns and programs that Black students want to implement

Knowing that students are enthusiasic about Rev. Harden's presence and what she is attempting makes her say,"Well, maybe I am doing something after all."

Rev. Harden's offices and hours are 305 New Africa House, Monday and Tuesday, 9 a.m.-12 p.m., and 428 SUB, the United Christian Foundation office at any other time.

Dick Smith's Initial Thrust

by Rich Thorpe
Nummo Correspondent

Dick Smith. The name sounds quite ordinary, but the vocal talents of this man belie that. His debut album entitled Initial Thrust is just one of four projects that Roger and Zapp Troutman, the sibling producers, have in store for 1983. The other three albums are New Horizons, Zapp III, and the latest release from Roger Troutman.

Initial Thrust is basically a collection of former golden hits. Four of the six songs on the lp achieved acclaim and popularity with well-known artists such as the Beatles. Smith's commanding baritone takes hold and respectfully conquers them.

His renditions of Lennon and McCartney's "The Long and Winding Road" and Jim Webb's "By the Time I get to Phoenix" are handled soulfully and without restraint. The latter has an Ohio Playerish sound towards the end and the backup singers, most of whom are from the Ohio Players, Zapp and Parliament, add a familiar, warm air. "Stay with Me Baby" is a punchy, driving number and "Over and Over Again" has a heavy reggae beat, bluesy horns and a sassy harmonica influence.

"Stay with Me Baby" and "Over and Over Again" are the only original compositions on the album. Throughout this record the vocal arrangements and backup vocals are inspirational. The strong horns add tremendously to the overall sound, especially on thelowdown homecooker, "Tobacco Road." The keyboards seem surprisingly watered down. It's a shame that such a gifted keyboardist as Bernie Worell, borrowed from George Clinton to guest on the album, doesn't get more of a chance to shine.

Overall I enjoyed this album. It has some flaws, but it is an impressive debut nonetheless. This man obviously has some talent. Dick Smith has made himself more than an initial thrust.

Ex-convict tells of life on the inside looking out

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

People listen to Jerry Sousa speak on prisonlife because his stories are true, told by somebody who has been there, not by a fellow student, newspaper or other outside source. The stories of poverty, brutality, dehumanization and constant struggle for survival are mind-boggling.

Jerry Sousa, after seventeen years in every correctional facility in the State of Massachusetts, including eight years in the solitary confinement unit of Walpole prison, is back into the community and now relates all his experiences to others as a teacher and lecturer around the state.

He is currently teaching a course at the Southwest Residential College at UMass entitled "Prisons as a Microcosm of Society" where he tells students that our society is not unlike prison with its racism, sexism and drugs.

"I was beaten, lied to, set up and harassed. I once lived in a room that was like a toilet where the walls where caked with human excrement.

"I used to think I was insane but then I realized that they were insane and this is what gave me strength. Society has created their own madness — I didn't do it.

"This is what I teach in my course. I hope I have an impact on people. I love people and I love the grass and the stars that were taken away from me," he said.

Sousa first entered prison in 1963, sentenced to life after being convicted of first degree murder of the proprietor of a cafe during an attempted hold up with two other men. He was never supposed to get out.

But he did get out by reflecting on his life, gathering the strength within himself that caused him to fight back and sue the Department of Corrections for the brutality and suppression of civil rights he had experienced.

After ten years, his lawsuit was victorious; after several years, his sentence was commuted by former Mass. Governor Ed King.

"The brutality that I received for so long behind the steel and concrete is just one form of imprisonment that exists in our society," he said. Racism, sexism, peer pressure that people are caught up in nowadays are also prison arresting the mind. "We live in a stratified society that is perpetuated by the media, schools and people in power," Sousa said.

"Why did I have to grovel in the dirt while someone else was sitting in a yacht? Because of the way I was born into a lower social statum.

Political strife causes resignation of SSAM rep

By BOB BURGESS
Collegian Correspondent

Internal divisions within the University of Massachusetts chapter of the State Students Association of Massachusetts (SSAM) and the state-wide organization itself culminated in the resignation of the UMass chapter representative yesterday.

The SSAM has chapters in 13 of the state's 28 public colleges and universities, and is attempting to unify the entire system under a set of goals which includes representing all students as lobbyists in the state legislature, voter registration drives for students, and the creation of a student seat on the Board of Regents of Higher Education.

Fran Pheeney, elected UMass representative to SSAM last April, said Monday she will resign because "a lack of organization" within SSAM is thwarting these goals.

"The (SSAM) constitution is unnecessarily vague," Pheeney said. "It needs bylaws detailing how money is to be spent, exactly what roles the officers will play in the organization, and how officers and campus representatives will be elected."

Pheeney said a bylaws committee was created, earlier this year a meeting was arranged, and "nobody showed up."

Permanent funding for the SSAM is also a problem the group must face, Pheeney said. The Undergraduate Student Senate paid the $300 initiation fee when it approved the SSAM constitution last spring, but that money, along with fees paid by all 13 chapters, will not last long, she said.

UMass students voted in a referendum election last spring to support the SSAM through a $1 per semester fee increase, but the UMass Board of Trustees has hesitated to approve any fee increase which would not go directly to the campus.

The fee increase, matched with those at other member schools, would create the "permanent funding base" the organization needs if it is to lobby full-time against bills in the legislature which would raise the drinking age to 21 or tie state scholarship aid to registration for the draft, Pheeney said.

But until bylaws are written, she said, SSAM "doesn't have enough organization to work together on these issues."

Jim Crosby, who has worked to build SSAM for the past year, disagreed, saying, "we have had organizational successes within that group which have never been realized before."

Barry Wray, a transfer student and former chapter representative from Springfield Technical Community College, stressed past successes of the group, including a "$19 million increase in state financial aid this year which was directly attributed to student input through SSAM."

Reagan is in says manager

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, still refusing to say whether he will run for reelection, became a presidential candidate Monday "in the eyes of the law," and his campaign chairman said he was "a solid favorite" to win.

The president signed two letters at his desk in the Oval Office. One authorized Sen. Paul Laxalt, R-Nev., to establish a campaign committee. A second informed the Federal Election Commission that he was "hereby authorizing this committee as my principal campaign committee ..."

While Reagan refused to say whether he will seek a second term, his senior aides and advisers have said they have no doubts.

The president told reporters who witnessed the signing that he might announce his intentions "by the first of the year." Asked whether his signature in black ink on the letters meant that he was running, the president replied with a smile, "in the eyes of the law."

After the president signed the letters, Edward J. Rollins, his assistant for political affairs who is leaving the White House staff to direct the committee to re-elect Reagan and Vice President George Bush, said, "We're 100 percent confident the president is running."

Larry Speakes, the president's spokesman, said he interpreted the step Reagan took Monday to mean "he's running and the only thing that remains is the formal announcement."

Reagan has said that he is reluctant to declare his intentions because if he does not run, he would become a lame duck. If he does run, he has said, he fears that each step he takes would be seen in a political context.

In 1982, about 50 percent of bachelor degree recipients at the University of Massachusetts were women, but only 15.6 percent of all faculty were women, a statistic which many students expressed displeasure with Monday.

"I think it's a sad statement on our university," said Charlene Allen, Student Government Association co-president.

Allen said the statistics, published in the 1982/83 UMass Factbook, show that Affirmative Action has made little difference on campus and "exists in name only."

Other students reacted much the same way in interviews conducted in the Campus Center and Student Union Monday.

"It's unfortunate but unsuprising. Departments will always say 'Joe has merit, Dave has merit, Harry has merit, and Alice, well she's okay," Alex Wilce, a graduate student from Amherst, said.

Jim Murphy, former SGA president and now an SGA senator said "It's deplorable. The University can do something about it."

According to statistics, in 1982, out of a total of 1,211 faculty members, only 189 were women.

Tom Ahern, SGA co-president said the statistics are "disgusting. The Administration has a lot of work to do. It's a good issue for both students and faculty to work together on."

Alicia Altieri, a senior UMass student from Bethany, Conn. said the unbalanced statistics are "unfair to students and professors."

Tracy Hatch, a senior from Longmeadow, said "I don't think it's a fair proportion, but I don't understand if it's on purpose or just coincidental. If it's on purpose then something should be done about it."

"It bothers me...I'd rather have more female teachers," she said.

What they show are that the priorities of the campus and the administration are questionable. I think the administration, if they really care about equality should do something about it.
— Maura Dare, junior from Westwood

Some students said the statistics reflected poorly on the UMass administration.

"What they show are that the priorities of the campus and the administration are questionable," said Maura Dare, a junior from Westwood.

"I think the administration, if they really care about equality should do something about it," Dare said.

Alexandra Turner, a senior from Bolton, said the campus should try and change these figures.

"Education systems should make the first advance in breaking down sexism in society," she said.

Not all students thought the statistics were all bad.

"I don't think they have any bearing on anything. Your getting your degree really doesn't have anything to do with them (the statistics)," Dara Murphy, a junior from Longmeadow said.

Carl Schulz, a senior from Sudbury, said the statistics do not show any sexism on campus, but rather "all (they) mean is that at the time more male faculty were interested in teaching."

Co-president Allen said if enough students show their disapproval with the University's hiring record, changes could come about.

"We can influence tenure decisions if we are aware of them. It will take a lot of students to pressure on campus groups, but we can influence (the administration)," she said.

US-USSR trade relations improve

MOSCOW (AP) — With yellow Caterpillar bulldozers gleaming in the Indian summer outside, Soviet and American trade representatives called for increased commerce between the two nations Monday at the start of the first U.S. trade exhibition here in six years.

U.S. officials said 105 firms were represented in the show, called Agribusiness-83, which is aimed at opening the Soviet market to American farming and food-processing techniques and equipment.

The show could bring American firms millions of dollars in orders, and it was heralded by both its U.S. and Soviet organizers at opening ceremonies that drew Soviet Deputy Foreign Trade Minister Vladimir N. Shushkov, U.S. Ambassador Arthur Hartman and Dwayne Andreas, chairman of ArcherDaniels-Midland Co.

"Our trade efforts may be even more important than arms control," Andreas said. "The most important development from this is to expand good relations and thereby reduce tensions in the way that trade can do.

"Even if we reduce all of our nuclear capabilities by 75 percent, there will still be enough weapons left to decimate civilization," the Decatur, Ill., resident said.

Andreas, who is an executive committee member of the U.S.U.S.S.R. Trade and Economic Council, the show's sponsor, said all the U.S. equipment, from giant combines to laser devices for keeping earthmoving equipment on a steady course, was not subject to trade restrictions.

The plans for the show were made a year ago, but were apparently upset when the Soviets shot down a South Korean jetliner, killing 269 people, on Sept. 1.

Man sold weapons research to Poles

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — An American was charged with stealing secrets about the Minuteman missile and other U.S. weapons research and selling them to a Polish spy for relay to the Soviet Union, government officials disclosed Monday.

An army expert said the material described Defense Department efforts to enable the Minuteman to survive a nuclear first strike by the Soviets, according to an FBI affidavit filed in court.

James Durward Harper Jr. of Mountain View was charged with stealing secrets from May 1979 to the present for more than $250,000, according to the FBI.

Harper, arrested Saturday, was arraigned Monday and faces a capital crime espionage charge, which could bring a life term in prison if convicted.

The affidavit said the FBI obtained information from a highranking officer in the Polish intelligence service.

The FBI said Harper, 49, passed sensitive or classified U.S. information involving Minuteman and ballistic missile defense systems. The Minuteman missile is the backbone of the strategic missile force.

The affidavit alleged that Harper "did unlawfully, knowingly and willfully conspire " with Zdzislaw Trzychodzien, an officer in the Polish intelligence service Sluzba Bezpieczenstwa, and others to transmit the defense documents to the Polish People's Republic.

The affidavit said the spy activities occurred in California, Warsaw, Geneva, Vienna and other places.

The FBI said information allegedly supplied by Harper was relayed to the KGB, the Soviet Union's intelligence service.

Dioxin determined not as dangerous as before

KIRKWOOD, Mo. (AP) — Tests conducted on people exposed to dioxin at two sites in eastern Missouri showed no "meaningful ill-health effects," health officials say, but many residents are still skeptical.

"Everybody has had great fear and concern, perhaps attributing their health problems to dioxin," Dr. Henry Falk of the federal Centers for Disease Control said at a meeting with local residents Sunday. "But we've not been able to find any increase in clinical abnormalities."

Explaining the results of the testing of 104 people in St. Louis and Jefferson counties were Falk and Dr. H. Denny Donnell Jr., the co-director of the Missouri Dioxin Study.

"The results of this pilot investigation should be reassuring," Donnell said during the series of meetings at St. Joseph's Hospital. "We have not been able to identify meaningful ill-health effects related to potential exposure to dioxin."

Green Beret finds jail more fun than military

DANBURY, Conn. (AP) — Marc E. McDonnell was fed up with the low pay and risky job of being a Green Beret. So he decided to threaten a millionaire out of his money.

The plot failed, but he says he's finding jail more fun, in some ways, than being in the military.

"It was about a 50-50 chance," said the staff sergeant, who was stationed at Fort Devens in Ayer, Mass., when he decided to try the ploy. "If it didn't work, I figured to walk away and never try it again."

Things didn't end up quite as he planned.

The idea came up in idle conversation with other members of the Speciel Services, or Green Berets, at Fort Devens, McDonnell said. He saw the idea, he says, as "a quick $20,000" to cover bills and start a "nest egg" for his children's education.

About 70 people dead following gas explosion

SOUTH CHARLESTON, W.Va. - A natural gas explosion ripped through a crowded grocery store Monday, setting off a raging fire, and a sheriff's spokesman said many people were killed.

Bob Ellis, an administrative assistant with the Kanawha County sheriff's department, said rescue crews at the Foodland store were "projecting somewhere around 70 dead," but he said that "could vary by 20 or 30 either way."

He said the estimate was based on interviews with witnesses and the number of cars in the grocery's parking lot.

"We can't give any number because we can't get into the building," he said. "The fire is still fully committed. It's being fed by a natural gas leak."

Alex Usenia, a construction worker who witnessed the blast from the parking lot, said the building was shattered by the force of the explosion.

"The entire front, all the glass in the front of the building, blew completely out and the left side wall of the building blew completely out," he said.

Thick, black smoke poured from the building and was visible several miles away from the store on Oakhurst Drive. Firefighters from Charleston, South Charleston and neighboring comunities tried to extinguish the fire, which spread to a Hudson Sign Co. warehouse next door.

Von Bulow's lawyers criticize client's trial

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — The jury that convicted Claus von Bulow of twice trying to murder his wife heard a case "short on hard facts and long on inferences," the socialite's lawyers told the Rhode Island Supreme Court on Monday.

Asking the five justices to set aside the attempted-murder convictions or order a new trial, defense lawyer Alan Dershowitz said the state failed to prove an insulin-tainted needle found among von Bulow's personal effects was injected into anyone.

Dershowitz, a Harvard law professor, said the black bag found by von Bulow's stepson and a private investigator that contained the needle and drugs was improperly seized from von Bulow's closet.

He also objected to the trial judge's failura to allow von Bulow's lawyers to examine notes the private investigator made during his investigation.

A Superior Court jury decided March 16, 1982 that von Bulow, 57, secretly injected his wife with insulin during Christmas visits to their Newport mansion, knowing it would aggravate her blood sugar condition.

Challenge Program provides guaranteed UMass admission

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

This is the second in a five part series

How many students do you know who have signed a contract with the University of Massachusetts?

Students at Boston English High School have been doing it for almost four years, and soon students in several other Boston high schools as well as in Springfield will also have the opportunity to sign contracts with UMass.

These contracts are not legally binding; they are part of what is called the Boston-Springfield Challenge Program, run by the University Admissions Office in cooperation with the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and Minority Students (CCEBMS), and the Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP). Assistant Director of Admissions Rudy Jones described the Program as "an early academic intervention program" which seeks to identify from 25 to 50 students in the 10th grade and works with these students in insuring they are placed in college preparatory courses.

Each student signs a contract requiring the student to take four units of English, three of college preparatory mathematics, two units each of a foreign language and of a laboratory science, and one unit of U.S. History. Five other units in mathematics, science, foreign language, history and social science are also required.

If a student successfully fulfills the contract, takes the SATS, and applies to the University through either CCEBMS or BCP, the student is guaranteed admission to the University.

Paul Barrows, director of CCEBNS, said while there is guaranteed admission, there are no guaranteed admissions to any specific major. Barrows said he is looking forward to working with deans and department heads to address this policy. "It has to be a cooperative thing," he said.

"The program is not restricted to minority students, but primarily directed at them," Jones said.

Funded by the Student Affairs Office through Equal Access Task Force, the program can be called "an attempt by UMass to help public high schools prepare quality students for college," Jones said.

Barrows said BCP, CCEBMS and UMass admissions are working collectively to gather all available expertise to maximize the program's potential for effectiveness.

"I emphasize the word 'collectively,' " Barrows said.

There are now plans to expand the program to Dorchester High School and Jamaica Plain High School, as well as either Classical or Technical High Schools, both in Springfield. "Western Massachusetts is right in our back yard," Barrows said, "and we haven't been doing as much for them as we could be."

Jones said Springfield was chosen as an expansion site for the program because it is close to the University, and "we can impact the Springfield area with even more University resources."

The Challenge program has run into a few problems, the greatest of which is the skimming of students by other institutions.

"We lose a lot of gems to private institutions," Barrows said. "Unfortunately, we cannot offer the financial aid some other colleges and universities can, and not with the speed they can offer the money, so we end up losing out in many cases."

Police report stabbing and beating

By GREG BROWN
Collegian Staff

Amherst Police said they have a suspect in a stabbing that occurred early Monday morning.

The victim, whom police identified as a 21-year-old man from Pelham, was treated at Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

Police said he was stabbed outside the Village Inn on Amity St. at about 1 a.m. Monday, in what the victim called "an unprovoked attack." The assailant used a utility knife, police reported.

In other police reports, a UMass student was arrested Friday and charged with open and gross lewdness. Eric S. Jensen, 20, of Portland, Maine, was arrested at 5:40 p.m. after a woman reported to police that he drove by her twice Friday morning, exposing himself and masturbating. The incident occurred at 7:20 a.m., and the police identified the man after receiving his license plate number from the victim.

Three arrests were reported for driving while intoxicated. Robsert J. Driscoll, 29, of Topsfield, was stopped for erratic operation at 1 a.m. Saturday and charged with DWI on Sunderland Road.

Nelson P. Barnett III of Belchertown was stopped at 2:40 p.m. Friday and charged with DWI and operating without a license or registration.

A head-on collision at Pine and Henry Streets resulted in the arrest of Amherst resident Carl T. Ostrowski, 34, on a charge of DWI. His car collided with that of Robert Neill, 45, also of Amherst. No injuries resulted.

In more police action, a 26-year-old Riverglade resident was arrested at 6:30 p.m. Friday when Amherst Police assisted State Police, who had a search warrant as a result of a drug investigation. The charge was possession of cocaine; police said the culprit had "a couple of grams."

Police said Clare M. Galvin, 20, of West Roxbury, was arrested at 3 a.m. Sunday and charged with being a disorderly person. Galvin was "abusive" to police when they responded to a complaint that she would not leave the Brittany Manor apartment she was visiting.

At 10:15 p.m. Saturday, police found a man at Fearing St. near College Pizza in the road. The man had been severly beaten, police said, and sustained injuries to his head from what police called "a bad sucker punch."

Collegian to discuss dialogue

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff

Editors of the Massachusetts Daily Collegian, The Office of Human Relations, and a small planning committee, have organized a conference entitled "Campus Journalism: Social Conflict and Freedom of the Press" to be held from 3:30 to 8:30 p.m. today in the Campus Center.

The conference was set up in order to increase the dialogue between the Collegian and the University community. Its specific goals include informing the campus community about the Collegian, its operation and issues of press freedom, informing the Collegian staff about the needs and concerns of its multiple audiences, and generating suggestions for improving Collegian/community dialogue on an ongoing basis.

Josh Meyer, Executive Editor of the Collegian and a member of the planning committee, said he feels that the purpose of the conference is to "clear up misconceptions people have about the Collegian and campus journalism."

"We are an independent newspaper. We want to show that independence means printing all sides of an issue," Meyer said. "When we deal with controversial issues, people are always going to disagree, and any attempt to suppress a conflicting opinion will be detrimental," he said.

Rita Murphy, Collegian Women's Issues Editor and a member of the planning committee, said she sees the conference as a "way to inform the somewhat misinformed audience about the makings of a newspaper, not only the Collegian but other campus papers."

"I think it's good that the University has finally decided to allow both critics and advocates of the First Amendment, and freedom of the press in particular, to come together under one roof to discuss this vital right bestowed on all individuals in a free society," said Murphy.

The conference is a result of articles thought to be controversial and anti-semitic printed in several issues of the Collegian and Nummo News last semester.

"Over the years we've heard from various groups on campus who've been concerned with the way the Collegian deals with certain issues," said Judy Davis, from the office of Human Relations. "Some have the sense that the Collegian is an autonomous entity that isn't open to suggestions from the community. We're hoping to change that."

Joel Myerson, Collegian Editor in Chief, and Chancellor Joseph Duffey will begin the conference at 3:30. Robert Trager, lawyer and author of Student Press Rights and College Student Press Law, will give the keynote speech: "Freedom of the Press and Social Conflict: Addressing Dilemmas on Campus." A panel response, "The Dilemmas from Multiple Perspectives," will be held at 4:30, after which the audience will be allowed to ask questions. The panel will consist of various editors and professors.

A dinner will be held at 6:30, followed by ongoing dialogue, a summary and conclusion, and an informal reception. Although reservations have already been made, those interested in attending the conference from 3:30 to 6:30 are encouraged to do so.

Mediation and LSO provide settlement avenues

Non-legal resolutions offered by Mediation

By JENNIFER L. CORNACCHIA
Collegian Correspondent

You think you've had all you can possibly take. For the third week in a row, your punk-rock roommate cheers on a pet snake as it devours mice while you try to watch Ronald Reagan reruns or play your Tammy Wynette albums.

Don't despair--there may be a simple solution to end all your problems.

Thanks to Janet Rifkin, professor of Legal Studies at the University of Massachusetts, there is hope for those wanting to settle their differences with others to make life a whole lot easier.

Rifkin is one of the founders of The Mediation Project, a program designed to resolve conflicts through an impartial third party.

Rifkin and her associates have solved dormitory disputes, landlord-tenant legal hassles and sexual harrassment cases; the project has softened racial conflicts, ironed out family disputes, and tried to solve employer and employee problems.

"The project gives people a means by which they can resolve their problems that otherwise might have been avoided or gone unresolved," said Charles Vose, staff intern of The Mediation Project and other senior Legal Studies major.

It all starts with a mutual agreement from both parties involved, that they are able and willing to resolve the matter, Vose said.

It takes time and sometimes tears, but most of the time an agreement both parties at least consider reasonable can be reached, he said.

But the element the case must have before it reaches Rifkin's office in 127 Hasbrouk is that the participants must have previous good contact with each other: as lovers, good friends, close co-workers, Vose said.

It is not the type of service, for instance, you would use if you wanted to solve the legal problems of a small auto accident, with a person you did not know, he said.

Specific cases are often referred to the Mediation Project by members of the Student Judiciary, or Ombuds Office, dorm staffs, Residence Hall attorneys and others who feel those cases are more appropriate for mediation than legal action.

"Mediation is a good process because it is not as formal a system as the courts or other judicial bodies," Hamel said.

When a resolution is reached the parties sign an agreement stating the settlement terms. Although the agreement is not legally binding and is signed in good faith, statistics prove the project's success.

"We've found that about 80 percent of the agreements are upheld by the participants in the dispute," said Vose.

LSO extends advice professionally and free

By PAUL TOMLICH
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Legal Services Office (LSO) offers undergraduate and graduate UMass students free advice and counsel in many areas of the law.

The LSO handles a wide range of cases, concentrating on areas of interest to students such as consumer protection and landlord-tenant disputes, as well as criminal cases, said Charles D. DeMare, director of the office.

Each of the four full-time lawyers of the office staff emphasize certain areas of the law in their individual practices. and eight student legal assistants aid the lawyers by summarizing detailed cases and helping with legal research, he said.

DeMare said of the 2,000 to 3,000 student cases the LSO handles a year, approximately two-thirds of the cases are "advice only," which means an attorney simply recommends a course of action for the student to take. The remaining third are in some way handled by a lawyer, through phone calls, a letter or representation in court.

Mediation services, which formerly were handled by the LSO, are now under the guidance of The Mediation Project (see related article). DeMare said the LSO will mediate some student cases but will not represent either of the students in a suit.

The best way to find out if the LSO can help you is to go to the office and ask as advice is not given over the phone, DeMare said.

The LSO is located in room 922 of the Campus Center and is open Monday through Friday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. all year, including intersession and summer break.

Crampton survives number 7

University of Massachusetts police received a report of a fire at 8:57 in Crampton dormitory Thursday night. The fire, the seventh since Sept. 25, was contained in a trash barrel in the second floor trash room, according to the police report, and there were no injuries. Police said the case is under investigation. There are no suspects.

In other police action:

Michael B. McKenzie, 17, John F. Montague, 18 and Dennis S. Yeo, 19, all of Peabody, were arrested and charged with disorderly conduct and disturbing the peace at 12:30 a.m. Saturday, UMass police said.

A UMass student reported a hit-and-run accident involving personal injury at 12:33 a.m. Saturday police said. The student, after having her leg run over while on Sylvan Access road, was transported to Cooley Dickinson Hospital, according to police. The operator of the motor vehicle, Kristen Ritter of Amherst, was later cited for leaving the scene. The case is under investigation.

Peabody parents set up scholarship

Warren and Vita Freedman of Peabody have established the "Debbie Freedman Scholarship" in memory of their daughter, a former University of Massachusetts student who died in a bicycling accident this summer.

The scholarship is to be awarded to a graduating senior of Peabody H.S. interested in majoring in art in college.

Freedman was a graduate of Peabody Veteran Memorial High School, and would have been a junior art major this semester.

She was involved in student council in high school and while at UMass, she was a member of Hillel, the campus organization for Jewish students, and also worked for UPC (Union Program Council) as a security guard and an artist.

Freedman also did calligraphy work and had some of her work published when she worked in the graphics department of a large store.

Anyone interested in helping the fund can send their contributions to: Anita Bauman, 11 Albert Road, Peabody, 01960.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Who benefits from welfare?

Editor's Note: This is the conclusion of a two part series on Reaganomics.

In yesterday's column I attempted to point out to those critics of the current administration's economic policy who refuse to allow such trivialities as facts get in the way of their hysterical criticisms, that the so called "savage budget cuts" were quite limited in scale. Yet taking such a stance puts you in the same difficult position as the politician forced to respond to the rather slanted question of whether he had indeed stopped beating his wife. You've already lost before you've answered it.

The same principle applies to the area of budget cuts. By saying to the critics, "We have not gutted welfare spending" you thereby place yourself in the curious position of actually justifying this spending by your very argument that the cuts were quite limited. As long as you argue from this point of view you will always lose because you have failed to challenge the leftist claim that high social spending benefits the poor. Yet if one looks at the record of the massive and expensive "War on Poverty", it becomes apparent that it is the supporters of large welfare spending who should be on the defensive, not their critics.

'OH HI, SHERIFF! ER, ME AND THE WIFE AND KID WAS JUST HAVIN' A LITTLE CELEBRATION... BUT YESSIR, WE'LL KEEP THE NOISE DOWN, SIR, NOW THAT YOU MENTION IT... YESSIR, SURE WILL...'

Katherine Curda

Some examples: In 1964, 4.1 million people got $900 million dollars in Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC). In 1982, 10.9 million drew $6.8 billion in AFDC benefits and as of 1983 we are spending $7.8 billion. Food stamps went from 360,000 people in 1964 at a cost of $30 million dollars to 22 million people receiving $14.8 billion in benefits. In 1963 there were 160 federal transfer programs, now there are more than 1000. For the fiscal year 1983 the U.S. government will spend roughly $400 billion in entitlements to individuals with almost $250 billion going to Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid. Even the most vocal of the spending advocates can hardly call this insufficient, but what have the American people gotten for their money?

In 1981 the Census Bureau reported that the number of Americans below the poverty level had risen to 31.8 million, the largest number in more than 15 years. The advocates of larger welfare spending tried to put the blame on Reaganomics, yet as economist Warren Brooks pointed out, "The Reagan budget cuts (such as they were) did not take effect until 1982. The huge 1981 rise in poverty (2.2 million) took place during a year when social spending on the four major anti-poverty programs rose by a whopping 14.8 percent, from $289 billion to $332 billion." Those who are now trying to blame the recent rises in the poverty population in terms of the small administration budget cuts, should first explain to all of us these rather interesting statistics.

A few years ago someone calculated how much it would cost to lift every man, woman and child in America out of poverty by simply giving them money. It was one-third of what is being spent on poverty programs today. Indeed, if we take the $400 billion being spent on entitlements to individuals, and even subtract the $250 billion going to Social Security, Medicare and Medicaid, that leaves us with roughly $150 billion to spend on the poor. $150 billion divided by the 1982 poverty population of 34 million amounts to $44,117.64 for each person labeled as poor in America, roughly $176,470.56 for an average family of four. If the poor don't seem to be receiving this money, then where does it go?

According to conservative black economist Thomas Sowell, "A lot of money was finding its way to people who were not poor by any stretch of the imagination — administrators, statisticians, consultants, economists, sociologists, think tanks, universities, social agencies and miscellaneous boondoggles. They may get most of the money, but the poor get most of the blame for inflationary deficits. The welfare state is the ultimate in "trickle-down" policies."

Whenever charges of massive fraud and abuse are leveled at social spending, its defenders always piously point out that, after all, it is for a good cause. But is it? How do they explain the fact that even though welfare spending is at its highest, the poverty population is still increasing. How do they explain the fact that food stamps alone loses $1 out of every $10 dollars spent. Finally, how do they explain the fact that from 1950-1968, the era of low social spending, the poverty population fell from 30.2 percent - 12.8 percent; while from 1968-1981, the era of massive welfare budgets, the poverty population rose from 12.8 percent - 14.0 percent, and is still rising. I have always wondered why people who declare Pentagon cost overruns cause for large budget cuts, refuse to apply this same fiscal purity to the "poverty lobby", whose sprawling bureaucratic empires continue to grow and spend, always in the name of "the poor", who seem to receive little of this largess. When it comes to spending and wasting money, it seems, the "evil military-industrial complex" could learn a few tricks from the compassionate "poverty lords".

The Collegian and social conflict

Editor's note: Today the Collegian is sponsoring a conference entitled "Campus Journalism: Social Conflict and Freedom of the Press" in conjunction with the Council on Human Relations. The purpose of the conference is to articulate the functions of an independent student newspaper on a university campus in the hope that our audience will better understand our roles and responsibilities. This editorial was written to familiarize our readers with the Editorial/Opinion page, and its function within the Collegian and the University.

Every year, the Collegian has been criticized by just about everyone concerning our performance and attitudes on issues of campus is, freedom of the press, and social conflict. We are, therefore, proud to have organized the conference today, and optimistic that many of the unfounded concerns that have been raised about "irresponsibility" will be laid to rest.

Josh Meyer

The Collegian is not, and has never been, an irresponsible newspaper. The allegations made are a result of common misperceptions about the function of a free and independent newspaper, and its perceived role in a democratic society (and campus).

On such a large and diverse campus as UMass, the newspaper serves as an informational and educational tool designed for the purpose of disseminating "news" and news analysis to the whole community. The Editorial/Opinion page is the line of communication between the Collegian and the community, and between different segments of the community itself.

When a newspaper criticized the Collegian of "flagrant abuses of free speech" this summer, the issues of free expression and academic discussion on the Editorial page were raised. It seems that members of the University community — staff, faculty, administrators, and even students — were distressed about the newspaper's publication of editorials and letters about sensitive issues. The University is an educational community devoted to the inquiry of pertinent issues of today and to critical analysis of them in order to see how they will have an impact on us. As such, these issues are raised, and even provoked, on the Editorial page in order to present all sides of any story — diverse viewpoints, rebuttals of things previously stated, and controversial opinions appear on the page, and may have a jarring effect on its audience. This is one of the purposes of an editorial/opinion page. As Voltaire once said, "I may disagree with what you say, but I'll defend to the death your right to say it." It then follows that anything that "does not materially and substantially interfere with requirement of appropriate discipline in the operation of the school" is fair and just commentary worthy of publication. The purpose of the editorial page is to promote "wide open and robust debate" and "dispute and the exchange of provocative viewpointe" on topics of interest. The censorship or restraint of ideas that some would deem morally objectionable is not unfair to the rest of the community, it is unconstitutional. First Amendment freedoms are not confired to views that are conventional or thoughts endorsed by the majority.

While it is hard to draw the line between legitimate commentary and that which is unjust or unconstitutional, it is a task made much easier when the audience of the newspaper understands why the material is being printed in the first place.

We don't need censorship!

To the Editor,

"There is an emerging totalitarianism in this country, a corporate totalitarianism which threatens to extinguish freedom and democracy," says Paul Hetznecker regarding United Technologies Corporation (UTC) and its presence here at UMass. Did he say "freedom and democracy"? It is strange how someone really interested in freedom would seek to forbid students from talking with UTC and thus make up their own minds, by banning UTC from our campus. It is also strange how someone concerned about democracy seems bent on unilateraly disarming the US by stopping defense research, as a weak defense doesn't seem like an effective means of deterring Soviet totalitarianism.

All sarcasm aside, such commentary as Hetznecker puts forth, attacks the very fabric of our society. As a student of the University of Massachusetts I deeply resent a group of radical ideologues telling me who can and who can not do business with the school I attend and help support.

Rand's Homecoming inspires critical thought

University Ensemble opens Fall season

THE HOMECOMING
By Harold Pinter
Thursday, October 13
Rand Theater, FAC

By ALISON MALOON
Collegian Correspondent

The Homecoming by Harold Pinter opened Thursday evening at the Rand Theater. Directed by Bruce Browne the drama, in a word, is unsettling. The underlying premise of the play is disturbing, leaving you feeling unnerved and a bit confused, if not horrified. Biazzare, I think they say. There is something about The Homecoming you both love and hate. You love its realism, as presented through costume and set, yet you hate the fact that the play seems unimaginable. You really don't know what to make of it. But before another word is said, I urge you to see the show. It is a fine production.

The plot centers around a man who after six years away returns to his London home with his wife and becomes involved in a weird, to say the least, situation. More than this; you must see it for yourself.

The set is dull, drab, and generally unexciting visually. The performances are pretty basic and at first the whole show just seems like an extended dialogue — My Dinner with Andre revisited. However, something does hit you and that's what is puzzling because you can't understand exactly why you feel that way. Then you read the program and you realize, as the program states, that the merit of The Homecoming is that it exists only on the stage, so you stop trying to make sense of everything. Then you start to understand and enjoy the performance.

The sad part of it is the society the play could depict. The lack of human respect, love and understanding is very sad as well. Yet after, you begin to think that perhaps the beauty of the performance lies in its absurdity. Everything is portrayed so realistically in an extraordinary situation.

The cast of The Homecoming, while not overly inspiring, have successfully mastered the English "attitude," if not accent, wonderfully. This dry, sarcastic, cynisism comes across strongly in the show and adds much realism to a situation you hope would never occur. David Spencer shined as Lenny, a seedy, sneering, sarcastic character. Spencer's pouty, biting style was fantastic. He made you dislike him almost instantly. Seriously unnerving. Harry Mahnken, also gave an affecting performance as the head of their unique household. His performance in the final scene was superb and emotionally outrageous.

One can't attend The Homecoming with the intention of finding logic in the midst of madness. One can't attempt to examine the actors individually, as well. As a whole they click and set the proper mood.

Ruth (Daphne Panopoulos) confronts Lenny (David Spencer) in a scene from Harold Pinter's The Homecoming, at the Rand Theater Oct. 19-22.

The key to enjoying The Homecoming is to realize the dreary strangeness and the realism of it all lends to the absurdity of it all. It was also good to leave a play really thinking and not just feeling "oh-what-a happy-ending!"

The Homecoming is very interesting, entertaining and has you analyzing the whole drama at curtain close, whether it is your intention to be critical or not.

"The Homecoming" will be performed at 8 p.m., October 18-15 and 19-22 in the Rand Theater, FAC.

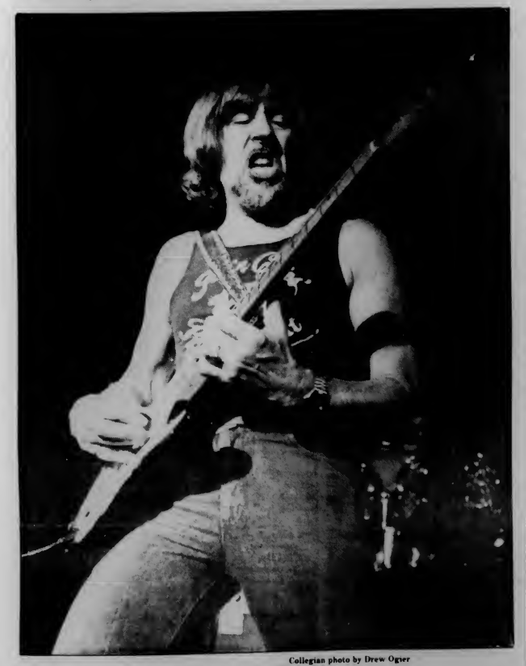
Mayall blows the lid

JOHN MAYALL
with CANNED HEAT
Sunday, October 16
Blue Wall

By PETER WISSOKER
Collegian Staff

Well, the Blue Walls' Blues at the Blue Wall series has done it again. John Mayall and a restructured Canned Heat blew the audience at the Wall away with some blues wailin', bluesmerizing, bar-hopping R&B. From the opening strains of "Dust My Broom" to Mayall's closing encore of "Rockin' in Amherst" people were up and dancing on air.

The show was structured so that Canned Heat, of which only one member of the old band (but not an original member remain), played for about an hour and then Mayall came on and played with Canned Heat for an hour.



Canned Heat played a mixture of old songs, always introduced by "This one will take you back to Woodstock," new tunes which sounded like they were made for MTV, all interspersed with old traditional blues tunes. The new band is pretty hot. They have two lead guitarists, Michael Halby and Walter Trout, both of whom can really play. Trout in particular really has his blues licks down. He can play really fast and both of them can really scream.

While the new songs were pretty trashy, the renditions of "On the Road Again" and "Let's Work Together" were really good. "Goin' Up the Country" was kind of dissapointing, but Trout's tour de force, "Regular in C," a slow blues number, more then made up for it.

Then, Mayall came on stage and the bar was his. Since 1963 when he formed the original Bluesbreakers, Mayall has been able to find bands that support his rhythm and blues habit with a vengence. Canned Heat is the perfect vehicle for Mayall's harmonica and keyboard playing. Last night, he demonstrated the trick to that patented sound of his. He holds his harmonica in one hand and doubles the harmonica line on the organ at the same time.

Mayall took the band through, "Room to Move," "Parchment Farm," "The Bear," which was written about the old Canned Heat, and a number of other bluesish boogie tunes about women and the trouble they cause. The music was fast and furious and indeed one might say, good.

And so it goes. Another reunion revival hits town and once again it proves to be better and more interesting than many of today's top 40 bands. Mayall is the master of the blues and the art of expressive musicianship (boy, can he shake his head) and he proved again Sunday night that he deserves the praise he gets, regardless of how his records sound.

Albany State edges Netmen , 5-4

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

No doubt about it boys and girls, LOSING SUCKS. Just ask the Tampa Bay Buccaneers, Cleveland Cavaliers, Pittsburgh Penguins (Sorry Stu), or even the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team, who Saturday suffered yet another frustrating loss, 5-4 to Albany State in New York's State Capital.

UMass victories were recorded by Earl Small, who nipped Tom Schmitz in three sets, 6-3, 4-6, 6-3 at no. 2 singles, Dave Singer, who rebounded to get past Dave Grossman, 3-6, 6-4, 6-4 at no. 4, Andy Pazmany, who topped Jay Eisenbert 6-2, 6-2 at no. 5 and by the doubles combo of Small-Marc Weinstein, who swept Mike Bermanstky-Dave Feinermany 7-5, 6-1.

"We're very even with them," said Coach Bob Szlosek. "We're getting better. The players have to believe they can win. That is important with young players. We have all underclassmen playing right now."

But it was not all bad news on Saturday for the netmen, as they completed the suspended match with RPI prior to engaging Albany State and walked away with a win, 5-4. The Minutemen were up 4-3 coming in and clinched the match when Singer-Weinstein, who fell behind in the final set, rallied to beat Ray Lilly-Rich Waters, 6-1, 5-7, 6-4. In the other completed match, Small-Jim Gelinas were bounced by Jeff Reisen-John Valenti 4-6, 7-5, 6-7.

Two of the squad's seven losses (the slate reads 2-7 with the other victory being over UConn) occured over the Columbus Day weekend when they lost to Yale 6-3 and to Boston University 9-0.

BU's so effectively dominated the hometown boys that they won only one lonely set in the entire afternoon.

"BU is a top team. All their players are tournament caliber. They never let us into the match. Other than Weinstein and Peterson (Wayne, UMass' no. 1 singles player, who lost to BU's Sam Harper 6-3, 7-6) we were dominated. BU never let up."

The season comes to a close this week when the netmen take on Vermont on Wednesday and Clark University on Thursday, both at home.

also keeping thoughts of attempting to qualify for the 10,000 meters in the Olympics in the back of his head. "Nothing is definite right now," said Thomas.

Despite the low pay an assistant coach makes, Thomas is comfortable with the money he draws by being involved with the Tiger Athletic show company and from entering certain races that offer prize money. With his masters degree in business (from B.U.) he has little worry about the future.

Amherst College wins 10-9 in football action Saturday

By JOHN BADGER
Collegian Correspondent

The Amherst College football team got back on the winning track Saturday edging Hamilton, which has never defeated the Lord Jeffs in fourteen attempts, 10-9, at Amherst's Pratt Field.

Hamilton's kicker, John Rich Strabley, gave the fans a kicking exhibition as he booted field goals from 49, 51 and 55 yards to account for all of the Continentals scoring.

The sophomore gave Hamilton the early lead at 3-0 when he booted a 56 yarder with five seconds left in the first period. Lord and Jeff kicker Bob Foote tied the score with just 21 seconds left in the half on a 33 yarder, capping a 47 yard drive for Amherst.

The locals took the lead for good as freshman John Tucci scored the only touchdown of the game at the 5:35 mark of the third quarter hauling in a 25 yard pass from Amherst quarterback Jeff Templeton. The Foote extra point gave Amherst the edge and the lead at 10-3.

Strabley connected on two more field goals to pull his team to within one, but missed the game winner on fourth and five from the 52 yard attempt with less than a minute to play.

Coach Jim Ostendarp's troops now have a record of 2-1-1. The Lord Jeffs suffered their only less of the year last week to Middlebury, 16-3. Amherst tied Bates 30-30 in their first game and beat Bowdoin 20-0 for their first win a week later.

Next week, Amherst hosts Wesleyan (Middletown, CT) in the first of the 1983 Little Three series.

Supreme Court may bannish college football from T.V.

WASHINGTON - The Supreme Court said Monday it will tackle a billion-dollar dispute over whether the National Collegiate Athletic Association or individual schools should control the televising of college football games.

The justices, in a case they were told might revolutionize sports on TV, agreed to review rulings that the NCAA's 30-year control violated federal antitrust law.

The court's decision is not expected until next year and therefore will not affect contracts, worth $74.2 million, for the current football season.

The NCAA's television contracts over the next three years are worth more than $200 million, indicating the court's decision could have a billion dollar impact over the next decade.

In other matters, the court:

-Agreed to study the appeal of a white Florida woman who says she lost the custody of her 6-year-old daughter because her current husband is a black man.

The justices will review rulings that stripped Linda Sidoti Palmore of Sefner, Fla., of custody. A state judge noted the girl should be protected "from the social stigmatism that is sure to come."

-Let stand a Rapides Parish, La., school desegregation plan that shut down two schools and touched off a nationally publicized showdown between a federal judge and a state judge.

Crew teams place in top four spots

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Correspondent

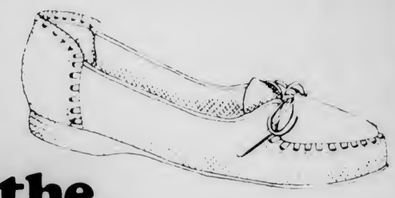
In its last race before the prestigious Head of the Charles Rowing Regatta, the University of Massachusetts Rowing teams races 10 other schools at the Head of the Merrimac, on the Merrimac River, last Saturday.

Racing in Division II, "the small college, small budget division," as Coach David Cumlin called it, the men's varsity eight placed fourth. The women's varsity eight fared slightly better, placing third. Also capturing third position was the men's junior varsity eight.

"Altogether, this was the best row of the season for the men's varsity," Cumlin said. Cumlin also credited the efforts of coxswain Dave Croke and stroke Tom Martin.

Northeastern University won several top finish positions. Benefiting from a large budget and school-wide dedication, "Northeastern looks very strong this season," Cumlin noted.

Netwomen tie for first place



WORCESTER — The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team and Smith College's team have something in common. They both own a piece of the state MAIAW championship.

Both the Minutewomen and the Unicorns finished tied for first place with 13 points. Northeastern and Wellesley were also titled as they came in third with 10 points.

The Massachusetts players did very well and number one singles player, Elizabeth Sullivan won the no. 1 title match with a 6-4, 7-5 win over Faith Hawkins of Smith.

Two other UMass players made it to the finals in their respective seeds. Diane Biagioli, at number four singles, fell in the finals 6-4, 6-2.

The Minutewomen travel to Holy Cross this afternoon for their final dual meet of the season before traveling to Cambridge and the New England championships at Harvard.

Hoopmen get on the ball with midnight practice

RUSS WHINNEM

By RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Staff

It was the dead of night but lights were burning at the Curry Hicks Cage. Outside, the campus was quiet but inside sounds were bouncing off the walls. It was midnight Friday but basketball was being played.

The graveyard janitors passing up a few? A group of slightly inebriated students who had stumbled onto the premises? Neither. Instead, it was the new edition of the Minutemen hoop team beginning its official practice schedule. But at midnight?

"It's all part of our aggressive policy towards basketball," first year Head Coach Ron Gerlufsen said later. "We wanted to start at the first possible moment. Maybe this gives us a jump on some other teams and that could pay off down the road."

The first possible moment was no exaggeration. NCAA rules state that the first allowed coach-involved practice could be held on October 15th. Friday was the 14th but midnight constituted a new day. The first minute of a new day.

The idea was one that could be deemed fairly unusual, something that one could safely assume was not happening all over the country. Therefore, could it be considered a publicity stunt? Gerlufsen said that was never part of the plan.

"The only people we told were the one's we felt had to know, the players, the trainer, the team personnel, etc. We don't feel we need the extra publicity. I think we've got the greatest fans around. If we had wanted the publicity, everyone would have been told."

Hence it seemed to be a move at working on the players psyche as well as their conditioning. In fact a bit more so. After all, there was a good deal of confusion surrounding the basketball program at the end of the last season. There were questions, plenty of questions. Questions that may never get really answered. But this was a new season and with it came the new idea.

"I think you can say it is both for conditioning and psychological reasons," Gerlufsen said. "I guess if you weighed with the other, the main thing would be psychological."

When it came down to it then, and the players had taken the floor, the mood was spirited and enthusiastic. They ran drill after drill and didn't leave until the Cage clock read 1:35, knowing the shorts would be put on again at 11:00 a.m. the next day, and then again at 6:30 that evening.

"The players accepted it," smiled the new boss. "I don't know what they're thinking inside but I think some of them were genuinely excited. These guys want to get going."

Later, when it was over, some of the players talked of sleep, some of getting food, and some of the strange evening.

"It was definitely a different experience," grinned point guard Donald Russell. "But," he continued "It was also definitely worth it."

Center Tom Emerson stood nearby. "I look at it as just another practice," said the sophomore big man. "We went out there and did what we had to."

"Yea, except it was at midnight," laughed Russell.

Finally, there was forward Bobby Braun to sum it all up. "We did this with my high school team and it was all just a publicity thing. But I know how I feel now. This was definitely no publicity stunt."

Women's golf places fifth in Princeton tournament

By TOM KELLEY
Collegian Staff

The Dartmouth College Women's golf team took first place in a tournament held this past weekend at Princeton while UMass took fifth.

Dartmouth, coming off a victory in the Eastern Regionals, was lead by Sue Johnson with scores of 74 and 79.

"Johnson is the premier player in the league right now," said UMass coach Jack Leaman. "She inherited that position from our own Marlene Susieka." Susieka graduated last year after twelve straight victories.

The women played on courses at Springdale and Bradenbrook that according to Leaman were "long and had a lot of water and bunkers."

Junior Judy Guzy finished eighth for Umass with an 89 and a 93 while captain Jane Egan shot a 98 and a 105 for 15th place.

"I was exceptionally pleased with the play of freshman Linda Foli," said Leaman. "This was basically her first tournament and she played very well." Foli shot a 110 and a 108 for a 20th place finish.

UMass will play its final match of the season at the Mt. Holyoke Invitational where they are defending champions. UMass would like to repeat its performance but Leaman siad, "It will be tough. Dartmouth will be there and they are just an exceptional team."

Princeton and Boston College, which both finished ahead of UMass in the Eastern Regionals and the Princeton tournament, will also be there.

"The girls have been playing well," said Leaman, "and they will continue to do better."

Randy Thomas prepares for Olympics at UMass

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Correspondent

With less than a year to go before the Olympics most of America's marathon hopefuls are very visible. Bill Rodgers seems to be in a race every weekend while operating his chain of running equipment stores. Alberto Salazar has been doing some network commentary, and almost all of them have various engagements around the country.

Then why did Randy Thomas, a world class distance runner with a better than average shot at making the Los Angeles team, decide to become an assistant cross country coach at the University of Massachusetts?

"It was a selfish reason," Thomas said. "I needed to begin intense preparation for trying to make the Games and this area has the best training facilities I've ever seen."

Thomas is currently ranked in the top ten among U.S. distance men and holder of the 30 kilometer world record. Here at UMass, he is responsible for ten freshmen of the cross country squad and with making a few of them ready for varsity competition before the fall season is over.

"I wanted to give something back to this program and to Coach (Ken) O'Brien," said Thomas, who graduated from UMass in 1975 and helped the cross country team to New England and IC4A titles.

"Amherst is a great area to prepare for the future, both physically and emotionally," noted the 30-year-old Thomas, who was ranked second in the nation to Rodgers in 1978 and 1979.

"I wanted to escape the pressure of the Boston running scene and find an emotional outlet at the same time. Coaching has provided that. Running is 90 percent between the ears and coming up here has made training a little easier on the head."

Although not currently ranked in New England, the Minutemen harriers have a potentially powerful squad and Thomas thinks a seventh place finish in the N.E. championships would be a sign of a comeback.

"It's an uphill battle all the way," said Thomas. "We don't have the scholarship money of a Northeastern or a Boston University so we have to sell the school and the program. Any way I can help with this because of my reputation will be great."

Thomas' current plans include a trip to L.A. for the Pro-Comfort championship, a race with over $100,000 in prize money, in November before hitting the track for a busy indoor season.

"I plan to run in a few meets like the Penn Relays and the New England TAC's," said Thomas. "The schedule is so that I can travel with the team and compete at the same time."

Thomas will skip the Boston Marathon this April and point to the Olympic qualifier in Buffalo in May. All of America's top distance men will be there and it will probably take a sub 2:10.0 to win. The top three make the L.A. team.

"If I give it my best, win or lose, I'm pleased," said Thomas. "But if I finish knowing I could've done better, then I've disappointed myself." Thomas is

The drinking-age controversy:

Students plan letter drive, rally

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Correspondent

The Public Policy Committee of the Student Government Association (SGA) has started a drive to have University of Massachusetts students send letters to state senators voicing their displeasure with a bill to raise the drinking age to 21.

Form letters, provided by the Committee, are available at a table in front of the Hatch. A phone bank to call local senators will run until Thursday. A noontime rally is scheduled for Thursday in front of the Student Union with various student leaders, including Public Policy Committee chairman Paul Gosselin.

The Massachusetts House of Representatives passed the bill last week with the Senate set to vote on the issue next Wednesday. Governor Michael Dukakis said he would not veto such a bill but did not indicate he would sign it. Any bill left unsigned on his desk automatically becomes law within ten days.

Greg Madden, a senior on the Public Policy Committee, said student response has been good.

"I think a lot of people feel the bill doesn't address the issue of stopping drunk drivers and just takes away a privilege that some people already have," said Madden, who manned the table yesterday afternoon.

Fran Pheeny, a ranking member of the Committee, expressed hopes that the rally would unite students against the bill.

"This is an issue that concerns a lot of people and we should get a good turnout," said Pheeny.

The form letter, which the student would send to the senator from their home district, says that raising the drinking age by one year"...will not solve the problem (of drunk driving) while it does unduly take away the rights of adults in this age group."

The letter continues, stating "Men and women under 21 work, pay taxes, vote, and serve their country. It is very unfortunate that the Commonwealth finds it necessary to single out this sector of the adult population in this manner."

Pheeny said that she did not know if other schools are attempting to lobby senators in a similar manner. "I would hope that they are," commented Pheeny.

Press ethics discussed at conference

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Who is responsible and what can be done when a college newspaper prints something offensive to members of the community it serves?

This was the question that "Campus Journalism: Social Conflict and Freedom of the Press", a conference held in the Campus Center yesterday, tried to answer.

More than 100 people attended the conference , which was sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Office of Human Relations, the Collegian and Nummo News. The conference was held partly in response to charges of editorial irresponsibility by the Collegian, and also as a "continuation of past Collegian efforts to sponsor forums on campus interests," Collegian editor in chief Joel Myerson said.

Robert Trager, author of Student Press Rights and College Student Press Law, said the Supreme Court has ruled that Constitutional guarantees of press freedom extend to the campuses of public colleges and universities, but the right of free speech imposes heavy responsibilities on the college journalist.

In the keynote address to the conference, Trager presented "ethical questions that every journalist must confront and answer," adding that, unlike other professionals, "journalists have no strict guideposts."

Though it is "difficult to see just what the ethics of a journalist should be, since we all have differing views of the world, the concept of social responsibility in journalism is very important," Trager said.

In a panel discussion following Trager's speech, Phillip Perlmutter, director of the Jewish Community Council in Boston, said the responsibility is also on any offended group or individual to protest the newspaper, and "not give up the battle."

Perlmutter criticized other irresponsibilities of the press, including "the sheer ignorance of many reporters who cover something they know absolutely nothing about,..the use of the first amendment for sloppy and irresponsible reporting," and a lack of "accountability" in the press.

Michael Thelwell, a UMass Afro-American studies professor and former college newspaper editor, said "the difficulty the editors and reporters of the Collegian face is the complex character of the constituency they serve." College journalists "can be assured that one group or another will be offended...by something you do," he said.

Panelist and Collegian editorial page editor Josh Meyer said it is the responsibility of the Collegian "to encourage debate on important issues whether they be right or not."

"By refusing to publish something that might ruffle a few feathers, we risk the danger of lulling the community into a false sense that nothing is wrong," he said.

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, noting the Collegian is a "vehicle of free expression", said "I do not believe it is a principle to approach any issue, including free speech, as an absolute," he said. "It always has to be moderated by other concerns."

In discussion following the speeches, members of the audience and the panel proposed to continue the dialogue, and possibly improve community access to the Collegian through a press council which would advise but not censor the newspaper.

BCP offers students a real helping hand

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff

The following is a part of a five-story series on the student affairs opportunities at the University of Massachusetts.

The Bilingual Collegiate Program (BCP), created in 1974, offers more than 340 students academic, financial, tutorial and placement counseling services.

"We are an academic support program," said Maria Voorhees, a counselor and graduate of BCP. "We help the students from admissions up until graduation. We tell them of various scholarships available, and we help in job placement, along with financial aid, academic counseling and workshops."

BCP consists of ten staff members, including a teaching assistant, a graduate student, who primarily deals with the tutorial program.

"We offer free tutoring for our students. We also have courses that are taught in Spanish–psychology 100, economics 105, math 104 and 110, a chem lab and discussion–these are usually for those students just beginning at the University who may have trouble with the English language.

We work closely with the English as a Second Language (ESL)," Voorhees said.

BCP's biggest and perhaps most important program is its recruitment coordination program. BCP, along with CCEBMS and Minoirity Engineering, are essential in recruiting and retaining students.

"Our recruiters go to high schools and various community organizations to make students aware of the opportunities available at UMass," said Voorhees.

BCP is very involved with the community as well as the University. The program, with recruiting, projects and workshops, tries to make the community aware of the importance of education, and the importance of continued financial support.

BCP frequently in conjunction with the Ahora program. Ahora, an RSO group, offers cultural and political programs for minority students.

"We are here to do anything to help bilingual students make the most of their education here at UMass," said Voorhees

BCP will be celebrating the tenth anniversary of the organization next year, and the committee in charge of the celebration is now in its planning stages.

"BCP and all its faculty and students have a lot to celebrate," Voorhees said.

Jesse Helms tries to prevent King holiday

WASHINGTON — The Senate, in a bitter revival of the civil rights debates of the 1960s, crushed 76 to 12 on Tuesday efforts by Republican Jesse Helms to block establishment of a federal holiday honoring the late Dr. Martin Luther King Jr.

Leading a small group of conservatives, the North Carolina Senator said King's affiliations with "far left elements and elements of the Communist Party USA" disqualified him for status as a national hero.

Supporters of a holiday to celebrate the the civil right's leader's birthday denounced Helms for running a "smear campaign."

Lebanese antagonists will confer on Thursday

BEIRUT, Lebanon — Snipers killed two Lebanese soldiers and wounded an Italian member of the multinational force Tuesday, and the government said Lebanon's warring sects will hold their long-delayed national reconciliation conference at Beirut airport.

A statement on state-run Beirut radio said President Amin Gemayel will participate in the meeting Thursday of Moslem, Druse and Christian leaders, aimed at ending eight years of turmoil. It said U.S. Marines and other members of the multinational force patrolling the capital will guard them.

The conference was called for in the Sept. 26 cease-fire that reduced but did not halt three weeks of civil war. Bickering over where and when to hold the conference has delayed the conference.

Boston helicopter pilot meets fiery death in New Hampshire

HUDSON, N.H. — A helicopter pilot for a Boston television station was killed in a fiery crash Tuesday moments after issuing a desperate "Mayday" plea for help and saying the craft's engine was failing.

Dennis Repole, 34, of Canton, Mass., formerly of Danbury, Conn., was killed about 9:45 a.m. when his helicopter crashed into a parking lot and burst into flames.

"He was one of our best pilots. He flew for the military in Germany," said E.W. Wiggins, vice president of Wiggins Airways. He said the firm leased the Bell Jetranger helicopter to WCVB-TV, Channel 5.

"It would be pure speculation for me to say what caused the crash. I suspect we won't know until there is a full investigation," Wiggins said.

Mike Ciccarelli, a spokesman for the Federal Aviation Administration in Boston, said flight controllers at the airport in Manchester, N.H., received a call from a pilot in distress at 9:43 a.m.

"The message was, 'Mayday! Mayday! Mayday! Channel 5 helicopter ... engine failure,'" Ciccarelli said.

Moments after the message, the helicopter crashed and burned, Ciccarelli said.

Witnesses said the craft appeared to be trying to land when it fell to the pavement and exploded.

"The minute it hit the ground, it burst into a ball of flames," said James Munroe, who said he was looking out of his apartment window at the site.

"I ran out with my fire extinguisher ... but I might as well have had a toy water pistol. It was too late. She was gone," said Munroe, who lives at the Roosevelt Gardens apartments.

Penn. citizens drill for oil in backyards

ERIE, Pa. — A backyard boom in natural gas wells has hit Erie County, where homeowners, pizza shops, funeral homes, churches, florists, and schools are drilling to tap into a potential bonanza.

"People are finding out that there's gas just about everywhere you drill," said driller Ron Oberlander, who is backlogged with 19 orders for wells and has a six-week waiting list.

"Drilling for gas isn't a gamble anymore. It's cheaper than a new car, and you can get your investment back in six to eight years. How can you go wrong?" he added as a rotary drill bore through a yard.

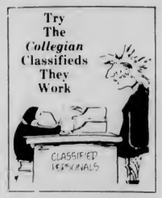
But some utilities and gas producers warn of trouble.

Garrett Morris offends Tennessee audience

JOHNSON CITY, Tenn. — Former "Saturday Night Live" comedian Garrett Morris cut short his appearance at a college homecoming after 100 patrons walked out and a dean interrupted his act to tell him it was too obscene.

"The trip wasn't lost. I certainly learned a lot," Morris said later.

Morris was telling jokes about college, parties and the differences between the sexes Friday night before about 600 people at East Tennessee State University.



Carl Purvis, president of the Student Government Association, said sponsors were looking for an entertainer who "would appeal to an entire audience; who would uphold an exciting, wholesome atmosphere for homecoming."

Student Redemption Service starts up for the fall

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

The Student Redemption Service, where students may return bottles and cans, opened Monday for the fall semester.

Service administrator Jim Crosby, a sophomore political science major, said members "were favorably impressed" with the results of a two-and-a-half-week trial period last May.

The operation "went smooth" last year, and the only problem this year is where to store the cans. "We share garage space with transit and are searching for another location," Crosby said.

The service operated above projections, but the Southwest Residential Area only turned in as many cans and bottles as the Orchard Hill Residential Area which is one-third the size, assistant student administrator Mindy Ordway said.

"We've fine-tuned our operation this year," Crosby said. "My guess is that we will recieve about 10,000 cans a week."

Advertising for the service will be concentrated on the Southwest Area through the area's newsletter and with posters, according to Crosby.

"The project pays out about $2000 a month for returned containers. We're looking toward establishing a long term service," Crosby said.

The Student Redemption Service is part of the Recycling Project which collects waste paper, non-returnable glass and newspaper campus wide.

Collins to speak today on education

Rep. Jim Collins, D-Amherst and co-chair of the Massachusetts Legislature Joint Committee on Education, will speak on current educational issues in a public hearing today at the University of Massachusetts.

Collins and co-Chair Gerard D'Amico, D-Worcester, will speak from 4 to 8 p.m. at the School of Education/Mark's Meadow Auditorium on a study on education to be released in December. Issues include analysis of curriculum, student assessment, equitable and efficient financing, professor development and technology in public education today.

Collins will also speak to the Undergraduate Student Senate at 7 p.m. in room 163 of the Campus Center. Both lectures are free and open to the public.

Women's centers are open

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

With a variety of events and programs planned for the semester and the addition of computer terminals for student use, the Women's Centers in Northeast and Orchard Hill/Central residential areas are hoping to appeal to a broader group of people and become more active than they have in the past.

Last week the two centers each had an open house to introduce students to the resources they have to offer and for people to get to know each other.

"In the past the Center had a bad reputation and a hard time. Women had been intimidated thinking it was only for serious feminists and they felt it was not a bad valid resource," said Roberta Arena, coordinator of the Orchard Hill/Central Women's Center.

Besides having a computer terminal, both centers have books, typewriters and study space.

"The center can also be used as a referral service to help women on a variety of issues and men are able to use the resources of the center as well," Arena said.

During the first week in November both centers will be running a workshop on rape for resident assistants on the east side of campus, both male and female.

The object of the workshop is to teach the RA's rape prevention methods and on-the-spot counseling so they can deal with students who have been victimized on a one-to-one basis and be able to help them. Depending on the response the centers will then offer the workshop to the public, Arena said.

Planned for later in the semester is a women's student art exhibit in the art gallery in the basement of Wheeler Dormitory. It will be partially sponsored by the Orchard Hill/Central Women's Center.

As an ongoing event, Arena said she wants to begin a Women's Career series with different professional women speaking on how they got started in their careers and the pressures they had to face.

Overall the Women's Centers are interested in women helping and taking confidence in themselves.

"We want to support women in thinking positive and achieving their potential," Arena said.

SCERA: advocacy for the student

MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

Student empowerment is the major goal of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA) at the University of Massachusetta, said activist and feminist Tildy Turchinetz, a member of SCERA's professional staff.

"SCERA is the research advocacy arm of the Student Senate," Turchinetz, a 1980 University of Massachusetts graduate in legal studies, said.

Being a "research advocacy arm" means the Senate mandates which issues SCERA will research, as long as they fall within SCERA's interests, she said. SCERA is completely funded by the Student Senate.

SCERA was formed in 1978 when the Student Organizing Project (SOP) and the Student Center for Educational Research (SCER) merged.

Both organizations were developed with the goal of creating a democratic university where students would have more of a voice and more influence.

SCERA is divided into five teams. Turchinetz works on three of the five: the Residential team, Women's Issues Team and the Anti-Racism Team.

The Residential Team deals with issues concerning the dormitories on the UMass campus. The team is currently developing an academic peer advising program for the spring semester in Orchard Hill, Turchinetz said.

"The aim of the peer advising program will be to help students with academic problems or just answer student's questions," she said.

If the program is successful, it will eventually spread to other residential areas, she said.

The Women's Issues team (WIT) is currently concerned with educating the public about pornography.

"We will also be holding assertiveness training workshops," she said.

"As women we have always been told that we cannot speak in public, because we lack the skill and intelligence, Turchinetz said.

The Committee for Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedom (CERRF), is also part of SCERA. Although CERRF is involved in many issues, it is most visible as an abortion rights group, Turchinetz said. She stressed the importance of keeping in constant contact with Washington because legislators are constantly manipulating the laws and passing bills. Many of these actions never make news, she said.

"The WIT lobbies for legislation every Wednesday from a table in the Campus Center," Turchinetz said.

"We take an activist focus by providing students with the necessary materials to write letters to Congress and the Senate from our table,"

The Anti-Racism team responds to racism in dorms. The team is planning an anti-racism event on campus this semester, she said.

"Student empowerment is our most important goal in all of these teams," Turchinetz said.

"Students at the University many times feel they have no power over their own academic lives," Turchinetz said. "They are always told that this is not the real world."

"This is the real world. Students can do something about it. Students can learn the skills to be effective and to effect change," she said.

UMass employee takes to the skies

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

She decided to keep it quiet at first, just for the sake of harmony. Or the supposed bliss that goes along with ignorance. Whatever the reason, Nancy Olszewski didn't tell her mother the first time she went out parachuting because she knew, she says, her mother "would not care for it at all."

Well, it's three years and about 115 jumps later, and Olszewski's mother has become used to the idea, and almost, almost, approved when she witnessed her daughter landing in the family's yard a short while ago.

Well, her mother accepts it now. Her ex-pilot father never really had any objections to it from the start, and Nancy Olszewski is jumping. And working at UMass.

Nancy Olszewski . . .
. . ."partly fun, partly hobby"

There are some people besides Nancy Olszewski's mother who believe parachuting is dangerous (an opinion, previously noted, that had been shot down by the sportswoman herself); one reporter's friend, for instance, once labelled it "a perverse death wish," or something, he said, that people with loose granola for brains do in their spare time.

It is not cause for worry, Nancy Olszewski and almost any other parachutist will tell you, so long as you work on your ground skills when learning and follow the instructions.

"It's partly fun, partly hobby, and something I don't thing I'd compete in because for me, it's just--sport," Olszewski shrugged. "But that's what I love about it. I learn more and more every time I go up, and I never stop learning. People don't think of parachuting as a sport, really, but it is. And what they don't realize is that the challenge comes. It takes you a few jumps to get the basics down, but it comes after, too."

Like canoeist Dr. James Abel (see accompanying article) Olszewski may be considered an "average" UMass employee, who like many of her peers, is showing the community that she and other members of the University faculty and staff are not so very "average," that they find the time to let go after leaving campus, and let UMass help them along at the same time. Olszewski and Abel prove being a student isn't a requirement for enjoying the Umie experience.

Olszewski is a 29-year-old staffer of the Small Business Development Center at the School of Business Administration. She is also a member of the UMass Sports Parachute Club (which also boasts as participants a couple of faculty members), and is a reservist in the U.S. Air Force. Originally from Deerfield, Olszewski has been working for the University since 1972. She is tall, slender, and sort-spoken.

She doesn't seem quite like anyone who'd be popping out of a plane at thousands of feet...

Olszewski started out like many other parachutists at UMass, having taken the UMass club's initial diving course, which trained her, basically, in four hours of ground training, and then more hours of ground training the morning of the flight. After six jumps, she performed her first freefall, and shed her student status after 24 jumps. Now an experienced jumper, she only spends $1 for every thousand feet she jumps. She is now into what parachutists call "relative"that is, maneuvers with one or more people.

"I don't consider what I do anything special," Olszewski said. "I just consider it something I do every weekend that I have fun doing." At UMass. That is the beauty of it.

CRUISIN' DOWN THE RIVER--White water canoeing is only a part of the Jim Abel's wilderness program.

Health Services surgeon Abel enjoys "Land of Midnight Sun"

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

When Dr. Jim Abel returns from his annual eight-week summer camping trip, he brings with him no T-shirts or bumper stickers shoutin "This body," or "This car" climbed "Mt. Washington," nor does he travel with hundreds of people, or has never, in fact, encountered any other campers other than his companions. None at all. That is a given.

For when Dr. Abel and his companions go camping, they do not--and literally cannot--emerge from their campgrounds except by airlift.

Dr. Abel goes to the Arctic Circle, the expansive tundra of the uppermost tip of northeastern Canada.

Abel and his companions, most of the time university students, canoe the whitewater rivers from late June to early August every year, on a trip that, as Abel says, "can make the most outgoing person in the world turn out to be a coward, or the most timid, shy person to be the strongest leader in the group."

Abel and his companions, in short, flirt with the section of the wilderness that can be dangerously capricious, and can at one moment be 105 degrees and plunge within minutes to near freezing.

And he takes from 16-20 novices a year.

A physician at the University of Massachusetts Health Services, Abel was once, he says, "an overweight smoker who smoked up to two packs a day" who decided in the middle of the night a few years ago to change his life style.

And what resulted was a once-a-year trip that has no official title, no sponsor, and is done for no particular reason. Laura Gullion, Abel's co-organizer says it is to "have fun;" you "do it because you feel like doing it."

"We go up there to live, really live, for eight weeks," Abel says.

"True adventure is rare, and one of the strongest affirmations of life. And there are very few places to find that, except in the deep wilderness, where you really have to rely on your own judgement and your own skills to get yourself out of a situation which could be fatal or somehow seriously injure you."

"The itenerary seems simple," Abel laughs. After preparing the novices in a two-week training camp, Abel and Guillon's group, usually "comprised of no more than 20," Guillon says, "any more than that would be dangerous," in any number between three and six canoes, takes a bus into northern Canada and then flies by floater plane into the tundra where they will expect to have no other contact with anyone else, except maybe members of mining camps, for the next eight weeks. When the trip is completed, floater planes contacted earlier by Abel fly the group out again, where they board busses for home.

The program began in 1972 when a Spokane, Wash., high school teacher wanted to start a program to place students in a challenging situation.

Abel began his involvement when another organizer of the group at a Washington State college responded (five years late) to his answer of an advertisement for a doctor to go on one of the trips.

"I got this call in the middle of the night and this guy says to me, 'You want to go to the Arctic Circle' and I said--yes..."

When the program lost its sponsor in 1980, Abel had the choice of taking the program or letting it fold.

He took it.

Gullion, a UMass graduate, became involved when she saw one of Abel's slideshows on the subject and "I was drawn." This coincided with her desire to leave her jobs as reporter for the Springfield Union and the Greenfield Recorder.

"It just got to the point where my job was just taking so much out of me...then I joined Jim here, and really got into the sport. It made me feel so much better in terms of being physically fit, knowing just how much I was getting out of a situation and what I could give to it."

Both Abel and Gullion, however, don't seem to mention these views very often, or want to. They are wary of giving the wrong impression of the purpose of the trip as being something other than an outing trip.

"You'll find people who approach you wanting to go on the trip and they'll say 'I want to go on this trip because I need to get my head together and get organized and find where I wanna go in life and how I wanna get there...," Abel says with a wave of his hand.

"We're not that. We have our own 'purpose' like any other trip but we're not a 'personal growth' program, not designed to 'shape you up'. It's what happens, but it's not the program's intention, per se."

Gullion and Abel do not advertise. It is only recently that they have been getting responses even from their families, who have considered having a go in the Arctic. Gullion's husband, for one is volunteering.

What will married life be like in the tundra? she was asked.

"Well, if he expects any hot food, he's crazy."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Local issues need SGA attention

The Undergraduate Student Senate will probably allocate $400.00 at their next meeting to the Students Against Militarism and the UMass Peacemakers to oppose the deployment of Cruise and Pershing II missiles in Europe. They will do this in the same way they voted to keep United Technologies Corporation out of the Campus Center, to support "US out of El Salvador" campaigns, to call for a Nuclear Freeze, and to oppose draft registration. The student government on this campus will continue to spend their time and our money on political issues of national and international proportions.

When will they realize that the students of this campus want their student government to address university issues--i.e. the lack of study space, the lack of dormitory space, the lack of parking space, the quality of our education, oversubscribed courses, ineffective tenured professors, rising fees, proposed tuition hikes, etc., etc. When will they realize that the Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) fee is for student activities not student politics.

These are only a few of the questions I've been asking myself since becoming a senator last semester. I feel it is necessary that these questions be asked, especially now as the Student Senate begins its 1983-1984 session with many new senators. It is my intention that these questions will bring about conversation, debate, and hopefully some answers.

Why do the students in the Residential Areas (who are in the majority at UMass) sit back and allow the Commuters to dominate their student government? Don't they know that the SGA co-presidents, the treasurer, the speaker, and all the chairpersons of the various senate committees are all commuters? Don't they realize that interests unique to the Residential Areas will be neglected? Does it bother them that some of the students holding positions in student government are Continuing Education students? Does anyone believe that Con Ed students, who take as little as one course, adequately represent the interests of full-time students living in the dorms? In 1975 the Area Governments are allocated $10.24 per student. In 1983-1984, Area Governments were allocated $8.40 per student. Doesn't it bother students that the monies to enlarge the size of student government payroll and to support the dozens of special interest groups over the years have been at the expense of Area programming?

When 6000 students signed a petition to support a senate reorganizational plan last spring, why did the senate dramatically change the plan in committee? When 6 of the 7 Area Governments called for a Constitutional Convention, why were they ignored? Why is it taking so long for the SGA to submit its Constitution for approval by the Board of Trustees? Since it was last approved in 1947, does it take more than 36 years to do? And exactly why haven't the Constitutional Bylaws been printed since 1979, with virtually no copies in existence? Or why is UMass the only place in the galaxy that uses Sturgis's Rules of Parliamentary Procedure (which appears to be out of print and unavailable except by special order from the publisher). Isn't it unfair if only a small circle of individuals know what the bylaws are or what the parliamentary procedure is? Do student government leaders want us to ask these questions?

I do know the answer to that one. They don't. If you want to know the answers to the other questions get involved. If your dorm doesn't have a senator, become one. If it does, then let him or her know how you feel about these and other issues. The student government deals with 1.8 million dollars of student money, 96 dollars of which is yours. You deserve to have a say.

Stylish but no substance

I'd been waiting all semester for mail, and last week my prayers were finally answered. Sitting patiently in my mailbox was a pale blue envelope with color-coordinated sealing wax and a matching commemorative postage stamp. It was addressed in calligraphy. There is but one person in the entire world who sends forth such epistles, and her name is Rona.

And like last week's invitation to her housewarming, Rona is classy. In fact, Rona is what is often referred to (by low-lifes such as myself) as a "beautiful person." She's moving up in the world. And because I'm moving only laterally, I wasn't so sure I wanted to accept her invitation. Unfortunately, though, curiosity got the best of me.

Elizabeth Luciano

I was sorry the minute she opened the door. She looked like a model for Filene's. Rona has three closets full of clothes and is working towards a fourth. Her clothing is conservative, tailored, and made of expensive yet durable fabrics. Her peach-toned make-up was obviously Clinique, and it complemented her features perfectly. I shifted uncomfortably in my Levi's.

"Hi," I said uncertainly.

"You're the first one here!" she clasped my hand and gave me a peck on the cheek, the same way you greet distant relatives. "So glad you could make it."

"Thanks," I said, "Where's the bathroom?" I'm nothing if not candid and it had been quite a long bus ride.

"It's the second door on the right," Rona smiled, busying herself by artistically arranging Brie on a butcher-block cutting board.

It's a good thing she directed me; I would've mistaken her powder room for a spa. The bathtub was the size of a hot tub, and it was surrounded by a jungle of plants, all of them watered. Washing my hands presented a real problem: was I actually supposed to use the rose-shaped guest soaps, or were they just for show? What about the towels? They hardly seemed big enough to dry more than a few square millimeters of skin. Are guests really allowed to use guest towels? I decided against asking, and kind of air-dried by hands by flinging them around a bit, hoping I wasn't lousing up that germ-free environment.

"Your living room looks great," I told Rona generously, on my return. Everything was dark wood or brick and looked deliberately country.

"It's early American," she smiled, "How have you decorated?"

"Scholarly Spartan," I replied thoughtlessly, then tried to atone for my faux pas by complimenting her on a small coffee-colored rug.

"It's Persian," Rona told me. "I got it for a song--$1,200."

"Mine only cost seven bucks," I shrugged.

"A Persian carpet?" she gasped.

"It's more like an overgrown bathmat, actually," I said, placing a sneakered foot on her thousand-dollar investment.

"Only with socks," she quietly chided me. A tiny poodle sidled in from the kitchen and nudged her on the leg. "Liz, I'd like you to meet Pookie. Pookie goes to obedience school. She was just promoted to second grade!" Rona crooned.

"Does she plan to do graduate work eventually?" I asked. Oops. Foot-in-mouth, again.

"Would you like some chablis?" Rona changed the subject artfully.

"I'm kind of into beer, myself," I admitted.

"I have some imported ale," she suggested, the perfect hostess.

"No Old Milwaukee?" I whined.

"How about some freshly ground coffee or blackcurrant tea?" Rona said.

"How about instant Sanka or Lipton's flow-through?" I countered.

"I have some freshly squeezed orange juice," she offered.

"I like Tang," I snapped, "and I like to drink it out of Snoopy glasses, not Waterford goblets."

"Would you like something to eat?" she asked nicely.

"I haven't had breakfast," I admitted, "got any cold pizza?"

"I've got a few croissants," Rona said delicately.

"No Cocoa Puffs?" I pleaded. It was damned near obvious I'd be going hungry. She shook her head. "Frankenberry? Froot Loops?" No luck.

"Why don't we put on some music," Rona said, "Do you like Baroque?"

"I'm not into the punk scene," I told her loftily. She emitted a cough that sounded suspiciously like a poorly-disguised laugh. "Look, Rona," I confessed, "I just don't understand the way you've changed since high school. Why have you forsaken 'Laverne and Shirley' for 'Brideshead Revisited? What ever happened to your penchant for Tupperware?"

"Look, Liz," she explained, "I'm leading a modern, exciting, and cultured life."

Now all she needs are some modern, exciting, cultured friends to lead it with. Nobody else ever did show up at that housewarming...

Abortions are never easy

To the Editor,

I direct this letter to a Mr. Jeffrey C. Ives and his editorial of October 13, 1983. Honestly, Mr. Ives, I do not care whether you endorse abortion or not. I hope you and someone you love never have to face the agonizing decision of an unplanned pregnancy. But, do realize how many people you offend by referring to abortion as the "easy way out"; and, kindly, if you can't refrain from that expression, keep it to yourself.

I am astounded by your insensitivity; surely you do not believe abortion to be "easy"? Are you totally unaware of the anguish of a woman who might choose an abortion? Try, Mr. Ives to imagine what a pregnant woman might think of as she grieves over a no win decision that will affect every aspect of her life. Imagine the feelings as she wonders how to tell her boyfriend, her parents, her little sister. Imagine the looks on their face, as she might; imagine how wretched she might be to see pregnant women, babies in carriages-- suddenly thousands of reminders of the choice she must make alone. Imagine how she dreads the day of the procedure; imagine how afraid of damnation she must be as she lies on that table; and the haunting fears later of whether she did the right thing. Mr. Ives, do try to realize that no abortion is ever "easy".

Hardcore; exhilarating and exhuberent when bands take other forms and break new ground (Minutemen, Minor Threat), moronic and muddled when bands stay on the same treadmill (MDC, Dead Kennedys). Despite their occasionally electric live performances, DYS' vinyl debut takes the latter course--a badly produced, unimaginative heavy metal/HC crossover void of power or spirit. Vocalist Dave Smallee might be an agreeable enough fellow to talk to, but his "gonna get you" sentiments on "The Girl's Got Limits" only serve to further people's view of the Boston HC scene as mostly sexist (Smallee's probably joking, but I'm not too amused by his choice of targets). The one bright spot would have to be "Escape", DYS getting more introspective and less concerned about overblown topics like "unity".

Where DYS veer close to being generic HC, W. Mass Pajama Slave Dancers don't make the mistake of taking themselves too seriously. Their 24-song cassette (plus free KISS necklace) showcases a wide variety and stances, from the (intended?) pop hooks of "Modern Romance" to their anit-wet liberal diatribe on "Valley Advocate" ("no one would read it/no one would try it/no one would touch it/if they had to buy it . . . . Valley Advocate/didn't know hippies could type . . ."). To give you a better idea of just how original these guys are, their last appearance took place last weekend at the Grocery, a Northampton delicatessen. With several dozen fans (give or take a few stunned onlookers/diners) crammed into the tiny Main St. restaurant, PSD stumbled through a pretty OK 'greatest hits' set, "highlighted" by drummer John Long's tear-jerking rendition of the Brady Bunch theme. Real transcendent stuff.

Best of the bunch would have to be the Proletariat's long-awaited Soma Holiday, a viroilic 18-song collection that leaves most of today's "political" looking like the weak pretenders they are. The Proletariat's guitar and vocal range recalls those of early Gang of Four and Killing Joke; the clipped voice of Rich Brown throwing out fragments rather than lyrics, Frank Michael's guitar firing layered textures rather than buzzsaw incompetence. Songs like "Decorations" ("cloth on a pole/medals on the shirt/bullets thru the chest"), "Bread & Circus" or the unrecorded "Marketplace" ("if I had a chance/I'd hope for a change"), aren't intended to shove any specific point-of-view down your throat. Like their two closest peers on the US hardcore front, the Minutemen and Husker Du, the Proletariat are brave enough to let their audience think for itself, either in deciphering the meaning behind non-dogmatic lyrics, or to try a three-piece band that won't conform to standard HC lack of depth.

International Piano Competition prizewinner, Alan Marks, will perform at 8 p.m. this evening in the Fine Arts Center. Marks is recognized as one of the premiere artists of today and has been called "versatile, individual musically sensitive and communicative" by the Los Angeles Times. Tickets are $5.00 for general public and half price for 5-college students. For further information, call 545-2511.

King and Shabazz speak at press conference

By DARLENE JACKSON
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts was privileged on Saturday, October 15 to have on its campus Yolanda King and Atallah Shabazz, daughters of Martin Luther King, Jr. and Malcom X, respectively and founders of the theater company, Nucleus, Inc.

King and Shabazz were at UMass for a one night performance at Bowker Auditorium of the play, "Stepping Into Tomorrow" - a reunion of six friends ten years after graduating from high school. They also held a 40 minute press conference at the Campus Center earlier Saturday.

It was wondered how the union of these two women came into exsistence being that their fathers were from opposite backgrounds and both possessed separate approaches to the same perspective.

"It was the result of the energy of spirit that had been left stagment by their death," said Shabazz. King and Shabazz physically met while having their pictures taken for an article which appeared in EBONY magazine.

Thier fathers installed in them individual self-esteem.

"I was taught to like myself," said Shabazz. "It's a sort of arrogance that my first grade teacher didn't quite understand."

It was that sense of pride and self worth that King and Shabazz tried to bring across in their work.

King and Shabazz made an effort to promote the realization of similarities of these basic fundamental needs that we all desire, King said. This realization came through in their characters from "Stepping Into Tomorrow."

The play is a piece that deals with the individual and the importance of his/her needs. "It talks about personal inner strengths," said King. "It is a question of the have and the have nots; a universal statement rather than a black statement, not only to the United States, but to the world," she said.

Both women reflected on the past when they were asked about black leaders of today and if in fact they do exist.

Shabazz and King believe that there are black leaders but they are not as dynamic as the leaders of the revolutionary 60's and 70's were.

The leaders of today are "comfortable" with their position and do not wish to sacrifice it.

"What we are fighting for is not as clearly defined as it had been," said King. "Many people had approached me to say that my father could have been president if he had lived. No! That would have meant that he would have to work within the system and that meant compromises," she said.

Many of us look for leaders, people to lead us and that is reflected in film, books and theatre, King said--Is he the one?

"Every single one of you is a leader," added Shabazz.

In regards to her role in the play, King recalled a student approaching her at a high school in Connecticutt and saying, "thank you for being honest with me so I can be honest with myself." "It's that kind of gratification that makes it all worthwhile," said King.

Optimism steps into tomorrow

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

In many avenues of the media, it is rarely seen that stories of failure among blacks can turn into stories of success. However, on Saturday night at Bowker Auditorium, the New York-based theater group Nucleus, Inc. changed this stereotype.

With a one night performance of "Stepping into Tomorrow", the theater ensemble presented a kaleidoscope of the problems most young blacks face today.

Using a high school reunion as the setting for its characters to start thinking of past decisions and their results, the story opens when six good friends from Filmore High meet to see Debbie (Yogi Lee) on her opening night as a night club singer. They arrive a day early, and the friends who offered each other support and company while in high school start to reminisce on their past school years.

Each fictional character, along with his/her personal story, with no doubt gave the audience a sense of familiarity with each case presented. The story also offered hope. Fred, played by Horace L. Sheffield, III as one who "dribbled (his) ball to school and from school" and whose dream as a professional player was shattered by a knee injury becomes Coach at Filmore High. Denise, played by Yolanda King who "pregnant and fourteen" was forced to "grow up long before (she) needed to," tried not to inherit welfare from her mother and finished college.

Genea, played by veteran performer, Elly Long Marshall, is a high school dropout who is attracted by the stage lights. She later finds out that "yesterday's glamour don't pay today's rent" and becomes a nurse; Atallah Shabazz, Nucleus' co-director, "special Michelle", a versatile person while in high school and in college finds herself "dribbling and dabbling into many different areas" because of her parents divorce, the union that made her. After an attempted suicide that makes her realize the beauties in life, Michelle becomes a teacher.

Singer, musician, songwriter and producer, Fred Well played Harry, a pudgy man, who after realizing his friends were only interested in his supply of reefer, realizes that "I was somebody being me." Harry, who used reefer to overcome his shyness, always learned a lesson, a fact that attracted him to preach.

The optimism every character revealed gave the audience not only a sense of understanding and of the blunt realities of life, but also a view of the many possibilities that are at one's grasp.

Minuteman Notebook: Pickett looks at offense

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

Last week's 17-7 Yankee Conference win over Maine was, as the remainder of the conference games for the UMass football team will be, a must win situation if the Minutemen plan to get a piece of the 1983 Yankee Conference crown, and the NCAA Division I-AA playoff berth that goes with it.

This Saturday the Minutemen host Boston University, the top team in the Yankee Conference with a 3-0 conference record. A win over BU is mandatory or the Minutemen will have to start "wait 'til next year" talk as far as a Yankee Conference crown is concerned.

The victory over Maine gave the team a much needed lift, but it also raised two important questions both of which must be answered early this week so the Minutemen can prepare for the Terriers.

Who will start at tailback and quarterback next Saturday for UMass? Will it be Jim Simeone who has started all six games this year at quarterback or will it be senior Barrett McGrath who came off the bench last Saturday to hit six of ten passes for a 92 yards in the second half?

Will flashy George Barnwell who rushed seven times for 57 yards against Maine be at tailback, or Frank Fay, the dependable tailback, who has been consistent but not spectacular this year. Pickett says he doesn't know.

"George did what we hoped he would do. He was very productive. He touched the ball 10 times for 112 yards," said UMass coach Bob Pickett, who has heard people compare Barnwell with another wide receiver turned tailback, UMass running back Dennis Dent who went on to set several school rushing records. "We'd been playing him at tailback in practice and he was very exciting."

"I thought Barrett did a fine job for coming in cold," added Pickett. "We won't know for a few days who'll start at either tailback or quarterback. Right now, I'd have to say Frank Fay will be the starting tailback and Jim Simeone will be at quarterback. That could change."

It's not that Pickett doesn't want the fans to know--he doesn't want BU to know.

After the opening game 45-13 loss to Toledo, the Minutemen defense has not surrendered more than 17 points in any one contest. That was in a 17-0 whitewashing by Holy Cross the second game of the year in a game in which they spent more than their share of time on the field.

Since that time, Grady Fuller, Craig Lesinski, Peter Tracy & Co. have given up only 43 points in four games for an 11 point average.

Lesinski leads the team in tackling with 28 primary tackles and 30 assisted tackles and also has two interceptions. The new man at linebacker this year is Mike Favreau. Favreau has 22 primary tackles and 32 assisted tackles and one interception.

The defensive line of defensive end Dave Cavanaugh (3 quarterback sacks) Peter Tracy, Scott Rose, Ken Johnson, and defensive end Kevin Brown have become a formidable wall for opposing backs. The UMass secondary has been tested in recent weeks and passed (they held Maine to 68 yards in the air) but Saturday the line will be tested by BU superback Paul Lewis, who has nine touchdowns, and is number one in the country in rushing (154 yards per game.)

Kickers travel to Dartmouth

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

As the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team takes the field this afternoon at Dartmouth, it will be trying to add some scoring punch to its defensive-minded approach.

The Minutewomen are coming off a rough 0-0 tie with Cortland on Sunday. It is the third 0-0 game the team has had this season. UMass Coach Kalekeni Banda will still have the team emphasize defense, but the need to score goals will be more prominent.

"It's a team we should beat, but we're not taking them lightly," Banda said about Dartmouth. "We've got to go there prepared and go in as we've been playing hard and defensively. We'll stay back but we'll go at them a little more and try to get the game in control early."

Susan Bird and Michelle Rodney who have been used very sparingly because of illness are feeling better and should see more action today. Bird played most of the Cortland game due to the lack of any healthy players on the bench.

Jamie Watson is receiving treatment and exercising her knee which she injured a week ago. She will be out indefinitely.

UMass carries a 6-1-3 record and a fourth-in-the-nation rank into the match. Dartmouth is 4-4 and is expecting a hard game from the Minutewomen, according to Bryan O'Friel, an assistant Sports Director at Dartmouth.

Sharon Matthews is the only offensive threat on the Dartmouth team. Matthews has scored seven goals in the past four games and has 14 points all together.

Freshman goaltender Ann Jaquinth will be in the net for Dartmouth. She has posted two shutouts on the season and has a 1.76 goals against average.

A few odds and a few ends

Just a few random thoughts...

The Baltimore Orioles put on a pitching clinic in this year's World Series. Just ask the Phillies, who hit for a .195 average. The staff ERA for Baltimore was 1.06, perhaps pitching coach Ray Miller should have been MVP...Rick Dempsey became the third catcher in a row to win World Series MVP. Darrell Porter won it last year for the Cardinals and Steve Yeager shared the award with two other Dodgers in 1981...As for MVP of the American League, it will either be Eddie Murray or Cal Ripkin, probably Murray. The only, and I mean only, reason Jim Rice won't get it is that he played for a 6th place club...In the National League, MVP will probably go to either Dale Murphy, if we can interrupt his eating apple pie, or Andre Dawson. As for the rest: Cy Young, LaMarr Hoyt, AL, John Denny, NL. Rookie of the year; Mike Boddicker, AL, Darryl Strawberry, NL...Early prediction for 1984--the Mets, yes the Mets. This year's club is similar in many ways to the 1968 Mets. A good combination of veterans, rookies, and young pitchers. Next year could be another 1969.

On to football...Pete Rozelle has done a number on bookies with this parity thing. Last week, 6 underdogs not only beat the spread, but won outright. I personally have taken to the bottle after my 5-9 mark last week...Can't for the life of me figure out the Patriots. One week, they play the game of "How many different ways can we give the game away." Next week, they show poise and confidence in beating a top-notch club. At least the fans go into a Pats game unexpected...What a game Monday night! Green Bay 49, Washington 48. I believe the defensive coordinators of both clubs are wondering if football is really worth it.

Well, now that Robert Parrish has settled down and is back with the Celtics, I'm waiting for Charles Bradley to sit out because he is so used to it...A sad story, the Michael Ray Richardson one. He was a good talent who just couldn't get on the right track. I hope he gets straightened out and lands with another club. Maybe the Knicks will take him back and reunite him with Ray Williams.

How about some local stuff...UMass was fortunate BU beat URI. If UMass wins on Saturday against BU and all three end up at 4-1, we'll see another complicated tie-breaker. But, at least, the Minutemen have a better chance...Salute of the week goes to all of the women's sports. Not too many other schools in the country can boast two top 5 programs, men's or women's. Let's hope they can keep on rolling.

Finally, this name goes in the Can You Believe It Department--A player for Houston Baptist college goes by the name of, are you ready, Aniset Lavodrama. That has got to be a classic.

Hockey faces Harvard today

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

"Harvard is a good team, and I'm sure they'll give us a good game," University of Massachusetts field hockey Coach Pam Hixon said after yesterday's practice. The Minutewomen face Harvard today at 3 p.m. on the NOPE playing field.

"We had a good weekend (against Temple and Old Dominion)," Hixon said. "Against Harvard, we'll come out and play the best game we can possibly play."

Last season, UMass battled to a scoreless tie with the Crimson Ladies. This season, Hixon said Harvard has beaten 15th ranked Dartmouth.

Hixon said the new national rankings would be out either today or tomorrow. Last week, the Minutewomen were ranked fourth, behind UConn, Iowa and Old Dominion.

"We spent today's (Tuesday's) practice and we'll spend the rest of the season working to improve small parts of our game," Hixon said.

"Also, after the weekend (on turf), we need to adjust our game back to grass."

Tomorrow, and at New Hampshire on Saturday, there will be plenty of opportunity for adjustment.

Soccer faces UConn in tough match

By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team has had a hard time putting victories on the board thus far this season. The Minutemen's road to victory has yet another road block as they face the University of Connecticut in Storrs, CT., today at 3 p.m.

UConn, which is a perrenial powerhouse, is currently ranked 17th in the nation and 2nd in New England behind Brown. The Huskies (8-5-3) have not lost to a New England opponent in over a 44 game stretch which spans four years.

UMass (1-7-4) gave the Huskies and their coach Joe Morrone (a 1960 graduate of UMass) a run for their money in last season's game. The Minutemen tied UConn 2-2 in Amherst. The Huskies made it all the way to the national semi-finals last season before bowing to Duke.

The Minutemen led the game 2-1 until UConn's Bill Morrone (the coach's son) tied it up with just 26 seconds left in regulation time. This gutsy effort by the Minutemen last fall will be fresh on the minds of the Huskies who will be seeking revenge.

The UMass defense has been strong as of late. With the addition of the teams premier player mid-fielder Kevin Flynn at sweeper they are an even stronger unit.

"Kevin played his best game of the year in last Friday's loss to Rhode Island at sweeper. He lifted out defense," said Assistant Coach Rick Bryant.

Kevin Flynn and the rest of the UMass defense will have to be at their best to stop the likes of sophomore sensation forward Matt Addington.

"A win over UConn would make our season," said senior forward Kayvan Khadami.

Women run to fourth place finish

By M.E. MURRAY
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's cross-country team, showed improvement, finished fourth among 15 schools Saturday on a 3.1 mile course at Holy Cross in Worcester.

UMass senior Dana Mikesell, seventh-place overall, ran the best time among the Minutewomen, half a minute behind the strong first place finish of the Crusader's Julie LeClaire (18:20).

Behind Mikesell, the top five runners for UMass were Chris Pratt (14th), Sally Howes (23rd), Kim Baker (26th), and Deidre Doyle (32nd).

With the New England Championships only two weeks away, Coach Julie LaFreniere is hoping the top five women can finish closer together and improve the overall team score. They finished two points behind Army on Saturday.

This weekend's meet at the University of New Hampshire should be an interesting one with UNH favored, but a great battle for second place among the University of Rhode Island, Vermont, and UMass.

Surprise statement:

Allen may step down as SGA co-President

By JOHN O'CONNELL
and LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

Student Government Association (SGA) co-president Charlene Allen announced last night her intention to resign from her position for financial reasons at the Undergraduate Student Senate meeting.

Allen said she cannot afford to come back to school next semester if she stays on as the SGA co-president. The University has denied her in-state eligibility for financial aid and reduced tuition, Allen said even though "I was born here, I've lived here for 15 years of my life," and she now lives in Amherst. Allen said she moved to New York when she was 12, and moved back to Massachusetts when she was 17. For this reason, and also because she graduated from a New York high school, Allen said the University has denied her residency status for the past three years.

"To put it simply I have to get a job that pays 40 hours a week," Allen said, to finance the rest of her education. "Believe me, I've checked all other options."

The resignation will take effect in two weeks, Allen said.

Tom Ahern, co-president with Allen, said he hopes the resignation will "have as little disruption of the student government as possible, in the middle of these tuition hikes, constitutional problems, etc."

Following Allen's announcement, the Senate unanimously passed a resolution supporting Allen's appeal to the University Residency Board. Allen said if the board would grant her petition for residency, she would be able to stay on as SGA co-president.

If the appeal fails, and elections are called, Ahern said he will run again, with Lauren Bertsch, chair of the Academic Affairs committee, as his co-candidate.

The senate also passed a motion last night denouncing Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey's threat to cut off SGA funds if deadlines for approval of the SGA constitution by the UMass Board of Trustees are not met.

"To put it simply, I have to get a job that pays 40 hours a week," Allen said, in order to finance the rest of her education. "Believe me, I've checked all other options."

Duffey sent a letter to SGA leaders last week, complaining that the SGA was delaying revisions on the constitution which he said must be approved by the Trustees to add credibility to the actions of the SGA.

Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan said he expects a task force to complete the revisions "by Tuesday" of this week. The motion last night stated that "the SGA will not abide scurrilous attacks upon its authority to allocate and disburse funds," and that the "Senate denounces the actions of the Chancellor as inappropriate and demands that he retrace his threats."

In other business, the senate granted 5,139 dollars to Union Records Unlimited in order to balance their account and provide funds for them to open for the semester.

Senate okays holiday for Martin Luther King

By BOB BURGESS
Collegian Staff
and the Associated Press

The U.S. Senate's approval Wednesday of a bill proposing the establishment of a national holiday in memory of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. was received with mixed emotions by members of the Afro-American Studies Department at the University of Massachusetts.

"On the one hand I support the idea of a national celebration of King, but I also see it as a symbolic gesture," Ernest Allen, department chairman, said.

Allen said while the Senate is remembering King, "it is not doing much to support the late civil rights leader's dreams of American society," especially by approving increases in military spending.

President Ronald Reagan has promised to sign the bill, which designates the third Monday in January as a legal holiday in King's name. The holiday will be recognized officially in 1986, and will make King the only American besides George Washington to be supremelyhonored.

Michael Thelwell, professor of Afro-American studies, said this legislation "will immeasurably improve the image of the U.S. in the Third World countries," but he had some sharp criticisms of Sen. Jesse Helms' (R-North Carolina) attempt to block the bill's passage.

Thelwell said Helms' efforts, which included allegations that King was influenced by communists, were "disgraceful, racsist, spiteful, unprincipaled attempts" to discredit the Baptist preacher, who won the 1964 Nobel Peace Prize while practicing the creed on non-violence.

Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., told the Senate King "deserves the place which this legislation gives him beside Washington and Columbus. In a very real sense, he was the second father of our country, the second founder of a new world that is not only a place, a piece ofgeography, but a noble set of ideals.

Earlier Wednesday, the Senate smuffed out bitter-ended attempts by some conservatives to derail the legislation, as King's widow, Coretta, and his son Martin III, watched from the Senate gallery. The family was accompanied by singer Stevie Wonder; Benjamin Hooks, the president of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; and Joseph Lowry, head of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference which King founded.

Author recreates 1960's

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

Former Amerst College teacher and noted feminist author, Tillie Olson returned to Amherst College again yesterday where she spoke on the origins of the women's movement and tried to recreate the turbulent period of the 1960's when she was a teacher here and one of the early women's activists.

"I can't really say what initiated all those movements for human and civil rights. It was a desire for one's dignity and inherent right, one's hatred for living in humiliation and degradation," Olson said before and audience at Alumni House at Amherst College.

Described as a phenomenon by a friend, Olson, 71, has written three books about women and is best known for her collection of short stories, Tell Me A Riddle, which was published in 1962 and won an O'Henry Award for literature. In the 1930's Olson was a labor organizer and did not begin writing until she was in her 50's.

"The women's movement come out of all the other human rights movements. It was a righting of self, a fire of ideas and a giant unstoppering," she said.

"Women began to write, speak, listen and emotions came forward. For so long this had been so sporadic, so written off and so hidden that you began to doubt what you believed," she said.

In 1969, with no prior experience or college education, Olson came to Amherst College to teach writitng at the then all-male school, she immediately began pushing for the emergence of women.

"What I did was very utopian. I tried to make clear and remove the secondary situation of women's rights in the valley.

"When Hampshire College was first being formed as a 'special college' I gave suggestions for the curricula. I told them there was no need to scour the country for special male teachers when there were many intelligent and qualified women here in the valley, including some wives of professors who were more brilliant and resourceful then their husbands," she said.

Of this period, Olson said "Those years were among the most faith-abiding, confirming and passionate years of our lives and still carry us on.

Brazil announces civil state of emergency

BRASILIA, Brazil (AP) — President Joao Figueiredo on Wednesday declared a state of emergency, giving the government temporary dictatorial powers, the presidential palace said.

Francisca Lira, aide in the presidential press office, confirmed the measure to The Associated Press by telephone but would not give details or explain why the emergency was declared.

No announcement was immediately issued.

Brazil's constitution as amended in 1979 provides for a "state of emergency" which must be approved by the civilian, popularly elected congress.

Under the "state of emergency" the executive branch must outline to the congress the specific measures desired and in what regions it wants the extra powers applied.

It was not immediately known whether the emergency applied to the entire nation, nor for how long it was to be in effect.

The move came on the eve of a congressional vote on a controversial measure to roll back salary increases for tens of millions of Brazilian workers. The government has said approval was essential to guarantee billions of dollars in foreign bailout loans to Brazil, the third world's most indebted nation. But the congress, whose members were elected last year in Figueiredo's plan to return Latin America's biggest country to civilian rule, was expected to reject the measure.

Soviets: spacecraft's okay

MOSCOW (AP) — A Soviet space official Wednesday denied Western news reports of severe problems aboard the Salyut 7 space station, and insisted the 116-day old mission was "continuing normally."

The British Broadcasting Corp. had reported the space station was crippled because of a propellant leak, "in effect drifting in orbit."

BBC science correspondent James Wilkinson also said in his Tuesday night report that the Soyuz T-9 spaceship that launched the cosmonauts June 27 and is attached to the space station would be "potentially unsafe" for travel within days, by Soviet standards, raising questions of how the cosmonauts would get back home.

Soviet officials have said a Soyuz is unsafe for travel in space after 115-120 days because its batteries and other systems can deteriorate during that time.

U.S. intelligence sources in Washington said earlier they believe there was a propellant leak Sept. 9 aboard the Salyut that knocked out half the space station's steering jets. But they have said they believe the space craft is still able to maneuver.

Italian leader talks arms

PROVIDENCE, R.I. (AP) — Without specifically mentioning the deployment of new U.S. nuclear missiles, Italy's socialist prime minister Wednesday gave his endorsement to bolstering conventional and nuclear weaponry in Europe.

Italy and the United States have long been linked by "the quest for peace," Bettino Craxi said while accepting an honorary law degree from Brown University. "The quest for peace is at the basis of the military alliance that unites Italy to the United States."

But in apparent reference to European demonstrations against deployment of new Pershing 2 and long-range cruise missiles in Western Europe, Craxi said, "A peace based on complete disarmament is purely idealistic. A peace based on security is an attainable reality."

Craxi said that "a country which has a clear military superiority over another will not resist, sooner or later, the temptation to use it in order to impose its will and to exercise its influence."

Craxi described "what is happening in Europe in the relations between East and West" as "paradoxical, grave and absurd." The Soviet Union, he said, "is facing peaceful and democratic nations who want to live in peace with their neighbors even though they may differ in their ideas and conceptions.

Flynn gets edge over King in recounted election results

BOSTON — City Councilman Raymond L. Flynn topped former state Rep. Melvin H. King by 16 hundredths of 1 percent in the preliminary election for mayor, the Election Department reports after the official recount.

The lead has shuttled between the two since the election on Oct. 11.

The final and official tally gives Flynn 48,118 votes, 270 more than King's 47,848. David I. Finnegan, former president of the school committee, finished third with 41,657.

In one sense it was immaterial whether Flynn or King finished first. The two top votegetters in the preliminary election compete next month in the runoff election to determine who succeeds Kevin H. White as mayor.

There were nine candidates for mayor on the ballot, and one of them, Robert R. Kiley, withdrew before the election.

Originally, Flynn was declared unofficial winner by one vote. His margin was said to be 360 votes after errors were found in East Boston and South Boston.

Next, King was thought to be the winner by 98 votes because officials discovered a keypunching error had credited 458 King votes to Michael Gelber. Other errors discovered in the recount produced the Flynn victory by 270 votes.

Prison escapee lives life of luxury, collects welfare

FRAMINGHAM, Mass. — A Massachusetts prison escapee, arrested on drug trafficking charges in Pennsylvania this week, allegedly dealt in heroin and collected welfare while living in a luxury home complete with indoor pool, police said.

Louisa Figueroa, arrested Monday by federal authorities is believed to be one of the "most significant" heroin dealers in the Berks County, Pa., area, said Nick Broughton, a spokesman for the federal Drug Enforcement Administration.

Figueroa was arrested Monday at a grocery store in Reading, 60 miles northwest of Philadelphia. She was jailed in lieu of $1 million cash bail on charges of conspiring to deliver heroin and possession of heroin with intent to distribute.

Broughton told The Middlesex News of Framingham that state and federal authorities found $6,000 dollars in currency, 86 bags of heroin, and a .22 caliber pistol in her possession. The arrest came after a year long investigation.

Ms. Figueroa escaped from the Framingham facility on Nov. 3, 1975 after serving 13 months of a 10-year term for possession and intent to distribute heroin. Prison officials said she escaped by climbing a chain link fence.

Worcester woman points to others, gets lighter sentence

WORCESTER, Mass. — A 26-year-old Worcester woman was given a suspended sentence Wednesday in the shooting death of a state trooper after she implicated others charged with the killing.

Maria Figueroa, 26, was given a suspended three-to four-year term and will be on probation for two years. The sentencing came after she pleaded guilty to two counts of being an accessory after the fact to murder.

The change of plea came during a motions hearing at Worcester Superior Court.

Assistant District Attorney Louis Aloise asked for the suspended sentence because Mrs. Figueroa gave police a description of the suspects and the cars used by them.

In statements made in court Wednesday, she linked the men charged with murdering trooper George L. Hanna to the shooting.

Hanna died Feb. 26 after he was gunned down outside an Auburn liquor store — the first state trooper to be fatally shot on duty since 1951.

According to the statement, Hanna stopped the car she and the other suspects were riding in because he thought they were smoking marijuana. When he asked to search the car, they shot him, according to statements read in court.

Navy diver rises to surface too fast, has fatal embolism

BOSTON — A Navy diver examining an oil tanker for possible leaks died of an apparent air embolism Wednesday while diving in Cape Cod Bay, the Coast Guard reported.

Coast Guard Chief Richard S. Griggs said Bob White, a second class petty officer stationed at the South Weymouth Naval Air Station, was pronounced dead after being flown to the decompression chamber at the Naval Submarine Base in Groton, Conn.

Griggs said White was working as a private contractor when the incident occurred.

White had been hired by the owners of the tanker Mohawk, a Liberian registered tanker that began leaking some of its 28 million gallons of No. 2 fuel oil on Tuesday. White and another diver were looking for the leak when he apparently swallowed diesel oil and surfaced too quickly, Griggs said.

"White had surfaced and had stopped breathing," Griggs said. "People began administering CPR."

Griggs said a doctor was flown by helicopter to the scene, about two miles outside the mouth of Cape Cod Bay.

"Once the doctor arrived, he was able to determine that perhaps White had suffered an air embolism from surfacing too quickly," he said.

Griggs said White was flown to the Groton base where he was pronounced dead.

He said the cause of death had not been determined. An air embolism is caused when a diver rises to the surface too quickly, causing dissolved gas in his blood to form gas bubbles in the bloodstream.

"We don't know if that was the case and we haven't received reports yet what the cause of death was," he said.

Griggs said the Coast Guard was investigating the incident.

Committee seeks to improve public education

STATE REP. JAMES G. COLLINS, D-AMHERST - "We have to educate our students for a future we can't predict."

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

The Joint Committee on Education yesterday heard calls to increase state support and guidence in public primary and secondary schools, while allowing strong local control of them, at the third in a series of five public hearings scheduled for this month throughout the state.

Meeting at the University of Massachusetts, the committee sought testimony for the formulation of legislation to correct problems in public school curriculum, facilities, teaching, and access, according to state Sen. Gerard D'Amico, D-Worcester, co-chairman of the committee.

"We have to educate our students for a future we can't predict," said state Rep. James G. Collins, D-Amherst, in laying out the scope of the problem facing Massachusetts and the nation.

Collins, the house co-chairman of the committee, said he is not looking to develop specific programs for the schools, but instead is striving to develop a partnership between the state and local schools.

Dean Mario Fantini of the University's School of Education, proposed "a network of model shools and school systems" which would be initially developed in a few communities throughout the state and then applied to others. He also advocated "talent based schools" offering emphasis in specialty areas including technologies, medicine, and arts.

Fantini, whose school has within it an elementary school for "hands on" training of education students, outlined a two-sided approach to being about his objectives: first, better use and development of existing resources using industry support and involvement similar to that activity employed in higher education; and secondly, a reallocation of state money and priority to allow pay for teachers to be more in line with their private sector worth.

In a statement to the committee, Diana Rover, president of the League of Women Voters of Amherst, said "The single most important need of our public schools in Massachusetts is state aid that is adequate, reliable, distributed on an equalizing basis, and not earmarked."

Donald Frizzle, superintendent of Amherst public schools, recommended the committee develop a curriculum program using state standards as a basis and emphasizing teacher involvement; establish a staff development process to define priorities; and establish a staff evaluation process, also with a "major role" for teachers input.

Belchertown Police arrested Tuesday a resident of East Sanford St. on an Amherst warrant charging him with the rape of a 45-year-old woman.

Lee William Winsor, 38, allegedly raped the woman between 9 and 10:30 a.m. Monday in an East Pleasant St. house. Police said the incident was reported at 3:58 p.m. the same day.

Winsor was apprehended in Belchertown and held at the Belchertown police station until 7:44 p.m. Tuesday, when Amherst Police went and picked him up.

Police said an incident of indecent exposure was reported Tuesday, right after it occurred at 9:20 a.m. A 20-year-old woman riding a bicycle to the University of and a dark-haired white man exposing himself next to the car. Police said the exhibitionist said "Hi" to the woman.

Three people sustained minor injuries in an addicent at 6:41 p.m. Tuesday at Bay Road and Mill St. Arthur L. Pichette, 36, Mark R. Tebaldi, 17 and Michael Tebaldi, 14, all of Amherst, were treated and released at Cooley Dickinson Hospital. Tebaldi was cited for failure to use care in stopping.

A 13-year-old was questioned by police, responding to a report of a peeping tom. At 8:09 p.m. Tuesday, a resident of Colonial Village Apts. called the police, who brought the boy to the station and summoned his parents. The police said they will investigate it further, but that the boy is not a suspect in the other incidents of voyeurism that recently plagued the area near Lincoln Apts.

Asbestos found at UMass

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

A University of Massachusetts spokesperson announced yesterday it may need to close down the Campus Center concourse during January intersession to remove asbestos from its ceiling, but called the problem "not an actual one, (but) a potential one."

The announcement followed discovery by the State Asbestos Program of the hazardous substance, used prior to its 1973 banning as a flame retardent, in ceilings of the concourse and a laboratory in the Goessman chemistry building.

Donald A. Robinson, director of the Environmental Health and Safety office, said the discovery was made in conjunction with the State Asbestos Program, a commission charged with checking public buildings in Massachusetts for the substance.

The state investigators recommended the University either remove or encapsulate the asbestos, which was sprayed onto the ceilings. University spokesman Arthur Clifford said the University will bring in a consultant to determine the course of action to be taken, but said the University is hoping to use the six week period between semesters to remove and replace ceilings in the concourse and University Store. He estimated the cost at 400,000 to 600,000 dollars for work on 90,000 square feet of ceiling in both the Campus Center and Goessman.

"Air samples have not disclosed a hazard for asbestos in the air," Robinson said. He said the decision was made to advise removal after the state agency, which in investigations in previous years found a 10 percent concentration of fibers in the ceiling, this month reported it as 30 percent.

Robinson said a hazard did not exist since the asbestos particles were not falling off, and the action being considered in "to avoid the potential for a healthe hazard."

He said the results of the October 7 tests done by his office and the state agency as part of "a comprehensive review of the campus," also found asbestos in Tobin Hall, but not in amounts great enough to warrant immediate action.

Awards given to workers

By ED HAYWARD
Collegian Correspondent

The department of Student Affairs Convocation Week will end today with the presentation of five distinguished service awards at the Annual Student Affairs Convocation, to be held at the University of Massachusetts.

Throughout the week different divisions that make up the Student Affairs Department have been recognizing employees with at least five years of service at UMass.

Four hundred employees were recognized this year. Of that number, five have served the University for over 30 years and one person has served for over 40 years. The reason for the high number is that this is the first time recognition has been given to employees other than those who have received the Distinguished Service Awards.

The awards are given annually to those selected by a seven person committee. Employees must maintain positive employment records, respond well to crises, make original contributions to their departments and cooperate well with others in the office and around campus, said Sharon Weilgus, Assistant Personnel Manager at the Student Affairs Office.

This year 75 employees, whose names have been released only by the committee and the winners themselves, were nominated.

The convocation begins at 2:30 p.m. with a welcome from Vice Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis Madson. Entertainment will be provided by the UMass Theatre Guild. Winners will receive monetary awards and commemorative pieces.

SGA worker is "rare"

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Amid the constant talk and movement in the Undergraduate Student Senate office, Eunice Konieczny stands out for her quiet professionalism and because she is the one older figure in an office full of students.

Konieczny has been office manager of the Student Government Association (SGA) for nearly 24 years, having started in 1959, part-time at first.

She received an award for her continuing service to the students at the Student Affairs stafff convocation Monday, and she received another special recognition award from the Campus Center in June.

With all the work she does full-time and year-round for political activists on anti-racist, women's and student issues, Konieczny said she tries not to get too involved.

"I try to stay neutral when it comes to the political end of things," she said.

In all the years she has worked at UMass, Konieczny has seen many things change on campus, especially the role women have played.

"Women were deprived and they're just sort of coming out and being recognized," she said.

During the years, Konieczny has seen the Student Activities budget grow from 103,421 thousand dollars to 1.3 million dollars and campus concerns ranging from students tracking mud into the dorms to racism and sexism in society. And through all this, she said student activism has sometimes lost continuity.

While students appear "more apathetic than they used to be," she said, student activists "know where they're headed more, what they want and where they want to go."

"I just like working with young people. It doesn't matter much what it is."

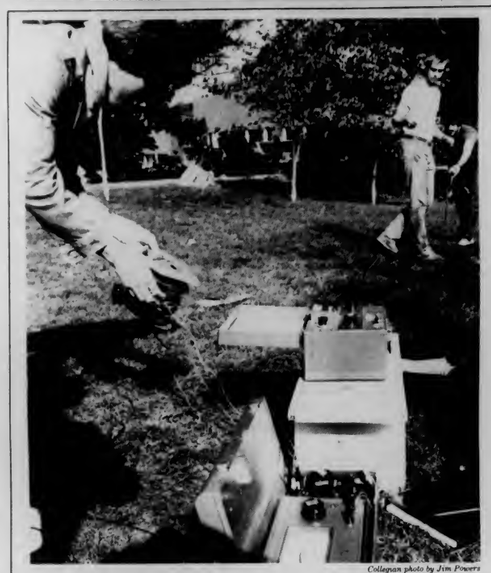
"I took a few courses here after I started working, but it was too much, taking care of a family, working full-time," she said.

So this woman, upon whom the entire SGA of UMass depends, holds no college degree of her own. Nor does she want to.

Women On Campus

From her years of experience comes a knowledge of the senate and the workings of the office that no student could equal, along with an historical perspective that senators find invaluable.

Joel Weissman, director of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy (SCERA), has worked in the Senate office for five years, as a student and as a professional. He once said of Konieczny, "don't get on the wrong side of Eunice. She holds the place together."



Weissman also described Konieczny as "a real New Englander, a no-nonsense person."

Weissman said Konieczny is "one of those rare people who's almost perfectly suited to her job." After 20 years in the office, senators threw a party for her and "she got a declaration from the state declaring it Eunice Konieczny day," he said.

STOP aids social drinkers

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Staff

Some University of Massachusetts students drink to be social. Some drink to forget about the latest E-core they are failing. Some can stop after a few drinks, some can't stop at all, and others are somewhere in-between.

University of Massachusetts Alcohol Education Coordinator Carlene Ricelli said 90 percent of college students drink socially, 5 percent are actual alcoholics, and some find themselves in a gray area between those two extremes. The Student Opportunity Program (STOP) is designed to address those students' needs.

STOP, a program at the University Health Services which begins Monday, has been set up to reach students confronted by drinking pressures and to offer coping strategies through a relaxed and informative five-session series of workshops, Ricelli said.

"This is not a program set up in a way to reach alcoholics, nor for someone in need of medical treatment or detoxification," Ricelli said. Instead, STOP workshops address alcohol physiology, attitudes and values. The workshops are progressive and each program is designed to handle any 12 to 15 students, she said.

STOP began last semester with 12 students, eight of whom were self-referred, Ricelli said. Many took the program hoping to deal with legal problems caused by their drinking, she said.

"Many students find that drinking has begun to cost too much, both financially and emotionally. All of a sudden, Friday's happy hour has begun on Thursday and Wednesday," Ricelli said.

STOP is offered to allow students to benefit from early intervention in a developing alcohol problem, Ricelli said. Assertiveness training and learning how to sayu no and discourage peer pressure are part of the workshops.

Ricelli noted the highest incidence of alcoholism in the country is found in people in their mid-20s, many of whom were students who, upon graduation, didn't know how to change their social patterns of relating.

"They try to cut back but can't," she said.

Students interested in participating in the program should call Ricelli at 549-2671.

Hotline advises consumers

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

Have you ever felt like a ripped-off consumer? Bought a "lemon car?" Have an unreasonable landlord? The University of Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group Consumer Hotline may have the answer.

Lisa Zurk, UMass student and project coordinator, said the hotline was established in 1981 as a response to complaints of consumer rip-offs in the area.

"We are not lawyers and so we cannot give legal advice," Zurk said. "The purpose of the Consumer Hotline is to inform people who feel that their rights as consumers have been violated of the options for recourse available to them."

The hotline funcitons to inform people of their legal rights under Massachusetts law, explain the small claims court procedure, the last step taken if all other legal action fails, and advise people how to write a 30-day demand letter, the first step for consumers planning legal action, Zurk said.

Another goal is to simply make the public aware of the hotline's existence, Zurk said.

"Among other things, we are contacting area agencies, like housing authorities, legal services, advice agencies, etc. These agencies will then be able to refer people to us," she said.

One-third of the calls from consumers in the past have dealt with used cars, Zurk said. The second largest problem, she said, is with tenant rights.

"In the past years we have had a good amount of response from the community toward the hotline," Zurk said. "Many people call or write back to us with the result of the actions that they chose to take."

UM geography major maps trails for hikers

By JENNIFER CORNACCHIA
Collegian Staff

With the height of the fall foliage season now upon us, a University of Massachusetts student has created a useful tool to make the most of the autumnal beauty.

Chris Ryan, 23, a senior geography major at UMass, recently deciphered the trails of the Holyoke Mountain Range, creating the first comprehensive trail map of the Eastern area.

The trail map idea arose when Ryan, a lifelong outdoor enthusiast, was searching for a final project for his cartography (map-making) course, he said.

Prior to the project, Ryan had been sketching on a Holyoke regional map the trails he encountered while hiking in his spare time. He said the Holyoke map was difficult to use and incomplete since it showed only the major trails of the mountain range.

Ryan said it then occured to him that creating a new, more complete map would serve two purposes: it would be a final project for his course and a badly needed public service.

"I've encountered many lost people while hiking, which shows that there is a need for a good map," Ryand said.

Using compass-terrain association, a skill learned while in the Army's Special Forces, Ryan was able to find all of the trails in the mountain range during six months of weekend hiking.

He then enlarged the mountain range section of the Holyoke regional map and sketched in all of the trails, taking another month to finish.

The completed map"is aimed at the inexperienced reader," Ryan said. The map was printed at Ryan's own expense, and he said he has already made 40 percent of his investment.

In addition to showing all the trails on the eastern part of the Holyoke Mountain Range (Amherst and Granby area), Ryan managed to include points of interest such as fire towers, old cellar holes, fields and the Horse Caves where, according to legend, Daniel Shay hid after attempting to overtake the Springfield Armory in the historically noted "Shay's Rebellion".

Ryan's map can be used for cross-country skiing as well as for hiking since it clearly shows where the terrain is steep. It tells where one can park legally in order to enjoy the mountain range and has clearly marked state park boundaries so the "people won't stray onto private property," Ryand said.

The map also contains first aid advice and emergency phone numbers.

Ryan said he plans to complete the western section of the Holyoke Mountain Range, which consists of Hadley and South Hadley, in the near future.

Ryan's Legend Trail Map of the Holyoke Range sell for 2 dollars at the University Store, in the Outing Club Equipment Room, 102-D Hasbrouck and in various businesses in the Amherst area.

UMass police respond to collision

University of Massachusetts police responded to a report of a motor vehicle accident at 12:58 p.m. Tuesday at Mass. Ave and Haigis Mall. The vehicle of James T. Metz, Amherst, was struck by Madeline G. Rubin, Amherst, police said, and Rubin was cited for failure to yield right-of-way. There were no injuries. Both vehicles received front end damages, according to the police report.

In other police business:

UMass police arrested a 27-year-old Leverett resident at 3:43 p.m. Tuesday for operating a vehicle without a license. The woman was also charged with traveling the wrong way on a one-way street, police said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Nothing solved by raising age

I was only a junior in high school when former governor Edward King raised the "legal" drinking age from 18 to 20.

His new law didn't really affect me that much. At 16, I was far from legal age anyway, and my friends and I were used to the hassles of trying to find someone old enough and willing to "buy" for us. I can't even remember how many times I begged, and bribed, my older brother and his friends to make "packy-runs" for my high school parties.

Miriam Zoll

Remember what a big deal the hometown cops and the corner liquor store made about the new drinking age? I remember one liquor store tried to scare "minors" by posting a big, black and white sign on the wall that said: STATE LAW PROHIBITS MINORS FROM PURCHASING ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGES. VIOLATORS WILL BE PROSECUTED. In that particular store, "minors" weren't even allowed to touch a bottle of vodka or a six-pack, never mind trying to buy the stuff. They tried real hard to stop us from drinking by raising the legal drinking age, but despite attempts, young people all over Massachusetts, from Brimfield to Framingham, kept on drinking and partying.

One of the reasons King raised the drinking age in 1979 was to cut back on the number of car accidents involving drunk-drivers, and he thought that young people under 20 were the cause of most of these accidents. According to a recent Boston Globe editorial, King's method of stopping drunk-driving accidents by raising the drinking age didn't work. The editorial said: "The facts are that last year 26.5 per cent of the fatal accidents in which drunk-driving was a factor involved drivers aged 19 and under -- drivers already under the legal drinking age." Unfortunately, a lot of these statistics are based on the number of high school students who die in car accidents each year. During my three years in high school, I knew at least five kids who died because they were driving drunk. I think almost everybody knew someone in high school who ended up getting killed this way.

There is no question that fatal accidents caused by drunk drivers is a problem in Massachusetts, and every other state in America. For years, state legislatures across the country have tried to come up with solutions to decrease the number of alcohol related accidents. For the first time last July 4th, Governor Michael Dukakis set up roadblocks at major highway points throughout Massachusetts. The state police who checked drivers at the roadblocks ended up bagging a few drunk drivers, and the number of holiday traffic fatalities did drop. Another new tactic that seems to work is stricter drunk-driving laws. Drunk-drivers who get caught have to pay expensive fines and their insurance rates go up, too. It seems like these new ideas to cut down drunk-driving accidents are working a lot better than the not-so-new but ever popular idea of raising the drinking age.

Many members of the 1983 state legislature are planning to raise the drinking age again, this time to 21. Despite the fact that in Massachusetts the real drunk-driving problem is with the group of drivers age 20-24, they still think raising the "legal" drinking age to 21 is going to solve the problem. The new law, which was introduced by Rep. James Craven (D-Jamaica Plains) and Rep. Michael Creedon (D-Brockton), has already passed through the House and will most likely become state law within one year.

In 1979 they said that people under 20 weren't mature or responsible enough to handle the right to purchase and consume alcohol. Now they're saying the same things about 21-year-olds. Our state government, and maybe our federal government soon, can keep on raising the drinking age to 21 or 31, but that's not going to stop people, of all ages, from driving drunk and getting killed in car accidents. Besides, everyone knows that mothers and fathers, doctors, businesswomen and men, lawyers and even public officials, drink too much and drive; it's not just young people.

A lot of people know that the best way to attract people to an event or party is to offer free beer or wine. Practically every major holiday celebration, Halloween, Thanksgiving, New Years, St. Patrick's Day, Senior Day and the Fourth of July, revolves around the punch bowl or the keg. And so many of the fun things young people do, like going on roadtrips, going to concerts, going out to parties or clubs, or just watching the ball game on TV, is more fun when you're drinking a cold beer or maybe a rum and coke.

There really is genuine concern over drunk-driving accidents and drinking problems in general, but raising the drinking age hasn't really helped solve these problems yet. Maybe, just maybe, the solution lies somewhere else?

How about having mandatory alcohol education or alcohol awareness programs in junior and senior high schools? Why not help kids understand that drinking as much beer as John Belushi drank in "Animal House" can really hurt their bodies? How about dealing with peoples' attitudes toward drinking instead of reviving old laws that never worked in the first place.

Give that man a cigar

To the Editor,

I am writing this letter to respond to an editorial written in the October 19 issue on page 7 by Bill Collins.

To use every cliche in the book I would like to say, he hit the nail right on the head, right on!, give that man a cigar, "A" for effort, etc., etc. "Student Activities Trust Fund (SATF) fee is for student activities not student politics." That simple sentence should be carved in marble, supported by two marble columns, and placed at the head of every student senate meeting.

I was a senator also and I can sure sympathize with Mr. Collins, I just hope that he lasts longer than I did and with that article he will. I lasted six weeks in those confusing Wednesday night meetings. I fought and spoke out against the spending of monies for political activities such as sending 40 people to an anti-KKK rally in Washington, D.C. I agree that this is an admirable cause but if people feel so strong about it, spend your own money, not the money of the entire population.

I lasted six weeks fighting for what I and my constituants thought was right. I am not the type to quit on anything but after my fifth meeting of voicing my opinion I was called into the speakers office and asked why I was trying to start a conservative coalition. I was also threatened with expulsion if I continued.

Be expelled or speak out what I thought the truth to be and then be kicked out. Did I have a choice in leaving the post?

It's about time that somebody wrote that letter, just remember, senators -- be an active part of the student senate and be loud if you think something is being railroaded past you. And for Mr. Collins, three cheers and good luck because undoubtably by now he has been summoned by the almighty speaker.

It just staggers the mind

To the Editor

The level of ignorance of some students on campus is absolutely staggering. An excellent indication of this ignorance was exhibited in Libby Hubbard's letter to the editor on October 13, 1983 ("We're deaf, dumb, and blind").

Ms. Hubbard made the claim that a "majority of students at UMass are not politically aware or committed." This claim is based on the fact that approximately 200 students showed up for a rally protesting the presence of United Technologies Corporation on campus. I agree with Ms. Hubbard that a turnout of 200 students for a rally seems to be an insignificant number when there are approximately 25,000 students at UMass. However, for Ms. Hubbard to translate the lack of participation in the rally into meaning that the student body and faculty in general, are "deaf, dumb, and blind to the future of civilization." is utterly ridiculous.

Ms. Hubbard states that "This (the rally) was the most important event happening on campus" and she is annoyed by the lack of participation. Well Ms. Hubbard, obviously this was not the most important event on campus to approximately 99.2 percent of the students. Given that most students on campus believed that this rally was not the most important event on campus, how can you get so (self?) righteously indignant at the students' refusal to read your group's leaflets. Why should somebody feel obligated to take his or her time to read literature about a topic not important to him or her. Regardless of whether a student read the leaflets that were handed out there is still something that bothers me about Ms. Hubbard's attitude. Ms. Hubbard implies that it is morally wrong for students not to support her ideas of what is acceptable social behavior and what are acceptable political values or beliefs. Well Ms. Hubbard, does it not seem that perhaps you are morally wrong in expecting or demanding other students to adopt your views on morality. I believe you are wrong. I think you should be able to accept the fact that people have minds of their own and may even disagree with you.

I refuse to give any merit to Ms. Hubbard's claim that her academic freedom was impinged because she was not able to find out what was being discussed behind closed doors at the UTC meeting. Academic freedom is not equivalent to a right to all knowledge about all matters. Therefore, I will not address Ms. Hubbard's argument that she has a right to know the type of business being conducted by UTC at the Campus Center.

Ms. Hubbard's last point is equally disappointing. Ms. Hubbard claims that the students here at UMass have raded consumer lifestyles for freedom. Let's be serious, ..ow is it that these students that were avoiding the rally did not exhibit freedom? Aren't we free to decide what we want to believe in and listen to those things that we want to.

I believe it is entirely possible that a majority of students at UMass are not deaf, dumb, or blind. It is very likely that the students here are politically aware, and based on their political views, they believed that the rally against UTC's presence on campus was not worth their time.

Bigotry hidden in semantics

To the Editor,

In his letter Foreign Policy Right On (Collegian, Oct. 3, 1983) Leo Quinlan argues that Americans should support Reagan's Central America policies, because a communist Central America poses an ultimate threat to U.S. security. Tens of thousands of El Salvadorians are dying as a result of U.S. policy in that region. But Mr. Quinlan assumes that our policy is our prerogative, if it is deemed necessary for the protection of our security. El Salvadorians are worth sacrificing for that security.

Mr. Quinlan might have argued that White security required the implementation of some policy resulting in the deaths of tens of thousands of Blacks. If he had, most of his readers would probly have agreed that he was crazy. Why is it that, when such bigotry is couched in the terminology of nation-states, it passes for legitimate political commentary?

Argument or fact-twisting

To the Editor,

I am writing in response to Steven P. Barrett's editorial printed in the October 13 edition of the Collegian. First, I feel the tone of that editorial is overbearing and superfluous. Mr. Barrett acts more like a rat boxed into a corner than a columnist voicing an opinion. His name calling and aggressive writing syle are unconvincing substitutes for a level headed approach, and detract from an already weak argument in favor or U.S. military intervention in the third world.

But more than this, the substance of Barrett's editorial is grossly misrepresentative of the facts. He chooses the small facts that he likes, and twists them to suit his argument. His vague distinction between a people's struggle against oppressors and a middle class revolt is weak, both abstractly and in application to the Sandinista revolution. There can be no doubt, and few persons educated on the subject will disagree, that the Nicaraguan revolution was an indigenous one. No amount of begging the question by Barrett will change that fact.

Where this approach to the question of U.S. military intervention in the third world came from I'll never understand, but I do understand that Barrett's comparisons between the revolutions of first and third world nations don't serve a useful purpose in this context. Those comparisons are full of irrelevant arguments aimed solely at twisting the facts. If Mr. Barrett would ever like to comment authoritatively on his subject and feels he can truly justify the U.S. invasion of Nicaragua, I urge him to put semantics aside and take pen in hand. Word games serve no useful purpose in a clear-headed discussion of politics.

Random Notes

by Joseph McCormack

No one will deny that their first semester at UMass is a time of transition. New students quickly learn the traumas of being responsible for themselves. The new experiences in different aspects of University living sometimes makes settling in a very bumpy road.

The resulting questions and remarks that come from frustrated freshmen never cease to amuse UMass veterans. Many freshmen feel persecuted by the laughter of upperclassmen. They should realize, however, that those who are laughing were once 'victims' of the same situation. Veterans aren't really laughing at freshmen, they're laughing at themselves. In any case this period of persecution is almost at an end. People are beginning to laugh at each other mindless of class distinction. But...

While the freshmen class was still settling in, two freshmen were randomly chosen as 'typical'. Their conversations were carefully scanned for amusing and revealing comments. The best of these are presented in this column, following a brief introduction of the speakers.

To protect their anonymity the two 'typical' freshmen will be called 'G.' and 'C.' G. and C. are two first-year women living somewhere in Southwest. They are both from one of Boston's closer suburbs, and were good friends in high school. As in many cases, they decided to room together, somehow feeling that together they had a better chance of survival. Both seem to be intelligent, although C. is rumoured to have no sense of direction. By observing the male traffic constantly entering and exiting their 'Z-room', it can be concluded that they are fairly attractive. Between the two, they posess most of the traits 'typical' to a freshman.

Here are some excerpts from casual conversations that took place during the first three weeks of the semester.

G. "I miss my dogs, but not my family. Isn't that sick?"
C. "This is the first 'case' we've ever bought!"
C. 'It's not like my mother's here and I have to stop at three beers."
G. "Do you really have to eat the pizzas in the lobby?"
C. "We say 'wicked' a wicked lot, don't we?"
G. "Do you know what C. did? We were in the elevator looking for a dryer, and she started jumping up and down in the laundry basket, and pushed all the buttons on the elevator. I think she's sick." (first signs of freshmen neurosis)
C. "That food is GROSS!" (after too many weeks of D.C. food)
G. "That girl STOLE my dryer!" (learning about the dog-eat-dog world of laundry)
C. "Aaaaaaaaaaa!..." (while being inducted into her first shaving cream fight.)
G. (with wide eyes, whispered) "There are sooo many 'granola people' in my English class."
C. "Listen to this. My cat has laryngitis from crying so much for me since I left."
G. "Who IS this?" (during first prank phone call)
C. "My mother put up posters and cleaned my room. I think she's going to rent it out!" (after first trip home)

Just to say in closing, this does not presume to indicate the condition of the Class of 1987. Chances are, most freshpersons got off to a better start than this pair.

How about a little help, professor?

To err is human, so they say.

I panicked the other morning when I realized I had slept through my political science class, the last meeting before the midterm. I had missed a few lectures and needed to copy somebody's notes, and the professor was going to review the format of the exam.

I thought a visit to the professor might be some help in saving me from my plight. I certainly did not expect him to provide me with the class material I had missed, that is my responsibility, but I thought a five minute synopsis of the exam format, to be given at his convenience, was not an unreasonable request. I guess I was wrong.

Tami Borton

I was told by the prof to confer with a fellow classmate, none of whom I know. I was then told, in an unsympathetic tone, that he would not have any time during the two days prior to the exam to help me and that I "would just have to go to the exam."

He could have told me what I wanted to know in the time it took for him to tell me he would not.

Granted, missing lectures does not make for the best of student/prof relations and I think further detriment was added when I honestly explained that I had missed class because I was working until the wee hours of the morning the day before. My activities, however, were legitimate and constructive, and I saw no reason for this prof to be (what I would call) vindictive.

My initial reaction was more panic, then anger. I was always under the impression professors were supposed to be helpful in the name of education, but this man's actions were counter-productive.

I then thought of instances where other professors had missed appointments I had arranged or had failed to get information they had promised me. I remembered the professor who came to 16 of his 45 lectures one semester, and another who disappeared, reported to be "gone on business", just before an exam.

Professors are busy people with two or three classes per semester, research and perhaps an administrative position. Maybe some of these extra activities can explain a lack of concentration on their responsibility to academics, but if they can excuse the profs from their duties, the same should hold true for students.

I should not have missed the lectures, but I, like many students, am very busy.

This is my last semester at UMass and I am so ready to leave I can taste it. Because this is my last chance to take advantage of the opportunities this school offers, I have spread myself a little thin. To add further confusion, my self-induced maximum academic load is the toughest I have experienced.

I am working two jobs I was fortunate in landing and both are as important to my future as my studies.

I am a student genuinely concerned with her studies but, admitting my occasional apathy and disorganization, I found it took me a while longer to get rolling this semester.

I am just like many students.

So why should any professor give me (or anybody) such a hard time about wanting to learn what they want to teach? What makes any given class so special that I should drop my other activities to concentrate on that subject and if I do not, is it my tough luck should I still want to learn?

I cannot think of any objective answers to these questions and would bet my prof could not either. Unfortunately, some professors are too pompous to realize this. Maybe these professors forget what it is like to be a student -- how when we pursue our interests there is a higher potential to neglect studies from time to time.

But this is largely what college is all about, a chance to spread our wings and see how far we can fly.

The avenues to do this at UMass are endless and is what makes our institution unique among other schools, but there is no room for those who oppress our experience by making it impossible to take advantage of what they have to offer and, pursue these other opportunities.

I will probably do okay on my exam, no thanks to the professor, but at the same time I feel robbed of the opportunity to excel.

Just remember, you're not alone!

Zoo Mass: What a nickname. How can anyone possibly feel lonely with 26,000 people to talk to? At a school with a reputation as a zoo? Yes, it does happen. You can still feel alone in a room full of people as well as a room full of air. Music can blast from speakers, beer can blast from kegs, voices can blast from all corners; you still feel lonely. Hanging out in your room, a lounge, a packed lecture hall, there can still be emptiness.

Taara Eden Hoffman

Don't fret. Everybody feels like this at times. It's okay to be by yourself or even feel lonely when you're not alone. Everyone needs to be alone with their thoughts and feelings every now and then, and we should cherish the solitude when it is there and use it to our advantage. Instead of sulking about the void, fill it up! Write a letter, finally, to that great woman you met last summer. Catch up on last week's sociology -- since you're seven chapters behind. Write poems, songs, novels. Start the paper that's due December 20th before December 19th. Keeping occupied takes away some of those "lonely" hours. Spend time wisely and it will pass smoothly.

Filling up lonely space when you're by yourself is a little different from times when you're with other people. When at a huge party it is not uncommon to get "lost in the crowd". Be bold! Strike up a conversation with the guy next to you about the bloody fight you saw at the last party you went to. Find out if there are any parties next weekend. Many friendships are born and developed at gatherings; you have to start and encourage them.

On a campus with the population of a city, who wouldn't feel isolated? The process of conquering this loneliness is a slow one. People need to be with each other in spirit as well as in body, but friendships take time. Make efforts to create them. We all know company is nice, but it's not the same as companionship.

The main thing to remember is that a lot of people perience the same feelings. Don't you notice that when meone is talking about their problems and sadness, it sounds exactly like the way you sometimes feel? Smile at people as you pass and you'll both feel good because you shared something. Loneliness is a common creature, and though it has to be battled sometimes, it is not an enemy. We're in the heart of a large, crowded and colorful zoo. Just remember – you're not alone.

Yeah, yeah, yeah, I know it's still two months from now, actually even longer than that, but the music business is just that, a business. And in some ways we, the buying public, can benefit. I'm talking about the Christmas releases. In only a matter of weeks the market is going to be flooded by new releases. Stevie Wonder, Loinel Ritchie, Paul McCartney, The Stones and Paul Simon are but a few of the very big acts coming out with LP's. In no small way this is an exciting time of the year to listen to the radio. Pretty soon, the lords Flashdance, Police, and Michael Jackson are going to be dethroned, and this will be a relief to not a few of us. On a local level, guitarist Michael Gregory (nee Jackson) has a new LP out on Island records, which might make an ideal Christmas gift; solid local music, though Christmas is still a long way off.

Christmas doesn't seem too distant tonight. This evening is like reaching under the tree to find more presents than you can handle at once. There are three, count them, three big name acts in town tonight, and if you have the time, I cannot tell you which one would be best to see. To begin with, ex-Doll gone soul, David Johanson will be performing at Danny's Place in Holyoke. Johanson's show is designed for the bars, very sweaty with lots of guts, he's a sure bet for an enjoyable night out. Ellen McIllwaine, appearing at the Hangar One, is a little more obscure, but this is due primarily to the sexist posturing of the rock industry, she's one of the meanest guitarists around, as any of her many LP's can attest to. Finally, Roy Buchanan at the Rusty Nail is also a member of the league of amazing unknown guitar players. His work is admired by the great but unfortunately bad promotion by his label has gotten him nowhere. For those who prefer classical music, an excellent concert featuring Misha Dichter and Allan Marks is to be performed this evening at the Fine Arts Center.

Tomorrow night's highlight is the Multiband Pops concert at the Fine Arts Center. Arthur Fiedler it ain't, but the performance is one of the most enjoyable of the semester and the admission is free. This is an excellent opportunity to hear fellow student musicians practice their craft. The other biggie, later on so you can catch em both on the same evening, is Wilson Pickett at the Rusty Nail. Also, for those without wheels, Mitch Chakour is at the Bluewall. Saturday night Max Creek will be at the Rusty Nail, First Rate at the Wok, and the Bobbys at the Hangar.

Word has it that the Nov. 3 Hot Tuna show at the Springfield Civic Center is the only one on the tour with Bobby and the Midnites. Those Tuna and Dead fans who may recall the classic all night 60's jams know this means only one thing: Bob Weir is going to find it very hard not to come out and jam with Jorma. Either way the show will be hot. Another upcoming hot one is Eddy Grant at the Fine Arts Center Oct. 27, and this weedend Oct. 23 singer Odetta will be at the Iron Horse Coffeehouse.

Eddy Grant will cruise down "Electric Avenue" and into the Fine Arts Center on Oct. 27. Tickets are a bargain at $6 and $7. For more information, call 545-2892

The University Percussion Ensemble will participate in the Multiband Pops concert at the Fine Arts Center. The concert will also feature the Marching Band, Wind Ensemble, and Brass Choir.

DeJohnette delights jazz fans

Jack DeJohnette and Special Edition
Sunday, Oct. 23
Bowker Auditorium

It was far from a full house that greeted Jack DeJohnette and his group Special Edition Sunday night. However the enthusiasm of the audience compensated for the lack of bodies. DeJohnette's group consisted of the cream of New York's new jazz performers; Howard Johnson tuba and baritone sax, Marty Ehrlich, alto and soprano sax, bass clarinet, and flute, and John Purcell, clarinet, alto and tenor saxophone. To complete the group, DeJohnette employs Dexter Gordon alumnus, Rufus Reid, on string and fender bass.

DeJohnette highlighted his original material concentrating mostly on a free-based sound with some occasional "conventional" jazz voicing. The first piece, Tin Can Alley, utilized a unison group line in individual free solo approach which allowed the soloists complete freedom stylistically and notewise in their lines. The horn players began quietly and built up with greater intensity until the entire stage was filled with Coltrane like shreiks. DeJohnette's powerful drumming followed the players' every line and the group feeling underlined a level of concentration which was appreciated by all.

Following Tin Can Alley, DeJohnette left his drum kit and moved to a small Casio keyboard. The group began playing some very "out" spontatneous music. This flowed into the highlight of the evening, Ebony. This piece had more conventional chord changes and feeling, reminiscent of a 50's movie soundtrack a la George Gershwin. Here, the arrangement was often as exciting as the solos, all of which tended toward the more melodic of the evening. The set closed with an untitled stride blues which left the crowd on its feet cheering.

DeJohnette began his second set with an unaccompanied piano piece. This transformed itself into an original ballad entitled, Pastel. As the ballad began, the other players returned to the stage. They then performed the weakest piece of the evening, a psuedo-reggae number entitled Inflation Blues. The problem laid most in DeJohnette's decision to sing, something that could easily have been done without. Inflation Blues is melodically an interesting number, but the lyrics, which were mundane and of third grade level intelligence, spouted cliches of the expense of life. The evening ended with a tribute to Duke Ellington, Zoot Suite. This was another free piece in several movements, built off a Take the A Train derived bass line.

DeJohnette's group represents the finer elements of modern jazz music. He combines a conventional harmonic structure with the teachings of Ornette Coleman's free jazz. While the music may still sound "out" to many people, the audience Sunday night was most enthusiastic about the show, a fine example of what virtuosic playing can produce.

The Evil Dead: boy meets ghoul

THE EVIL DEAD
New Line Films, no rating,
Greenfield Cinema, Springfield Showcase Cinema

By GERARD COSLOY
Collegian Staff

Sneak Preview/At the Movies hosts Roger Ebert and Gene Siskel picked the exploitation epic I Spit On Your Grave as 1981's Worst Film, vindicating my long-held belief that the world of film criticism is dominated by sniveling, leftist pansies. Wet, wishy-washy liberals like Ebert and Siskel (both of whom probably drive Swedish cars and hope to marry Mary Tyler Moore, if not each other), are a mostly humourless bunch whom the vitality of today's slice'n'dice movies is usually lost on. Muddled mindfuck like The Big Chill is best left to such pinko trash (Weren't the '60's fab? Isn't my pipe keen? Aren't we OLD AND BORING?).

It's a fair bet that The Evil Dead is a future Dog of the Week, if not the year's most important film. Directed by 21-year-old whiz kid Paul Raimi, The Evil Dead is a mind-altering, stomach-turning, cornocopia of horror. Smart Move no. 1: There's no plot (why waste time?). Five college kids out for a party weekend in the wilderness get MORE than they bargained for (Shelley: "Scotty, why was this cabin so cheap?" Scotty: "Uh, I guess tourism is down"). Y'see, these thar(?) woods aren't populated by chainsaw wielding maniacs, Big Feet (plural) or landsharks; what we're dealing with here is the spirit of SATAN! (hurray!). It seems that some absent-minded professor left behind a flesh-bound voodoo textbook for our friendly college kids to find. (Scotty sez, "I'm not gonna let this mumbo jumbo stuff scare me".) Needless to say, it's only a matter of minutes before Scotty's girl-friend has turned into a GHOUL, ripped off the side of his face, HACKED OFF his hand, etc. As for the film's other "characters", we never learn their names, but that's kind of irrelevant. What does matter is that The Evil Dead pits pal against (Ghoul-ized) pal, graphic scenes of bludgeoning and mutilation being the rule rather than the exception. Camerawork can best be described as "inventive", the blurry, almost always out-of-focus photography only adding to the movie's surreal nature (but not the movie's budget). Print quality gives new meaning to the term "fields of grain".

The Evil Dead's more questionable scenes include a co-ed being violated by tree branches that have been given SATANIC life (certain to raise the ire of reviewers who eat yogurt) and The Explosion of Scotty's Face (certain to raise lunch, period.) If you're looking for any kind of moral message, socially reedeming values or non-sexist chatter, watch Ebert and Siskel (or better yet, move to Cuba). If you can take a joke (and more than a little gore), see The Evil Dead...and quickly, before it leaves town.

TODAY'S PUZZLE ANSWER

Babson darkens Jeff's record

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

As the darkness and rain descended upon Amherst College and the Amherst College men's soccer team on Tuesday afternoon, so their participation in the Division III Top 20 as seventh ranked Babson College edged Amherst, then ranked 19th in the nation, 1-0 in overtime, at Amherst.

It was the second consecutive loss for the Lord Jeffs, who also lost to Brandeis 3-1 on Saturday in OT. The Jeffs had been tied for third in New England with Brandeis before the loss. Now they are ranked ninth, and they dropped out of the Top 20.

Against the Beavers, Amherst played well but couldn't convert due to some super saves by the Babson goalie.

The Beavers dominated the second half after looking sloppy in the first half but Mark Chunglo was playing well in the nets for the Jeffs. He replaced starting goalie John Lawless, who was injured against Brandeis.

The Jeffs did respond with an offensive flurry towards the end of regulation led by forwards Rob Ostberg, Doug Lyons, and David Skaggs. But it was to no avail and the teams went into overtime in a scoreless deadlock.

However, due to the late starting time of 4 p.m., it was now getting dark and it began to rain.

And Babson took advantage of it. Forward Bob Galusza fired a shot from 20 yards out which eluded Chunglo with 2:56 gone in the first overtime for the game winner. After a throw-in from the sideline, Dan Caldicott passed it over to Galusza, a junior from Canton, Ct., who slipped as he shot. Chunglo must have been screened because he had stopped tougher shots earlier.

"I thought our team played well," said Amherst coach Peter Gooding. "We're just not getting the ball in the net. I felt our goalie (Chunglo) did a nice job in his first start."

"I thought it was an excellent game," said Beaver coach Bill Rodgers, whose team had never beaten Amherst in two previous attempts. "Amherst put pressure on us and we came back to put pressure on them."

The coach did say that his team is in the running for one of the four at-large berths into the NCAA Division III tourney from New England. Berths that Amherst now 2-2-3 seems to be out of the running for.

Chungo had 13 saves and the Beavers outshot Amherst 22-17.

UMass water polo wins tourney championship

Special to the Collegian

While the University of Massachusetts athletic teams were making their marks outdoors last Saturday, another winning tradition continued indoors at the Boyden pool as the UMass water polo team successfully defended its title at the fourth Annual UMass Fall Water Polo Championships.

A clean sweep through the title match has brought the "Big Red Wave" to a credible 13-3-1 record and an uncontested hold on New England's third place ranking.

The Minutemen had returned home from a successful showing in their first league tournament on Columbus Day Weekend at Harvard, only to find that the Division II coaches had banded together and voted Williams College as the third ranked team in New England.

"Williams is a perennial Div. II power with excellent swimmers and shooters, however, the final result really speaks for itself," said assistant coach Nick Reggio. That final result was an 8-5 victory for the Minutemen. "We sprung the latest N.E. rankings on them (the team) at last Friday's practice. Needless to say, they had no trouble getting up for Saturday's games," said head coach Russ Yarworth.

With lopsided 9-3 and 18-0 victories over Amherst and URI "B" respectively, the "Big Red Wave" was ready to defend their ground against Williams College. The first half was a closely contested one with the Minutemen clinging to a hard fought 5-4 lead.

"We really let Williams get into their offense.The guys were just giving them (Williams) too much room to operate," said Yarworth.

And so, in desparate need of the victory, the Minutemen showed the character and class that has been the trademark of this team so far this season and shut down the versatile Williams offense, outscoring the Ephmen 3-1 in the second half, enabling UMass to walk away with a well savoured win and the tournament title.

"They really asserted themselves in the second half. It was a well deserved victory," said Yarworth.

The UMass Killer "B" team also saw action in the tournament this past weekend and continued to show the improvement.

"They played some very good teams and showed me that they have the ability to become a force in future seasons. They did a lot of things really well, but they just could not seem to finish off a number of different scoring opportunities," said Reggio.

"They exhibited an awful lot of poise considering they are all freshmen with little to no previous polo experience," said Yarworth.

The Minutemen will once again have their work cut out for them as they travel to the Smith Swim Center, on the campus of Brown University, to compete in their second Div. I league tournament this Saturday and Sunday, Oct. 22 & 23.

picked up an easy win for the Minutewomen with a 6-0, 6-1 victory. At number six singles, Karen Orlowski proved herself by winning in handy fashion 6-1, 6-3.

However, in other singles play things turned sour. Diane Biagiola lost 6-4, 6-7, 0-6; Pat Sullivan went down quietly 3-6, 2-6; and Anne Marie MacTesch lost 2-6, 4-6.

The third point for UMass was put on the score sheets by the number three doubles tandem of Lisa Corbett and Joyce Girasella. They won 3-6, 6-4, 6-2.

Although the team has not had an outstanding season, there are several talented players. Stewart cites that it's "difficult for the team to get up for matches when they are so close together. Most sports teams rest several days to a week."

Sluggish UM field hockey slugs Harvard 2-0

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

Adjustment: to settle or arrange; to free from differences or discrepencies.

"We played a flat, sluggish game," University of Massachusetts field hockey coach said after yesterday's 2-0 win against 20th ranked Harvard.

"It was partially a matter of adjustment, but the field was slow, too," Hixon said.

The fourth ranked Minutewomen tallied a goal in each half. At 10:58 in the first half, the Minutewomen were able to score on an offensive corner.

This was a set play, with Kobel passing to Donnelly, and Donnelly taking the initial shot. This time, Donnelly's shot (a solid drive) went past a Harvard defender and the Harvard goalie.

For the rest of the first half, and the beginning of the second half, play was sluggish. The passing game of UMass was not in full gear, and Harvard was able to penetrate the UMass defense enough to force goalie Patti Shea to come out of the cage several times. Shea had three saves for the afternoon.

The second UMass tally came at 27:27 in the second half. This was a one-two-three play. Forward Pam Moryl took the ball into the right corner, passed off to forward Maura Coughlin, who passed to forward Chris Kocot.

Kocot found the back of the net with a knee-high flick.

Despite the adjustment factor (UMass played Temple and Old Dominion on artificial turf last weekend) and the slow field, Hixon said, "We are still playing well enough to win."

There were a number of questionable or inconsistent calls during the match.

"We must continue to play no matter what the call," Hixon said. "Calls don't make or break a game."

Saturday, the Minutewomen travel to Durham, New Hampshire for a Top 10 match up against UNH. The Lady Wildcats are ranked sixth in the country.

Minutewomen explode to topple Dartmouth 4-0

Flionis nets hat trick, Bird gets assists, Harackiewicz scores first

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

DURHAM, N.H. — The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team was led by some experienced talent and some young talent as it traveled to Dartmouth and controlled the game to come home with a 4-0 victory, to push their record to 7-1-3.

Halfback co-captain Stacey Flionis scored three goals in the contest and Jeanne Paul made outstanding first period saves in defending the Minutewomen's goal.

"Stacey played her best game today," coach Kalekeni Banda said. "She was the MVP on offense. Stacey was very good up front and Jeanne Paul was very good in back. She (Paul) was forced to make several dangerous plays that Dartmouth could have scored on. She was the MVP on defense."

UMass, ranked fourth nationally, was off to a shakey start defensively in the first half but, thanks to Paul, Dartmouth could not capitalize. Unranked Dartmouth missed a few potential scoring opportunities but the five shots the team did have were right on target and Paul was there to stop them. UMass rifled 29 shots at Dartmouth.

Flionis scored the only goal in the first half for the Minutewomen. Ellen Taggart crossed to Flionis who raced past three Dartmouth defenders and went in on the goaltender one on one. She got the shot through at 18:54.

Forward Debbie Harackiewicz played her third game with a face mask and had three shots on net, one of which went in for the Minutewomen's second score. Harackiewicz sent the ball, her first goal of the year, over the head of the Dartmouth goaltender 14 minutes into the second half. She was assisted by Susan Bird.

"She's more comfortable with the mask now," Banda said of the sophomore. "She's making better crosses and taking more shots. It's the best I've seen her play since coming back."

Flionis struck again with her second goal of the hattrick at 16:54. Bird, who is still feeling weak from illness made some good passes and recorded another assist on the score.

Flionis kicked in the last goal of the match with 6:23 left on the clock. Chris Taggart assisted on the play. Banda commended Taggart for her play and said, "Chris is a clever player who's continuing to improve. She combines skills and intelligence."

The Minutewomen are ranked second in New England behind UConn and will take their 7-1-3 record to New York this weekend for two matches. On Saturday UMass will take on unranked Adelphi and on Sunday the team will tackle unranked George Washington University also at Adelphi.

20th ranked UConn pounds punchless UMass 5-0

By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Staff

STORRS, CONN. — For the fourth game in a row the University of Massachusetts mens soccer team was shut out, as the 20th ranked University of Connecticut defeated the hapless Minutemen by the score of 5-0, yesterday.

The Minutemen got their "bell rung" so to speak with UConn controlling the game throughout. The 900 Huskie loyals in attendance witnessed a soccer clinic by their team with the UMass squad as students.

Before yesterday's contest UMass assistant coach Rick Bryant said that the players that the Minutemen would have to stop offensively to win were UConn's Matt Addington, Jim D'Orsaneo and Eric Myren. They didn't do it.

Addington had one goal and two assists, D'Orsaneo had two goals and Myren scored once for the Huskies. One of these three was directly involved in every UConn goal. The final statistics make Bryant look like a scouting whiz.

UConn (9-5-1) held a halftime lead of 4-0. With such a large lead by intermission UConn mentor Joe Morrone was a liberty to use the majority of his players.

UMass (1-8-4) managed only seven shots on UConn goaltender Tony Pierce. The Huskies countered with an onslaught of 17 shots on UMass junior goaltender Don Donahue.

UMass freshman back Peter Geddes managed to get two shots on goal that kept Pierce from falling asleep. These two blasts by Geddes were the only legitimate shots on goal for UMass.

Minuteman coach Jeff Gettler and his assistants were deeply distraught after the loss and were unavailable for comment.

The Minutemen's next game is against Holy Cross this Sturday at 11:00 a.m. on Boyden field. Everyone say a little prayer for the Minutemen.

Harvard beats netwomen 6-3

WORCESTER — It was not the best of days for the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team. After an inspiring performance in the MAIAW tournament (where they tied with Smith College for first place) the netwomen went cold against Holy Cross on Tuesday. In a match that a dissappointed coach Pat Stewart dubbed "winnable", they wound up on the short end of a 6-3 outcome.

Number one singles Elizabeth Sullivan went down by a 6-7, 5-7 margin to the same player she had defeated in the MAIAW. "It was a good match," Stewart said, "but one that she could have won."

Raising age opposed by letter drive

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Correspondent

In what Student Government Association co-president Tom Ahern termed, "an amazing response," about 450 University of Massachusetts students have sent letters to their local state Senators this week voicing their opposition to a bill that would raise the drinking age to 21.

The letter drive, sponsored by the Public Policy Committee of the SGA, was sparked by last week's passing of the bill by the State House of Representatives. The Senate is scheduled to vote on the measure this Wednesday.

The drive was aided by a rally in front of the Student Union early Thursday afternoon where Ahern and Policy Committee member Fran Pheeny urged students to make use of the form letters and the phone bank available to call senators at their offices.

"The reason we're out here is to inform students about the intention of the Legislature regarding our civil rights," Ahern said in an interview after the rally. "If we let them do this (raise the drinking age) then tuition hikes will be forthcoming," he said, in reference to Chancellor Joseph Duffey's plan to increase tuition by $50 next semester.

The rally was attended by only 30 to 40 students but Ahern said he hadn't expected a large turnout.

"We didn't figure on getting a lot of people out there," he said. "A lot of students know what is happening, it's just a matter of getting them to act on it."

Ahern and Pheeny took turns at the microphone telling students at the rally that they, "have to watch the Statehouse all of the time, not just on this issue."

"They (the Representatives) will have to listen to us if we make our point known on the drinking age issue now," Ahern said to the crowd. "A lot of students don't vote so they forget about us," noted Pheeny, "But we can make our voices heard."

As evidenced by the lines at the table to send letters, students were anxious to get involved.

"I'm concerned with what could happen and I want to let them (the Senators) know how I feel," said 19 year old sophomore Shaun Walsh, who described himself as an "avid drinker."

Pheeney also revealed plans for a Statehouse rally to be held in Boston this Monday at noon with students from other state schools including Fitchburg and Southeastern Massachusetts University.

"We found out about the rally too late to get a bus to go up, but we're encouraging students to attend," said Pheeny.

"The Legislature thinks that students don't care and aren't bothered with what they do. Maybe this outpouring of concern will wake them up," Ahern said.

SGA elections may be held within a month

By BOB BURGESS
Collegian Correspondent

General elections for new Student Government Association presidents will be held within a month pending the Undergraduate Student Senate's approval of SGA co-president Charlene Allen's resignation, which she announced Wednesday night.

Allen, citing a University Residence Board's denial to grant her in-state eligiblity for financial aid as the reason for her resignation said she cannot afford to return to school next semester. "To put it simply," she said, "I have to get a job that pays 40 hours a week." Allen said she has lived in the state for fifteen years, but since she graduated from a New York high school, she has been denied residency for the past three years. She also said she felt it better to resign at this point, rather than put it off for later.

Allen's resignation, if approved by the Student Senate, will create a need for new elections at an important time in the presidential term. Tom Ahern, co-president with Allen, said the Senate will be "internally affected by the resignation," since it comes at the midterm point. "Right now," Ahern said, "there's a certain amount of shock and disbelief." As the SGA attempts to fight, among other things, a proposed tuition increase, Ahern stressed the need for the Senate to "maintain our direction."

Allen said her resignation will not go into effect until November, when nomination papers for the new elections are due.

Chris Sullivan, Senate Speaker, said "In my opinion, the resignation is not official until approved by the Senate next week." Sullivan also said the election format will not be discussed until the resignation is approved and the Senate co-ordinating committee sets up election guidelines.

SGA Treasurer Eric Nitzsche said at least one month is necessary for the "entire election process to run its course." Candidates will have two weeks after the resignation to collect signatures for nominations, and then two weeks after that to run a campaign.

Nietzsche said he expects "a very exciting race."

Ahern said he will be a candidate, running with Lauren Bertsch, chair of the Academic Affairs committee.

"Charlene's resignation is going to affect me for a long time, but I cannot let it affect the job I was elected to do." Ahern said "I plan to continue the role I've played for the last six months."

BOG may admit minors into Blue Wall

By RALPH ROBERTS
Collegian Correspondent

The Blue Wall bar of the University of Massachusetts may gradually allow 18 and 19 year-old students in the club, according to the Board of Governors Chairman Mike Reilly.

By getting the younger students into the club, "we think it would show them that somebody is on their side," Reilly said.

A system will be formed to prohibit 18 and 19 year-old's from purchasing alcohol, according to Reilly, although no arrangements have been worked out as yet.

As a result of the proposal to raise the drinking age to 21, and the potential income problems of the Blue Wall, "this will bring us a tentative solution in bringing in the younger students," Reilly said.

"We must bring in a program that will allow the younger students into the Blue Wall. Otherwise, the club will soon be open to about one-fourth of the UMass undergraduate population." Reilly said.

"We also want to create an atmosphere that the entire school can be a part of. It would be nice to see more undergraduate students in here, instead of the place being filled by professors and graduate students," Reilly said.

Reilly said a wrist-band system may be used. Students who are of legal drinking age will receive a wrist-band upon entry. This system is used in many Connecticut nightclubs and also in Celebration's in Boston.

The wrist band can only be used once, as it has to be broken to be taken off. A broken wrist band is therefore invalid.

Other Campus Center authorities have expressed partiality to a sectioned-off area for the 18 and 19 year-old's.

Robert Montalto, a student supervisor in the Blue Wall said, "We're bending over backwards just to let the students into a sectioned-off area."

"We don't want to deprive any student an opportunity to see a first class band, but at the same time, we have to protect ourselves and the students."

"This can be a difficult thing for us to do, so we must be careful in our actions," Montalto said.

According to Reilly, if the Blue Wall wishes to compete with the other local clubs like the Hangar One and the Rusty Nail (which both have wrist-band systems on certain nights), it will have to "get the younger students in."

Defensive tackle Ken Johnson (71) is about to bring Maine running back Paul Phelan (39) to the ground in last week's game. Saturday, the UMass gridders meet BU at home.

ANTI-KING DELIVERY — Members of the Conservative Caucus arrive at the Old Executive Office Building in Washington, D.C. urging veto of King holiday.

Conservatives oppose holiday

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Conservative Caucus delivered 43,700 signatures to the White House on Thursday in a last-ditch effort to persuade President Reagan to veto legislation creating a national holiday in honor of Martin Luther King Jr.

The petitions used King's own words — that people should be judged by "the content of their character, not the color of their skin" — in urging Reagan to return to his original opposition to the measure.

The bill, however, passed the House and Senate by such lopsided margins that Reagan would risk the futile and politically awkward exercise of seeing a veto overridden by Congress and the measure enacted anyway.

At his news conference Wednesday night, a few hours after the Senate voted 78-22 to establish a King holiday, the president reluctantly promised to sign the bill "since they seem bent on making it a national holiday."

Reagan did not make clear who he meant by "they," but said he would have preferred some observance of the slain civil rights leader's birthday short of establishing a 10th national holiday.

The bill declares the third Monday in January, starting in 1986, as a holiday in King's memory. King was born Jan. 15, 1929.

GM X-car body recall sought

WASHINGTON (AP) — General Motors Corp. test drivers and internal company documents repeatedly warned of brake locking problems on 1980 X-body automobiles before the cars went into general production, according to GM files made public Thursday.

The documents, released in a suit against GM, showed the automaker went ahead with production of the front-wheeldrive car in early 1979 without correcting the problems.

The documents were ordered unsealed by U.S. District Judge Thomas Jackson, who is hearing a suit brought by the Justice Department, seeking a recall of 1.1 million X-body cars.

The department also wants GM to be ordered to pay $4 million in damages for allegedly failing to act on the problem and later withholding information from federal officials.

GM has denied the allegations, saying the company did not know about the X-body brake problem before production. GM has said it will vigorously defend itself against the suit.

Among the documents released were test-driver logs from 1978 that show drivers in at least 35 cases complained of brakes locking and causing control problems.

Another from 1978 reported that the left rear brake "locks up without too much pressure being applied" in his X-body car.

House cuts off CIA contra aid

WASHINGTON (AP) — A bitterly divided House on Thursday voted for the second time in three months to cut off CIA support for Nicaraguan counter-revolutionaries. The 227-194 vote, largely along party lines, was nearly identical to the earlier tally.

Like the first cut-off proposal, the new one is seen as unlikely to win approval in the Republican-controlled Senate.

There were 209 Democrats and 18 Republicans voting for the cut-off proposal.

The House vote came after a heated debate in which each side accused the other of risking deeper U.S. involvement in Central America's wars.

"Military victory is the administration's bottom line," charged Rep. Edward P. Boland, D-Mass., chairman of the House Intelligence Committee, about the expanding CIA backing for Nicaraguan "contras" — or counter-revolutionaries.

Boland, sponsor of the cut-off amendment, said the Reagan administration must stop "waging war in Nicaragua. And make no mistake about it, this is exactly what the United States is doing."

But Republicans said the covert action had succeeded in pressuring the Nicaraguan Sandinista government to curtail its support for leftist guerrillas in El Salvador and to accept new peace proposals from the so-called Contadora nations — Mexico, Colombia, Venezuela and Panama.

Further, declared Rep. G. William Whitehurst, R-Va., an intelligence committee member, if the covert action is stopped, "before this decade is out, you will see American blood spilled in ways no one can imagine." He suggested that if the covert action was stopped it could lead to direct U.S. military intervention.

The amendment to the 1984 intelligence authorization bill would eliminate the covert aid and replace it with $50 million in open assistance to help pro U.S. nations in the region stop leftist gun-running.

Army jobs reopened for women

WASHINGTON - Prodded by women's groups, the Army on Thursday reopened 13 of 23 military specialties it had closed to female enlistees on ground they risked involvement in direct combat.

Lt. Gen. Robert Elton, the Army's personnel chief, acknowledged at a news conference that the action was "driven by a number of concerned groups," including an advisory panel which had protested the job closures to Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger.

That panel, the Defense Advisory Committee on Women in the Services, issued a statement saying that "we applaud the substantial changes that have been made."

The categories reopened to women include such jobs as repairing missile radar and fire control systems, operating heavy construction equipment, and decontamination specialists in nuclear, biological and chemical warfare.

Elton stressed that the Army was sticking to its policy, established by the Defense Department, that women will continue to be barred from serving in combat units such as infantry, artillery and armor.

"We did not look at opening up combat military occupational specialties," Elton said.

"Greenhouse effect" less urgent

WASHINGTON (AP) — Atmospheric buildup of carbon dioxide could cause serious climate changes in the next century, but there is no basis for panic or a precipitous shift in energy policy, the National Academy of Sciences said Thursday.

The 500-page report, the most comprehensive to date on the so-called "greenhouse effect" problem, took a less pessimistic view than another released earlier in the week by the Environmental Protection Agency.

The EPA's estimates of rising oceans and warmer climates generally jibed with those of the academy, but the agency warned the consequences could be "catastrophic" unless the world begins planning for the shifts "with a sense of urgency."

The academy's National Research Council agreed that increased temperatures, shifting climate patterns and rising seas would have great ramifications worldwide. But it contended none of the problems are insurmountable and there is plenty of time to adjust.

MDC predicts water shortage

HADLEY — The Metropolitan District Commission has adopted a 40-year $100 million water conservation plan, but MDC officials predict there still may not be enough water to supply Bostonians in the year 2020.

In a recent report, the MDC said conservation would fall short of providing its projected need of an additional 130 million gallons of water daily by the year 2020.

The agency estimates it would save 30 million gallons of water daily over 40 years plugging leaks and taking other steps — among the further study of a controversial plan to divert the Connecticut River.

However, the Water Supply Citizens Advisory Council pegs the savings at 40 million gallons daily, and council Director Robey Hubley says he believes the MDC inflates its projected needs by using questionable predictions on population growth.

Future unsure for fraternities

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

Amherst College acting President G. Armour Craig Thursday announced the college's Board of Trustees have appointed an ad-hoc committee to examine if and how fraternities may continue at the school.

In a general college meeting called to discuss the trustees decision, Craig, who will be replaced by president-elect Peter R. Pouncey in June, said this is the latest in a series of examinations of the college's 244-member fraternity system.

The issue was rekindled by Craig when he recirculated a white paper written on the issue in February by his predecessor, the late Julian Gibbs. Gibbs' report followed the disciplining of several fraternities, including the abolishment of Delta Upsilon Delta in 1982.

Lisa Ilke, a junior fine arts major from Manhasset, N.Y., and one of 74 women living in the college's coed fraternity system, called living in the Chi Psi house "a great experience" which will "definitely be what I remember when I look back at my college experience."

Ilke is a member of the Student Assembly's committee on housing, which originally planned to prepare a report for Pouncy's arrival next year, but will now ready the report for trustee consideration in December. The trustee committee charged with evaluating and recommending a course of action regarding "student residence and social life" is scheduled to report to the full board in January.

Craig, who said he hopes to have the situation resolved before he leaves office, said the timetable is also to allow for the cancellation of February fraternity rush if the system is abolished.

Michael Siegel, a senior American studies major from New York City, is president of the Student Assembly and ex-officio member of the College Council, a student and faculty comittee which presented the trustees with comments on the original white paper.

"I think that the college is trying to determine at least philosophically what the place of the fraternities is," said Siegel, who looked at the long list of calls for abolishment throughout the years as a positive sign. "In each of the cases that fraternities were going to be abolished, they weren't."

Housing under control

By MARY ANNE BEEN
Collegian Staff

Four Crampton residents requested a housing change last week because of the inconvenience and anxiety caused by the dorm's seven recent fires but, according to Gerald A. Quarles the Housing Assignment Coordinator, all four have changed their minds.

"These women were concerned for their personal safety. Their parents were concerned, and rightly so. We had told them that we could accomodate them in swing spaces while allowing them to retain their present housing assignments in Crampton until this situation is under control," Quarles said.

One resident of Crampton requested a housing change Tuesday, and when asked her reason, said she wanted to move because of personal preference and not as a result of the seven recent fires.

Separately, some 13 male students who still have not received housing since the beginning of the semester and have been living in the Campus Center Hotel should now be housed in a dormitory within a week, Quarles said.

"We want them to know that we are working on it," he said. "We're looking out for them and hope to solve the housing problem in an orderly fashion."

Students living in "swing spaces" — lounges converted to dorm rooms — and hotel rooms are those who had failed to pay their bill on time. Housing Services expects to have those students living in swing spaces out in a few weeks.

Two campuses vow to fight tuition hike

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Student government leaders from the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and Boston met at UMass-Boston yesterday to coordinate strategy to fight proposed tuition increases during the next year.

Students at the meeting planned a rally to protest Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey's proposed $50 tuition increase for next semester at UMass-Amherst. The rally will take place next Thursday in front of the Student Union Building, and students from the Boston campus pledged to bring at least one busload of people to Amherst to protest with Amherst students.

The meeting was "one of the first collaborative enterprises we will take," said UMass-Boston student trustee Paul Reeves. "We've got to show people that we are unified against this."

Student Government Association co-President Charlene Allen and Public Policy Committee members Paul Gosselin and Jay Flynn met with Reeves and UMass-Boston Student Assembly chair Robert Hall and Tony Perkins, chair of the community action committee at UMass-Boston.

Reeves called for the meeting two days ago after receiving a letter which was sent out from Duffey's office to all members of the UMass Board of Trustees. The Trustees had strong criticism of Duffey's plan when he presented it to them Oct. 5, and Reeves said he thinks Duffey is trying to create the impression that UMass students don't care about an increase.

"That's the first basic assumption we're going to have to undo," Reeves said.

The rally, featuring speakers from the Amherst and Boston campuses, will be the first step in fighting the tuition increase, and will be followed by "a detailed position paper for the Trustees," Gosselin said.

The $50 increase is only part of the problem, Gosselin said. Since it is part of a program offered by the legislature which allows state colleges and universities to raise tuition and keep the funds on campus for specific programs, the initial increase could be just the beginning of a "self-sufficiency" program in which "tuition increases will be a bigger part of the University budget," he said.

"If we can get the Trustees to stop talking about the short-term and make them consider the long-term problems with the legislature, we can stop (the tuition increase)," Gosselin said.

UMass-Boston Chancellor Robert Corrigan has opposed any tuition increase, but students from the Boston campus said any increase here will make it harder for them to fight increases proposed by the Board of Regents of Higher Education.

"Basically, the Regents are going to legalize yearly tuition increases," Gosselin said. "They will make tuition a percentage of the budget, so whenever the legislature increases the budget we get a tuition increase."

"We should work together on this," Reeves said. "No more of this Amherst-Boston split."

SAC 83
STUDENT AFFAIRS CONVOCATION

While those who attended the Student Affairs Convocation yesterday in the Campus Center Auditorium were enjoying a wine and cheese buffet, Trey Williams, special assistant to the Vice Chancellor of Student affairs and chairperson of the convocation planning committee was busy making arrangements for future performances of the UMass Musical Theater Guild.

"We looked at the words 'student affairs' and saw what was missing...the students," Williams said.

"I get the most enjoyment out of student involvement," he said. "I like seeing students involved out of the classroom."

The Guild provided the afternoon's entertainment by performing numbers from past productions. And students, it proved, were not the only ones honored.

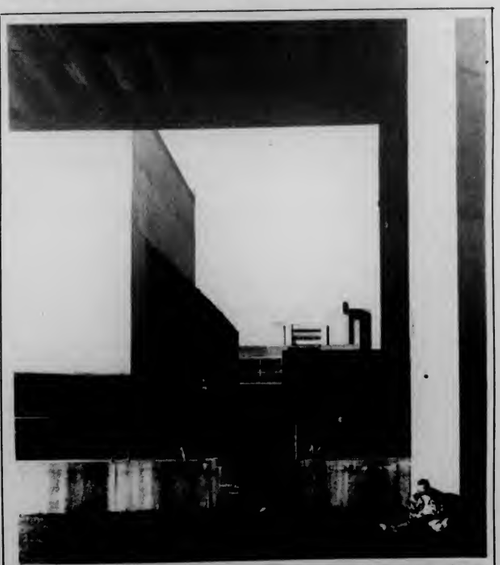
Three hundred people attended the convocation, an annual event which Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Mason called "a coming together for all of student affairs."

In his opening remarks, Madson noted the special recognition ceremonies that have been going on all week within the various departments in student affairs.

Five special awards were given by the distinguished service award committee for "sustained high achievement" said Sarah Cleveland, CASIAC '85, who made the award presentations in place of committee chairperson Penny Worman, who is in the Arctic watching polar bear migration.

"She couldn't put it off," Cleveland said.

Recipients of the award were: Dr. Daniel Clapp of Health Services, Lou Anne Harrison, an undergraduate student who works for veterans assistance and counseling services, Bobbi Harro, a graduate student with the new students program, Peter Murphy, an electrician with housing services, and Sandra Watkins of the records office.



"Usually I'm never speechless," Watkins said, "but this time my hands were even cold."

Although she knew beforehand she would be receiving the award at the convocation, Watkins said, "I was overwhelmed. This really means something because it was my peers who voted for me."

There were 75 nominations for the awards, which were narrowed to 40 nominees. The winners received a letter of commendation, a framed certificate, lunch with Vice Chancellor Madson and Chancellor Duffey, as well as $1000 cash.

Besides providing entertainment, students were also responsible for the student affairs logo, designed by Scott Frank of SGA Communications, and the centerpiece floral arrangements, which were given away as door prizes, and were designed by a student group.

Student Government president, Tom Ahern, who was among some of the students invited to attend the convocation said, "The Vice Chancellor at the Student Affairs level has made an attempt to make contact with the SGA. I think they have a positive goal of working with the students."

Activism, social change topics of one-day conference

By TOM KELLY

"The Sixties Speak to the Eighties" is the subject of a one-day conference on activism and social change, to be held Saturday at the University of Massachusetts.

The focus of the conference, organized by the Afro-American Studies Department, the Social Thought and Political Economy Program, and the Women's Studies Program, is the connection of the social movements of the sixties and the activism of the present.

Sponsors of the event want to stress primarily the importance of the civil rights movement and the central role of black people then. They said much can be learned for the present by looking at the past.

Speakers include: James Farmer, founder and former national director of Congress on Racial Equality (CORE), Jim Forman, chairperson of the Unemployed and Poverty Action Council and Thelma Griffith-Johnson, founding member, Harlem Parents' Committee, and currently director of the Affirmative Action office at UMass.

Topics of discussion include: The Roots of the Sixties, Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) and the Resurgence of Activism, and Civil Rights and Beyond. Conference organizers expect attendance from Five College faculty and students, high school students and working people and activists from the Northeast.

The conference will also feature a concert at 8 p.m. by the SNCC Freedom Singers, the musical voice of the civil rights movement. These activist song leaders travelled the country, using their music to draw attention to the issues of the day.

The conference will be held in Mahar Auditorium at 9:30 a.m. It is free and open to the public.

Woman firefighter finds job demanding and worthwhile

By ELIZABETH LUCIANO
Collegian Staff

Last March, former Amherst fire chief Jerry Sanford mentioned to a fellow firefighter that he'd like to see more women on the force. That was the same day Amherst resident Debra Pierce read a newspaper article about firefighting and decided to put in an application.

"It was so interesting, so I went down to North Station 24 hours after the chief said he wanted more women, I walked in. I believe in fate, so I think that was it," Pierce said.

A short time after applying for the job, Pierce was made a member of the call force, different from the permanent force in that the members are volunteers who are paid on an hourly basis and called in only when the permanent force is unavailable.

Pierce's assimilation into the Amherst Fire Department was not completely smooth.

"At first, a lot of the male firefighters were saying, 'You're not the first (woman)'. They were wondering if they'd have to cut down on their cursing, and their dirty jokes. I demand respect, but I tell jokes too, I swear, and I like to have a good time," Pierce said.

Pierce said her peers' initial skepticism has given way to comaraderie.

"Everybody's really great here. You do your work and then they're more accepting about having women come in," she said.

"I get lots of reinforcement from everybody. Let me prove my own self. I can't do everything, but neither can the guys. We all have our own strengths and weaknesses," she said.

While Pierce said being a firefighter is exciting, it is also difficult, especially the training.

Call force members meet every Tuesday night to improve their skills and learn new firefighting techniques.

"Right now we're working on extrication, and it's really exciting. We also work on what to do if there's a dorm fire," she said.

The local training is in addition to the several weekends each year the force spends at a training ground in New Hampshire. A cement structure, called a blockhouse, is actually set on fire so that the firefighters can get hands-on experience.

"It's really good because you see how you'd really react," she said.

Despite the many interruptions and impositions on her time, Pierce has found firefighting an extremely satisfying vocation.

"The main reason I did this was for a sense of community. I have lived in Amherst for nine years and have never really felt like a part of it, and now I do. It's thrilling. There's teamwork; you have to work together, and I like that feeling. I feel like I'm needed and an important part of something," she said.

Registry fills job vacancies

By BOBBI GUILLERM
Collegian Correspondent

Because of a lack of women, minority and handicapped professionals applying for faculty and administrative positions at the University of Massachusetts, the Affirmative Action Office has established a Staff Registry to fill job vacancies.

"People send resumes to us and let us know what kind of job they want and we notify them when one becomes available," said Shara Denson, coordinator of the Staff Registry.

Federal law mandates that recipients of federal funds must exhibit a good-faith effort in attempting to find qualified women, minority professionals, handicapped persons, and Vietnam era veterans to fill job positions.

Agents of the federal government come to UMass periodically to check Affirmative action records to ensure compliance with the law, and if UMass was found non-compliant federal funds might be taken away, according to Thelma Griffith-Johnson, Director of Affirmative Action.

She said colleges and universities are in a "seller's market and buyer's market" for quality employees. "We have to compete for the best in the field who happen to be women, minorities, handicapped and Vietnam veterans. We have to make UMass desirable enough for them to come."

The Affirmative Action Office advertises for the Staff Registry four times a year in major journals and media directed to women and minorities. The Registry is actually a pool of resumes of possible job candidates. If a department needs a professional minority, the Affirmative Action Office can be of service. Time-consuming and expensive search can be avoided.

"By comparison to what we send four times a year, if we get a good enough response, it saves money," Griffith-Jonson said.

Griffith-Johnson said other colleges and universities in other parts of the country have heard of the UMass Staff Registry and have asked for copies of resumes.

HOUSING EXEMPTION APPLICATIONS

Frosh, sophomores and Stockbridge students who wish to live off-campus for the Spring Semester 1984 should apply for an exemption from the on-campus housing regulation. Housing Exemption Applications are now available in the Housing Assignment Office, Room 235 Whitmore. Applications are due no later than Monday, October 31, 1983. Applications will not be accepted after this date. Please submit all applications to the Housing Assignment Office, 235 Whitmore.

IMPORTANT NOTES: PLEASE READ CAREFULLY

* Signing a lease is not valid grounds for receiving an exemption from the on-campus housing requirement. DO NOT SIGN A LEASE UNLESS YOU HAVE RECEIVED AN EXEMPTION. Any student who signs a lease without prior approval from the Housing Assignment Office is responsible for all on-campus fees and will be required to reside on-campus.
* Students who are granted an exemption from the on-campus housing regulation will lose their housing assignment for the Spring 1984 Semester approximately two weeks after the exemption is granted, unless prior arrangements are made with the Housing Assignment Office. Thank you.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Musical chairs at the very top

James Watt chirped too loudly too many times and he's out.

New Interior Secretary William Clarks singing perhaps annoyed George Shultz, so Bill has been shifted over to the environmental chair.

Bob McFarlane looks like the next National Security Adviser, and Madame Kirkpatrick is in a huff. Poor Jeanie's been passed over on the National Security Advisor NSA choice, so now she says her UN position is tiring her, what with commuting between the D.C. and the Big Apple, and that she intends on wrapping it up and calling it quits.

Rob Skelton

There was talk of some rallying by ultra-rightists on her behalf, but the President seems intent on his McFarlane choice, which has angered some of his conservative constituents (who are these people, anyway?).

All of which leaves James Watt out in the political wilderness, right? Wait. Mr. Watt has announced that he will be working to get "his man" Reagan back into the Oval office. Watt, who for a time was the Republican Party's no. 2 fundraiser (right after the Gipper himself), will now be busy on the campaign trail, mixing and mingling with the "right" people and hoping to help his former boss.

When asked about the new Secretary of the Interior, Jim's song went something like this: "Oh yes, Bill's a helluva fella", and, "couldn't have made a better choice, no sir."

"Shuffle, shuffle, slam," goes the President's Cabinet movements and close to re-election time, too. The heat is on and some issues threaten to boil over. "Covert" aid to Eden Pastora and his co-horts in Nicaragua suddenly seem a serious threat to the Ortega Brothers. The forty-five thousand American troops in Honduras are not just there on an "exercise," rather, it is a Reaganesque move to accustom America and others to global warfare involving American troops.

Mr. Marcos shows signs of instability in the Phillipines, and a crackdown is imminent (accompanied by the tacit approval of Mr. Reagan?).

It could go the other way, with a failure for Marcos and installment of a more left-leaning, people-oriented government — which, of course, would be to the chagrin of our ruling party. The "democracies" of the Phillipines and South Korea, so vital to US interests, will either change very little, (autocracies and oppression of the poor) or very drastically (left-leaning and perhaps Soviet supported).

Conservatives, who are, by nature, already comfortable, have no desire to see change, except for when it is in their interest. Mr. Reagan has never intended straying the course, so he will stay the course so that he can stay the course. Were there ever doubts about his reelection yearnings? C'mon, Ron's got a good thing going.

James Watt, a political hotbed, has been put to better use, but as Evans and Novak state: "To fix a problem at Interior, Reagan has given up more than he knows."

Musical chairs in US affairs alarm certain parties. Oppressed populations in gift-wrapped "democracies" demand attention. 1984's no. 1 big brother will have some tough work to do.

Ronald Reagan's secret diaries

Washington, October 3 — Good morning, fellow Americans, it's 12:30 and I have been hard at work for at least a half an hour. Nancy woke me up with valium and buttermilk because I have another one of those awful press conferences to go to today. It's just not fair! Not only do I have to miss a whole evening of prime time but I just know that one of those wise guy reporters is going to ask about Jimmy Watt tripping that parapelegic down the White House stairs. They just don't understand Jimmy's got a sense of humor too. I hope that they don't ask about that Lebanon thing again. Look, I don't even know where the place is!

Lawrence Madden

Right now I'm in the middle of opening the White House mail. Most of it's boring stuff from foreign dignitaries with long names that are hard to pronounce. But I got a very touching letter from a little girl who said she lived in some place called the South Bronx. Her mother's welfare checks were cut off because of my brilliant economic programs, she said, so now her mother was going to sell her to a pimp. Well, it nearly brought me to tears. I wrote back that it was a wonderful example of all I stood for; free enterprise, putting Americans back to work and cash flow. I wanted to invite her to the White House but Nancy wouldn't let me.

Well my Doctors say I've been working too hard, so I have to take a T.V. break. Besides All My Children is on now and I'm dying to find out if Erica and Palmer find those Nazis. I just want to say being President isn't all fun and games, especially with all those people making fun of me and not to mention meeting all those sweaty dictators in countries where they don't even have T.V. I haven't been to the ranch in over a month and a half and it seems like years. That reminds me, I should mention something to Larry Speakes about taking time out...

Well folks, I'm back again and I must say All My Children was most inspiring. Where else can you find out how Real Americans live and what they really need? I wanted to go on G.H. but Nancy said it wouldn't be a good idea, so she went on Different Strokes instead. Hold on a second please, some senator wants me to sign something about that El Salvador mess.

There now, that's over with. That's another thing about this president business, you always have to sign stuff — you wouldn't believe the writer's camp I get! Time to take another valium and more stuff about that El Salvador place. El Salvador, hmmmm, didn't I read something about that in the Reader's Digest once? Oh yes, I remember the article now, "El Salvador Land of Tropical Beauty." Gee, that sure sounds like a swell place to send some of our troops for a vacation.

It's General Hospital time now, so I've got to run. I can hear Nancy talking about her shopping trip in the T.V. room. I just want everyone to remember "Stay the Course" and keep those tax dollars coming.

Random Notes — on Southwest —

As my family and I drove up the snake-like highway anticipating the new world ahead, we were astounded to see the city that lay before us. Gigantic architectural structures loomed in the distance. As we got closer, we could see that there was not merely one or two towers, but five giants sleeping peacefully at the end of the University. Soon these gentle giants would come alive as the students unpacked and settled into their new lifestyles. Inside, while a dorm room is being constructed, each window developes its own personality. The characteristic Z-rooms will all have their individual styles. There will be parties with new faces, friendly smiles, beer, wild rumors, and disgusting bathrooms. Music will blast and people will dance. The dull brick outside of the tower gives no hint of the excitement bubbling within.

Stacy Wiederlight

People from all over the country travel to Massachusetts to be a part of University life. The towers are the dorms where most of the students are housed. Therefore, new friends are made and new ideas are shared. Parties range from mellow get-togethers to outrageous all-nighters. It is at these social events that preppies and punkers mix, while music blasts from stereos in quadraphonic sound.

Every floor is another adventure into the unknown — there are always people to meet. The men and women on co-ed floors try to live harmoniously with one another, although taking a shower next to a guy that lives down the hall might seem a little absurd in the beginning. Soon strong bonds of friendship form, and people learn a lot about themselves and the thoughts of others.

The towers are a great place to mingle and party, but it also has its disadvantages. One of the bad features you must tolerate when living in Southwest, is learning how to step carefully amongst the debris left over from the night before. Even if the halls aren't littered, it still might be hard to travel to different floors in the tall towers. Trying to get an elevator to stop at the floor you are on is an impossible as trying to flag down a taxi in New York City in the middle of rush hour. Once an elevator has finally stopped at your floor, you must edge in sideways in order to avoid elbows. As the elevator ascends the floors slowly one by one, you learn of the night's itinerary.

If you choose to get some exercise, and believe me, twenty-two floors is a lot of exercise, you may walk up the concrete palace to your destination. Walking down the hall you pass the obscene writing, scuff marks, and vulgar murals that decorate the walls. But, once you have reached the summit, the captivating view compells you to gaze out over the picturesque scenery.

It is from these penthouse apartments that the panoramic view is observed. The beautiful green rolling hills and small college town contrast sharply with the superstructures and buildings of the campus. Gusty night breezes may blow in through an open window as you spy on the ant-like creatures below. The streets look like a maze, and the long highway is a runway for the cars that seem to slowly get swallowed up in the greenery beyond the horizon.

There is an inner beauty to each tower, although materialistically, it may seem quite hard to find. Every residential area has its advantages and disadvantages. Similarly, each tower has its own striking characteristics that make it a unique environment as well as a viable part of community life here at UMass.

Math error ruins argument

To the Editor,

I would like to comment on an editorial written by Katherine Curda for the October 18th issue. It appears Ms. Curda needs some help with her basic math skills; 150 billion dollars divided by 34 million people equals $4,411.76 per person, not $44,117.64 as she reported. This gross error greatly affects her argument, and answers her inquiry of where the funds are going to. They are going into her miscalculation, rather than the pockets of "administrators, statisticians, consultants, economists, sociologists, think tanks, universities, social agencies and miscellaneous boondoggles," as she and her source Thomas Sowell suggest.

Trailers by Andy Gordon

Richard Pryor is often touted as the funniest man in film today and I'm inclined to agree; though I do so completely in spite of his track record. He may be great but he starred in some big-time duds. Lets be honest with ourselves, Some Kind of Hero, Bustin Loose, The Toy and Superman III were very lame. His first concert film was terrific but the follow up was slick and preachy. To me, Pryor is at his best when playing it straight (as in Lady Sings the Blues) or when teamed, complemented really, by Gene Wilder (Silver Streak, Stir Crazy). Pryor will have the opportunity to do both again soon, in serious biographies of Charlie Parker (to be directed by Joel Oliansky) and Malcolm X (Directed by Sidney Lumet) and teamed with Wilder in a comedy tentatively titled Going Nuts (They'll surely change it — it bears too much resemblance to the SCTV gang's upcoming Going Berserk). But Pryor will first try his hand again in a concert format. Columbia's Richard Pryor Here and Now, which he also wrote and directed, will open nationally next week. Filmed only two months ago at Bourbon Street's Saenger Theater in New Orleans, the concert features material Pryor polished at L.A.'s Comedy Store. Pryor also made a serious film with Richard Dreyfus called Aint No Heroes which seems to have disappeared. Filmed close to a year ago, the picture does not currently appear on any of the studios' release schedules.

I like to rag on Robby Benson, but I must admit he's a heck of an actor. Only 27 years old and he's acted in dozens of decent flicks. His roles have been extremely diverse, ranging from the quintessential American youth of the Midwest (Our Town), the East(Tribute) and the South (Ode to Billy Joe), as well as a Chicano (Walk Proud) and a Hassidic Jew (The Chosen). Benson will continue to broaden his range with his role as American Indian Billy Mills in Running Brave, which is set for release next month. Mills was a hero of the 1964 Olympics, edging out world record holder Ron Clarke of Australia to win the 10,000 meter run. The film, which was backed totally by Indian investors, was directed by D.S. Everett, though there is virtually no mention of him included in the press material. It also stars Pat Hingle and Claudia Cron (Jane Chisolm in Diner).

Richard Pryor takes to the stage again. See trivia question for free tix.

Each time I hear word of Francis Ford Coppolla's upcoming Rumble Fish it sounds more interesting. The film was filmed entirely in stunning black and white to correspond with one major characters color blindness. Color has been added to a dream sequence however. The story of two brothers trying to live up to each other's expectations, the picture was shot entirely in the slum areas of Tulsa. The incredible east includes Mickey Rourke, Dennis Hopper, Vincent Spano, Diane Lane, Nicholas Cage and Diana Scarwid. Matt Dillon is in it also. More on this next week.

What did I say. I just received information that Columbia's Pryor/Wilder comedy has changed it's title to Double Whoopee. I knew they'd change it. I said so, remember?

Local Best Bets: A whole slew of excellent films around this weekend. The Pleasant St. Theatre has Felini's classic 8 1/2 and the Academy of Music has held over The Return of Martin Guerre. In Hollywood flicks, Nick Nolte and Gene Hackman's political thriller Under Fire opens today at the Mountain Farms 4, where Never Say Never Again is still showing. Say what you want, but Sean Connery is pouch in his original role as Bond. Mountain Farms has also brought The Lonely Lady back by popular demand (popular demand?). Pia Zadora masturbating with a garden hose; I'm there.

TRAILERS Trivia: No one caught last week's question. Observant viewers might have noticed that the characters in The Big Chill drank Tsingtao beer. This week's question: Lots of competition this week, my dad's up for the weekend and he knows his stuff. Many Hollywood directors are beginning to make music videos. Lionel Richie's "All Night Long" and Billy Idol's "Dancing with Myself" are two such examples. Who made them? The first five correct answers will receive pairs of passes to the new Pryor concert film mentioned above.

Grenadian army kills Prime Minister

By TONY COZIER
Associated Press Writer

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) - Scattered gunfire broke out in Grenada Thursday after the army killed Prime Minister Maurice Bishop and as many as 10 others in a far left coup.

Army commander Judson Austin claimed on the state radio late Wednesday that the army opened fire, killing Bishop and others, after Bishop began arming his supporters and two soldiers were killed.

But a witness said Bishop raised his hands over his head in surrender shortly before the soldiers opened fire, a source said.

The sources, all of whom requested anonymity, reported that Bishop and the others were wounded, but instead of being taken to a hospital were executed at Fort Rupert, the army headquarters.

The army placed the island under curfew and warned that violators would be shot on sight.

In Washington, White House spokesman Larry Speakes said the turmoil on the Caribbean island — where there are some 1,000 Americans, many of them medical students — "has raised our concerns to the highest level."

State Department officials, who spoke on condition they not be identified, said "there are suspicions" but no evidence that Cuba might have played a role in the upheaval.

The gunfire crackled in the early morning, said sources in Grenada's capital of St. George's, but none ventured outdoors because the army led by Gen. Austin threatened to shoot anyone judged to be disturbing the peace.

"Look, man, how do you expect me to tell you anything with the curfew on?" asked a resident contacted by the telephone from neighboring Barbados. "I'm certainly not going out."

The army said in a broadcast that anyone venturing out before 6 p.m. Monday would be "shot on sight."

It also urged Grenada's 110,000 citizens to be "vigilant against imperialistic attempts at counter-revolution."

Austin's role in Bishop's ouster and slaying Wednesday surprised many Grenada-watchers, who had expected Bishop's deputy, Bernard Coard, to emerge as the new leader. He has not been heard from for nearly a week.

Austin was an original member of the New Jewel Movement founded in 1973 by Bishop, and is credited with leading the charge on police barracks in 1979 that brought Bishop to power in a coup that overthrew Sir Eric Gairy.

UMass battles BU for YC survival

UM counts on mysterious offensive starters, strong defense to stop BU

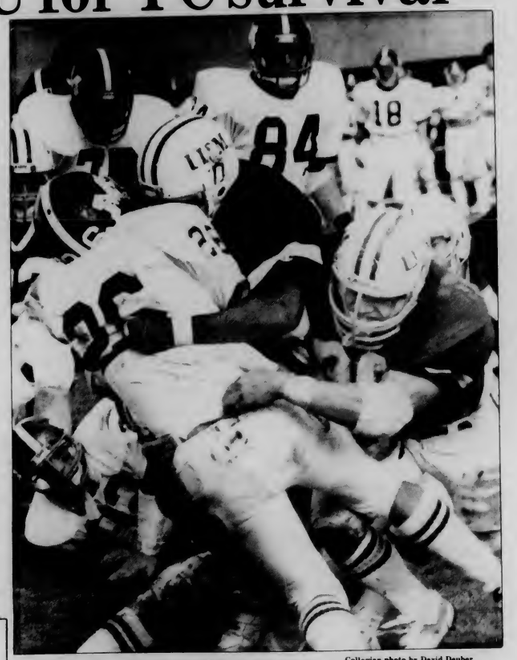
By RUSS WHINNEM
Collegian Staff

The battle itself will mean a lot. But then again they all do from here on in. When the University of Massachusetts Minutemen take to Alumni Stadium tomorrow to tangle with Boston University, each one knows the significance of this, and every other game in regards to their post season plans.

Massachusetts, 1-1 in the Yankee Conference and 2-4 overall, cannot afford another league loss. The Terriers, which stand at 3-0 in the Conference and 4-2 overall, can all but make their own playoff plans.

The Minutemen have also added a touch of mystery to the game. Coach Bob Pickett still hasn't revealed who will get the starting call at either quarterback or tailback. Senior Barrett McGrath came off the bench last week to relieve ineffective sophomore Jim Simeone, and completed six of ten passes for 92 yards in moving Massachusetts down the field.

From there it was the other mystery man, sophomore George Barnwell taking care of business, as he first rumbled off 24 yards in a reverse from his split-end position, and then was switched to tail back where his 18 yard spin and dash to the end-zone led the Minutemen to victory. As with Simeone and McGrath, no announcement has been made on whether Barnwell or previous tailback Frank Fay (also a touchdown last week) will start.



Boston University, meanwhile is riding a start that has carried them to the number 20 spot in the national Division 1-AA poll. Last week they pulled out a barnburner, coming from behind twice in the second half, to beat the University of Rhode Island 24-22, on a Steve Shapiro field goal with 26 seconds left.

The man most responsible for the Terrier's fortunes this season has been New England tailback extraordinaire Paul Lewis. Lewis is the number one rusher in the country averaging 154 yards per game. The junior replaced Massachusetts' Garry Pearson as New England's top ball carrier and is a treat to watch.

While the Terrier attack is centered around Lewis' running, the B.U. passing attack has been formidable at times. Senior QB Jim English has thrown for 728 yards while completing 46 percent of his passes. Flanker Bill Brooks has been on the receiving end for 24 of English's completions good for 370 yards and a touchdown. However, Brooks' touchdown is the only aerial score of the season for B.U., so when the money's on the line the call goes to Lewis, who has nine TD's.

The Terrier defense has been hot and cold throughout the season but features the second leading interceptor in the country in safety John Mancini, who has picked off six. Others to watch for are linebacker Bob Egan (67 tackles and 3 sacks), and defensive end Gary Durdin with five sacks.

The Massachusetts defense itself has emerged as one of the best around. With 11 interceptions and 10 fumble recoveries, the Minutemen have allowed a mere 11 points per game, save the 45-13 blowout against Toledo to open the season.

AWESOME POWER — Craig Lesinski (right) and the UMass defense hope to stop Boston University like they stopped Nick DiPaolo of Maine last week. Tomorrow's game is also the final home game for the '83 season.

Weekend Preview . . . . . .

Men's soccer hosts HC

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Will it ever end? Will the frustration end for the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team? God knows, they have tried.

The one thing that has eluded the Minutemen besides wins, and a consistent offense, is goals. While Coach Jeff Gettler has put together an impressive defense, the offense just hasn't done its job.

While the UMass defense has yielded just 11 goals in 15 games, the Minuteman offense has only scored five.

And the road to success and redemption will have to start in Amherst this weekend. UMass hosts the Crusaders from Holy Cross at 11 a.m.

Changes made to the lineup should help. Kevin Flynn, who started on the East squad in the National Sports Festival, is solid at sweeper. Frank Neffinger, out with a shoulder injury, is back in the lineup now and will add strength to the backfield.

Up front, where Tom Uschok and Paul Serafino have been playing well, the team will just have to do better. Kayvan Khatami is the team's leading scorer with two goals and two assists for six points.

Let's just hope everything falls in place for UMass, now 1-7-3.

Minutewomen travel to NY

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Coming off its fourth shutout in a row, the fourth ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team will try to stack up two more victories this weekend as it takes on unranked Adelphi University on Saturday and unranked George Washington University on Sunday at Adelphi.

The Minutewomen are slowly, but surely, getting healthier with Debbie Haraskiewicz (fractured nose), Susan Bird and Michelle Rodney (sickness) back and ready for action. Aggressive attacker Jamie Watson is still out of action with a knee injury.

The goaltending [illegible]m of Lisa Ellis and Jeanne Paul have [illegible]en coming through for UMass this sea[illegible]. Ellis has played the most games of t[illegible] duo and has given up only three goals [illegible] a 0.37 goals against average. Paul has had 13 saves on the season and has no yet given up a goal. The two have seven shutouts between them.

Stacey Flionis took over the scoring lead after scoring a hat trick in Wednesday's game against Dartmouth. Flionis has six goals and one assist for 13 points and sophomore Ellen Taggart is close behind with four goals and two assists for 10 points. Defenseman Lori Stukes is third in points with four goals for eight points.

Top 10 matchup for UMass

The University of Massachusetts fourth ranked field hockey team travels to Durham tomorrow to take on the sixth ranked University of New Hampshire in a Top 10 matchup.

"Every game is important," said head coach Pam Hixon, "when it comes to the end of the season."

Hixon will rely on Pam Moryl, the team's leading goal scorer with eight and Sue Packard, who is tied with Moryl for the scoring lead on the team with 12 points.

In the back will be senior Patty Shea who features a sparkling 0.18 goals against average. UMass brings a 10-1-1 record into the matchup.

Netmen take two of three

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

In this season of frustration for the University of Massachusetts men's tennis team two out of three not only ain't bad, its damn good. And that had been the case the last three days as the netmen defeated Westfield State 9-0 and Clark University 6-3, while losing to Vermont 6-3.

On Tuesday, UMass victories against the Catamounts from Burlington, VT were recorded by Dave Singer, Marc Weinstein and Jim Gelinas at 3rd, 4th and 6th singles respectively.

Against arch-rival Westfield on Wednesday, the netmen used several of their younger players, including Barry Katz and Mike Chajes, both of whom were making their intercollegiate debut.

UMass completed the three matches-in-three days streak with the win over Clark yesterday on the Boyden Courts. Wayne Peterson edged past Warren Barest 7-6,6-3 at 1st singles, with other Minutemen victories coming from Dave Singer (7-6,4-6,6-3) over Pete Stern at 3), Marc Weinstein (6-2,6-2 over Jay Weinman at 4) and Jim Gelinas)6-0, 6-2) trouncing of Bob Danzinger at 5.)

"The season has gone exactly as expected," said coach Bob Szlosek. "There have been no disappointments, just a lot of frustration. I know our players are as good as players on other teams, it just takes time. It's simply a time and experience thing. The last four matches we have played real well. Now we have to continue the rest of the season.

Horse meet this weekend at UM

More than a hundred horses from all over New England will be demonstrating a myriad of talents at Tillson Farm this weekend as the University of Massachusetts Veterinary and Animal Science department hosts their annual fall horse trial.

Notable riders that have entered include Jiffy Read, who won the National Young Riders championships of 1981 and Marshall Gray, assistant coach of the U.S. equestrian Olympic team in 1976.

Saturday will be dressage at Tillson. Sunday, show jumping will be at Mrs. Winthrop S. Dakin's property on E. Pleasant St. and the cross-country races will be in the Orchard on Eastman Lane.

Rebecca Thatcher

Frisbee tourney, US team in town

There will be two big National level events this weekend in the valley. First, the United States field hockey team will be at Smith College today at 4 p.m. for an exhibition game with the Unicorns.

Featured on the U.S. team will be former UMass standout Judy Strong. Strong, was also a member of the ill-fated 1980 Olympic team and led UMass to a second place finish in her senior year (1981) in the NCAAs.

At the Southwest playing fields, Zoo Disc and Zulu, the UMass men's and women's ultimate teams begin three weeks of qualifying play this weekend that will hopefully lead to the National Championships in New Orleans.

The two teams are hosting the Western New England Sectionals this weekend with action to start on Saturday at 11 a.m. and continue through Sunday.

Zoo Disc is the three time Western Sectional champion and Zulu is the defending National Champions.

Flashy, short styles are it for fall

SLEEK BUT SOFT — These cropped pants, flat shoes and knit sweater are one look popular this fall, as modeled by junior fashion marketing major Beverly Turetsky.

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Looking around campus this fall, one might be confused whether it's the 1950s or the 1980s. Mini skirts, sweater dressing and costume jewelry head the list of the new casual look, which will advance to a more formal look in the near future, according to Dr. Jacquelene M. Robeck, fashion marketing coordinator at the University of Massachusetts.

Robeck attributes the 50s look and aggressive styles of the casual look to a number of factors, including the economic recession, movies, history repeating itself, and the expression of individual tastes.

"People started digging clothes out of the closet and it became such an accepted look," Robeck said. When money was tight people could not afford to buy expensive clothing and they turned to thrift shops and their own closets for different, but inexpensive, fashions. This Christmas, retailers will be looking forward to the first productive season in three years, Robeck said.

"Colors are brighter, indicating that we're not feeling repressed from the economic repression," she said. "People are spending more money this year because they've got more money to spend. People are looking more to quality, where before they'd take whatever was put in front of them. Students now invest their money and think about what they're buying and what the wear life is."

Movie influence is a large part of fashion, Robeck said. With the release of the film "Breathless" this summer, 50s fashions could only be heightened. "Flashdance" introduced the new fad of sweatshirts with the neck line and sleeves torn off, and the look of shirts falling off the shoulders.

Fashions such as the mini skirt and puff-shoulder blouses, which were popular in the 1930s, are new styles for people today to wear but they are not exactly worn or styled the same way.

"Fashion is affected by sociological aspects and has to do with art history," Robeck said. "We know that history repeats itself and it's the same with art. So we are repeating ourselves in fashion, even though it's not the same.

"We're feeling the attitudes and ideas of the 50s, so fashions are coming back."

Mini skirts are one fad with many theories as to why they are back in style. The last fashion cycle featured women trying to get the executive look by wearing pants and pantsuits more, which is one possibility, Robeck said. Another theory is when the economy is good, the hemlines rise, and when economy is low, they go back down.

"We're going through a phase now that it's more than acceptable to be sophisticated and to have feminine and masculine roles, and your femininity is to expose your legs," Robeck said.

Hats are becoming popular again after a long disappearance because of Princess Diana, Robek noted. She also said gloves will return for both men and women to complete the sophisticated look. Shoes are plentiful this year with the choice of flat crumple boots, in suede or leather, high heels and more.

The gold phase is out; big, shocking earrings with wild colors are now in style. What a change.

Vintage clothes not just for beggars

By DOUGLAS MUISE
Collegian Staff

Though Annie Hall may be responsible for bringing second-hand clothing into vogue, used duds have always existed as a cheap means of keeping a shirt on your back. Goodwill and Salvation Army thrift shops have been the traditional frequents of ragged derelicts and Bowery bums for years, but today you're apt to find more students than bag-ladies sifting through the Northampton Goodwill.

ALTERNATIVES — A leather tie and short boots accent Robin Shor's "vintage" suit yesterday in the Campus Center. Her tweed blazar and thick hair offset Larry Grossman's "UMass look."

And gone are the days when you could snag a silk dinner-jacket for $1 in one of these places. Second-hand is now euphemized as "vintage," and it's big business in major cities and college towns where young people want to look fashionable or at least unique for only a few dollars and the price of dry cleaning.

A number of enterprising merchants have tapped into this "captive market" in Amherst and Northampton, making these two towns a mecca for vintage-mongers.

Beginning in the Amherst Carriage shops, we have Once More With Feeling (you get lots of quasi-clever names in this business). This is really a lousy place to begin our tour. Vintage clothing gets to be vintage through virtue of its longevity and longevity necessitates natural fibers and fabrics. Hence, polyester in any shape or form is a no-no. The better vintage boutiques will weed-out the man-made fiber articles for you (sometimes even the blends). Once More With Feeling doesn't. Shame, shame. Unless it's a full-Cleveland you're after with a designer label from Dupont, steer clear from here.

Since we're already up-town, why don't we keep walking towards the Amity Street intersection. Ah, that's what we want, Lodestone. This boutique specializes in designer clothing for women, but if you make your way through to the back of the store you'll find the new vintage department. Lots of good stuff here. Intermingled with a snappy new line of ultra-clean men's garments (Trash and Vaudville black deniums, nifty flannels, nice pleated cotton trousers) is the best selection of used men's overcoats that you'll find in the Valley. Racks of burley tweeds and cozy cashmeres ($30-$60) all to complement that dashing, man-about-town look you've set out to cultivate this fall.

Now jump on a Northampton bus, we're bound for Noho. Get-off at the Court House stop and cross the street. Next to the Good Things Collective you'll find Better Yet, a newcomer to the vintage scene here. Better Yet is vintage in the true sense of the word; you'll find few items in this crowded basement shop that are post-dated 1970. The store is crammed with pointy stilette pumps, glitzy satin prom gowns, and leopard skin overcoats for the women; a curious selection of narrow lapel blazers, skinny silk ties, gabardine shirts, and 40s style pleated pants for the men.

Fashion marketing has career options

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

Imagine working in New York at Macy's or Bloomingdales in the fashion marketing field earning $15,000 a year to start. Or, think about opening and managing a small retail store, being a fashion advertiser, or accepting a communications position in the fashion industry.

Students who graduate out of the fashion marketing division at the University of Massachusetts can start immediately in these positions and others, according to Fashion Marketing Coordinator Dr. Jacquelene M. Robeck.

"We can prepare our students for buying positions for when they graduate," Robeck said. "We have a very high placement upon graduation. I don't hear of many students who don't get positions."

Fashion Marketing is one of five divisions within the major of Home Economics. It is designed to prepare students for a buying career which includes teaching the fundamentals of buying, sales promotion of goods and getting the goods to the consumer.

Skin care, vibrant shades the new fad in cosmetics

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

In this age of health foods and aerobic dancing, women are putting more emphasis on moisturizing and cleansing for healthy skin rather than looking beautiful by applying more make up, according to beauty experts in the area.

The natural, young looking woman is back and she is more interested in finding a skin care program which will protect her skin from drying out and losing its elasticity than covering it up with cosmetics.

Using a cleanser in the morning and at night is the first step in the skin care process.

Next is the use of a toning rinse which takes away any excess cleanser and prepares the face for the moisturizer.

Contrary to the belief that those with oily-type skin should not use moisturizer, it is one of the most important steps in the process and should be applied no matter what skin type a woman has.

Foundation is another product that women are afraid of because they think it ruins their skin. With proper skin cleansing and moisturizing, foundation can only help. It protects the skin from any ultra-violet rays from the sun and certain types of lights.

Cosmetics for the entire face are revolving toward a darker and more velvety look and the bright and lively colors of the past are fading fast. Dark purples, wines and burgundies are the eye shadows for brunettes and redheads. Dark blushes such as a mixture of deep red and brown or pink and brown are popular now, as are dark browns, reds and plums in lipstick and nail polish.

The new colors in mascara are no longer the bright blue or violet some women have worn to match their eyes, but follow the trend with charcoal blue and night navy colors. The look is toward not as conspicuous.

For women with blonde hair, the new fashions pose a small problem since they do not want their make up to be too dark. The solution is to find a medium that will not seem fake. This is achieved by applying a slightly darker foundation than her skin color and staying away from bright blue eye shadow. The fall eye colors for blondes are deep teal, mixed with green or grey.

Today's cosmetics aim to make the face look fuller and emphasize the features. Dark colors pull out facial features, including a fad called "almond eyes" or "cat eyes," in which a dark shadow is applied wide across the eye and a light color is applied above the brows. Lips are being given a fuller look also with the use of a darker lip color lining the outside of the lips and the use of gloss.

The matching of make up with clothes is the height of fashion with sparkle and glitter on the eyes if it agrees with what is being worn.

"We talk about how to market fashion, and non-fashion goods like pots and pans, jewelry, bedding and furniture," she said.

Courses include basic fashion marketing, in which a wide range of topics are discussed including how fashion is made and where the raw materials are obtained.

Textile and non-textile courses are offered and other courses are designed to show how psychological and sociological factors affect what we wear and analyze what is now in fashion to help predict what fashions in the future will be like.

As seniors, students focus on the specific area in fashion marketing they want to enter through an internship or individual concentration.

Students evaluate fashion influence

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

A large part of people's lives are designed by society's standards. The way they speak, the way they act, how they think and even what they are supposed to eat. As society influences people's way of living, by the same token fashion influences how people dress.

But, just how much influence does fashion have on the way people dress?

"A big influence," said Sue Pillow, a junior fashion marketing major.

"You want to be accepted by your peers. You have to dress like everyone else does," she said.

"It depends on where you live. In big cities like New York or Boston, people dress either conservative or trendy," said Sheila Quinn, a junior human services major.

Fashion influence is not only dependent on where you live, but also on what your occupation is according to Leanne Fitzgerald, a first year engineering major.

"Engineers always look sloppy," she said.

"Fashion depends on the individual," said Michael O'Neal, a human services senior. O'Neal, who feels today's fashions are discriminating, claims today's society is "thinner." "Today's fashion is geared for a certain sized person," he said.

Megyn John, a junior English major agreed.

"To be in fashion you have to be the perfect model type," she said.

Rodrigo Soto, a sophomore engineering student, said fashion is an important part of the way people dress.

"Sometimes you are not sure of what to wear, but looking at a fashion on a store window gives you an idea of how it will look on you," he said.

Soto, who said he thinks today's fashion is "very comfortable" and "dynamic," said the way people dress tends to say a lot about their personality.

"You can tell where they come from or what their interests are," he said.

Classic style will prevail, said Quinn, and "the new wave will not."

"You wear whatever (Ralph) Lauren comes up with," Fizgerald said.

Northampton Trading Company is just a short romp up the street. Northampton Trading has more of a boho, earthy-scrunchy bent to it, which means lots of brightly dyed cotton articles, and a prime selection of faded denims and fatigues. You'll also find a mess of neat embroidered bowling shirts, gabardines, and army-issue khakis. Since the majority of their inventory is new, however, you're apt to find prices here a bit stiff.

To the left of the majestic gates of Smith College on Green Street is Practically Worne. I like this shop a lot and I'll tell you why. The selection here is fantastic (enough to keep both the punk and earthy-crunchy camps happy), both the men's and women's sections are well-balanced, new consignments are coming in all the time (you can never be sure what you'll find here from week to week), and best of all the prices are usually reasonable. You'll often find unique stuff here that you just can't get anywhere else: women's furs, lacey lingerie, Mobil jumpsuits, suede jackets, and irridescent raincoats. A four-star rating.

Men's clothes add style

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

Many women know the fashionable addition mens clothes are to our collection. But few are aware of the extent to which we can use men's items, their economic benefits, or the funky/romantic air they create.

Starting at the top, Dad may have an old fedora (hat) in one of those dusty hat boxes he has. Chances are it is an older style, nonetheless becoming, and not available in stores today. The same goes for his sweaters.

A men's dress shirt looks great belted and bloused over tight pants. Try to chose a high quality shirt, preferably Arrow or similar cut. A K-Mart shirt looks like that is where it was bought, particularly on a woman.

Belt it with a couple of leather or reptile skin belts, or both. Again, Dad's old clothes may be just the place to find these.

Brother's worn chinos, if a size or two too big, are super comfortable and look decent with a well fitted sweater. They are great standbys when too much was eaten the night before.

If one is lucky enough to have a prep-jock brother or boyfriend, she will never be without workout clothes. As crude as it may seem, old sweatshirts, shorts and athletic socks lend themselves to physical activity, and our men certainly will not mind giving up their apparel in the name of our beautiful bods. And a football jersey (the kind that goes over the pads) makes a great sleepshirt, though it's a little gauche for public wear.

Even if our men cannot be persuaded into parting with their duds we do not have to give up the fashion. In general, high quality men's wear is half the price of similar female items. For instance, men's large teeshirts can be purchased three to a package and dyed any color of the rainbow for under $10.

Men's socks and hightop sneakers are fun too, and the list is endless. What is more, this style is casual, cool, and even a bit sexy. Ask a male, but not the one whose clothes are gone.

Marines killed in Beirut bombing

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — At least 146 U.S. Marines and Navy personnel were killed and 59 wounded early Sunday when a suicide bomber crashed a pickup truck packed with explosives into the lobby of an airport building where the Americans were sleeping. A revolutionary Islamic group claimed responsibility for the blast that leveled the four-story building.

Moments later another suicide terrorist drove a truck-bomb into a building housing French troops. State radio quoted civil defense workers as saying 25 French soldiers were killed and 12 were wounded. The French Defense Ministry in Paris said the death toll was nine dead, 14 wounded and 53 missing.

In Washington, the State Department received a report from Beirut saying a group calling itself the Islamic Revolutionary Movement asserted responsibility for both attacks. According to the report, an anonymous caller telephoned the Beirut office of the French news agency Agence France Presse and said two of the movement's fighters, named as Abu Mazin, 26, and Abu Sija'n, 24, perished in the suicide bombings.

"I haven't seen carnage like this since Vietnam."

— Maj. Robert Jordan
U.S. Marine spokesman

That group had not been heard of before in Beirut. The caller reportedly told AFP the movement would not rest until Beirut was controlled by "revolutionary Moslems and the combative democratic youth."

The two bombings were the most savage attacks on the multinational force since it deployed in Beirut last fall at the Lebanese government's request to help keep peace in the capital, ravaged by years of civil war and foreign intervention. The bombing at a Marine command post at Beirut airport caused the largest number of casualties suffered by American forces since the Vietnam War.

The four-story building housing a Marine battalion landing team at the airport and the nine-story structure occupied by the French about a mile north collapsed in the tremendous explosions just after 6:20 a.m. 12:20 a.m. EDT.

"I haven't seen carnage like that since Vietnam," Marine spokesman Maj. Robert Jordan told reporters, his own arms covered with blood from helping carry the dead and maimed. Most of the leathernecks were asleep on cots when the explosion rained tons of concrete and glass shards down on them.

Boston anti-nuke rally hosts activists

BOSTON - Students from the University of Massachusetts joined 3,000 demonstrators from around New England Sunday to march against the deployment of Cruise and Pershing II missiles.

The march started in Sennot Park in Cmabridge, wound past Draper Labs, a research and development firm for missile guidance systems, and ended as a rally on the Boston Common. Organized by the New England Campaign to Stop the Euromissiles, a coalition of 37 groups, the speakers came from a crossection of views.

"We refuse to be used by the United States government, which seem to want to transform our heavily populated land into a missile range. Three quarters of West Germany is against the Euromissiles," member of West German parliament and Green Party Leader Anne Borgmann said. "We do not have much time. Already in Germany during manuevers, American soldiers practiced digging mass graves," she said.

The themes of support for Boston mayorial candidate Mel King, and the concept of his multi-racial coalition, as well as linking the arms issue to U.S. policy in El Salvador and other areas, was brought up by many speakers. Both King and the Rev. Jesse Jackson spoke at the rally, and Jackson carried the lead banner.

Congressman Ed Markley told the crowd that one million Europeans had marched over the weekend, and Reagan was amazed when the freeze movement grew in the U.S.

"When we start deploying Pershing missiles the Soviets will deploy SS20 missiles. Theirs will be two minutes from their targets, and ours will be ten minutes away. We will lose control of our destinies as human beings, and will have to rely on computers. We must learn to know each other or we will exterminate each other," he said.

"You have to have an international perspective. The issue of peace belongs in each one of us." Mel King said. "We have to change the nature of debate. We have to understand the connections between war and poverty." King said. He was presented with flowers as he stepped off the stage.

"The cynical media manipulators have been proven wrong by the demonstrations in Europe," Abbie Hoffman said. "The Cold War has frosted his ears shut, he still believes he is working for Boraxo in Death Valley," the community activist told the crowd.

"Those who deploy in '83 must be retired in '84," Jesse Jackson told the crowd. "The administration has a negotiating team at Geneva because of world opinion, not because of a desire for peace. The old minorities have become the new majorities," Jackson said.

Dani Burgess, one of the UMass students at the rally said he was happy with the numbers, but would liked more people. "The number of high schoolers was encouraging, reflecting the work that has been done there," he said.

Provost calls bias charges "nonsense"

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Staff

Acting Provost Samuel Conti last week denied an allegation that affirmative action is not alive at the University of Massachusetts, calling it "nonsense".

"Obviously the office of academic affairs is very sensitive to issues of affirmative action," Conti said.

In response to statistics that reveal only 46 women are tenured professors, compared to 534 tenured male professors, Conti said the University is not currently expanding its faculty, but said when positions do open "they are making every effort to attract women and minorities."

"We're looking at a 40 percent turnover rate of professors in the next eight to ten years. It's not realistic to try and change a situation overnight that was generated over a span of forty to fifty years," Conti said.

Regarding charges that women faculty are paid an average of $3000 per year less than their male co-workers Conti said "There are some inequities", but the Provost's Office is making this issue a priority.

Director of Affirmative Action Thelma Griffith-Johnson recently made a presentation to Conti and members of all departments outlining her office's plans and goals. Conti said the members "seemed well aware of the problems" and would be looking for more ways to attract women and minorities to faculty positions.

"It's not realistic to try to change a situation overnight that was generated over a span of 40 to 50 years."

Samuel Conti
University of Massachusetts Provost

James John, a dean in the Engineering Department, said his department "would love to have more women faculty".

Presently there are two women professors in the Engineering Department compared to 113 male professors. John said there are not many females graduating with Ph.D.'s and that for the few available there is "fierce competition," both from other universities and from business as well.

"The whole country is in the same situation," John said.

John said the engineering department now has only "half a dozen" women Doctoral candidates although 25 percent of this years engineering class is women, and women students make up 16 percent of the entire department.

In the School of Management, there are 63 male faculty members and five female members according to the 1982/83 UMass Factbook.

Virginia Belecz , the school's head clerk also cited competition from other universities as a major reason for the inequalities.

"We're out there, at all the conferences, trying to recruit people, but salaries are skyrocketing and sometimes we just can't compete." Belecz said.

According to Conti, in certain areas there is an "undeniable" lack of qualified women graduates but in other areas "it is clear that (women) are available.

500,000 protest nuclear missiles in W. Europe

(AP) — Nearly a half-million demonstrators poured through the streets of Brussels, Madrid and Paris on Sunday in the second day of Western European protests against deployment of new U.S. nuclear missiles.

Anti-missile campaigners hailed the weekend turnout of more than one and a half million people as a clear sign of widespread opposition to the impending deployment of 572 Pershing 2 and cruise missiles.

There were no reports of arrests or violence Sunday. On Saturday, when more than a million Western Europeans sat-in, formed human chains and marched, West German police arrested 450 protesters.

In Brussels, marchers converged in three columns on the city center in the biggest antimissile protest ever in Belgium. There was no official count, but police said the crowd was much larger than the turnout of 200,000 in an October 1981 demonstration. Organizers estimated the number Sunday at 300,000.

The rally took place about five miles from the headquarters of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, where it was decided four years ago to deploy the medium-range U.S. missiles to counter 243 Soviet SS-20 missiles targeted on Europe. The deployment begins in less than 10 weeks unless a U.S.-Soviet arms control accord is first reached.

Under the NATO plan, West Germany will take 108 Pershing 2 missiles and 96 cruise missiles. Belgium will deploy 48 cruise missiles, the Netherlands 60, Britain 160 and Italy 112.

In Madrid, police said about 150,000 people took part in a march behind a banner that read, "For A Europe Without Missiles." An additional 6,000 demonstrated in Barcelona and 10,000 in Oviedo.

Gerardo Iglesias, secretarygeneral of the Spanish Communist Party, said the demonstration showed that the "people are against NATO," which Spain joined last year.

In Paris, the demonstration was against both the Soviet and NATO missiles, in contrast to a Saturday protest march aimed solely at the NATO deployment.

About 10,000 protesters linked arms from the U.S. Embassy just off the Place de la Concorde, across two Seine bridges to the Soviet Embassy on Boulevard Lannes — a distance of three miles. They chanted "No! No! Nyet! Nyet! Neither Pershing nor SS-20."

In Saturday's protests, some 200,000 people marched to a rally in London's Hyde Park, a similar number paraded in Rome and tens of thousands demonstrated in Paris, Vienna and Stockholm. In West Germany, more than 850,000 turned out nationwide Saturday.

Reagan decries Marine deaths

WASHINGTON (AP) — President Reagan, scorning the "bestial nature" of assassins responsible for the Beirut bombing-deaths of 147 Marines and sailors, vowed Sunday that international terrorists will not "drive us out " of Lebanon.

The president ordered Marine Commandant Paul X. Kelley to fly to Beirut to determine how American forces could be protected, and he said the United States would respond to the "deliberate and heinous" slayings when the perpetrators are identified.

White House officials did not indicate what steps might be taken, or against whom. A senior White House official, briefing reporters on the condition he not be named, said there is "very strong circumstantial evidence and bits and pieces of hard evidence" that Iranians were involved in the bombings.

Amherst fraternity presidents appeal to alumni for survival

AMHERST, Mass. — Pledging to make fraternities more like literary societies than drinking clubs, eight Amherst College fraternity presidents have appealed to alumni of the 163-year-old liberal arts college to help save them from extinction.

"We believe that abolition of fraternities...would be a serious mistake," read a two-page flyer distributed Saturday to the crowd at a homecoming football game.

Fraternity members chanted "Save Our Frats" during the game in which Amherst defeated Wesleyan University 35- 7. Leading the cheers was Joseph Califano Jr., a junior and son of the former U.S. secretary of health, education and welfare in the Carter Administration.

Young Califano appears at every home football game dressed in a tricorner hat and red tunic to represent Lord Jeffrey Amherst, the 18th century English soldier for whom the college is named.

'The Right Stuff' won't help Glenn campaign, producer says

LOS ANGELES — The producer of "The Right Stuff" says the movie about America's ventures into space is not likely to help or hurt the chances of former astronaut John Glenn, now a U.S. senator, in his campaign for the presidency.

"I don't think there's any political significance to this movie," Producer Milton Sperling said at the Los Angeles premier. "You know why? Because it will be seen primarily by a bunch of kids who can't vote."

The Los Angeles premier Thursday, which followed the film's opening in Washington, D.C., was a fund-raiser for the Center Theater Group, the umbrella organization of the Ahmanson Theatre and Mark Taper Forum.

On hand were astronauts Gordon Cooper and Buzz Aldrin and pilot Chuck Yeager, the first man to break the sound barrier and one of the heroes of the movie based on the book by Tom Wolfe.

CBS wins right to broadcast tapes of DeLorean dealings

LOS ANGELES — A federal appeals court cleared the way Sunday for CBS television to broadcast secret government surveillance tapes considered to be the key evidence against automaker John De Lorean, who is facing trial on drug charges.

Three justices of the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals indicated in an emergemcy Sunday hearing that they have no authority under the law to impose prior restraint on the press to publish or broadcast material.

The tapes, which were described at the hearing as "dynamite," purportedly show De Lorean participating in a cocaine distribution deal. The tapes, which CBS was to broadcast, were believed to show the automaker's actual arrest in a Los Angeles hotel room, where he had been shown a package of cocaine by FBI undercover agents posing as drug dealers.

De Lorean attorney Howard Weitzman said he would seek an immediate stay from U.S. Supreme Court Justice William Rehnquist, or any other justice he could reach by telephone.

Weitzman and co-counsel Donald Re told the appeals court judges that broadcast of the surveillance tapes would make it virtually impossible to find an impartial jury anywhere in the country to judge De Lorean on cocaine conspiracy charges.

Duffey criticizes student indulgence

By BOB BURGESS
Correspondent

Chancellor Joseph D. Duffy told a group of administrators, faculty, and alumni the future of the University of Massachusetts will depend heavily on their cooperative efforts to make this generation of college students more able and willing to survive in American society.

Speaking Saturday in his first Chancellor's Council report, Duffey said the "future of this University and the vitality and progress of education in general" rests in addressing a major criticism of American society has become too self-indulgent, and is only living for the present. Our goal is to help this generation of university students overcome this criticism," duffey said. To do this, Duffey said, the promotion of interests of those who support the university is essential.

"We need to promote attitudes of pride and optimism, as well as your interests. Only with your help can we carry out our plans," he said.

At a time when many peope are begining to feel that it is in the public university "where margin of support can build excellence," Duffey said "peope must make committments to the future."

"We must remain the universtiy of opportunities," he said.

Duffey cited an act by the Board of Trustees as a step in this direction. Although still in its planning stages, the plan would loan the university money to renovate Delta Chi fraternity to make the house into a placement center, where "people of the business and science communities can come to meet students," Duffey said. this center could develop into one of the finest in New England, with the necessary support, he said.

Duffey addressed the gathering of more than 100, after opening remarks by chairman of the New York stock exchange William Batten.

Duffey also explained his plan to increase tuition by $50, money which would be kept in "a kind of revolving trust fund," he said, "and would be devoted to an access to programs." The fund would be used mainly to recruit instructors and graduate students, and to enlarge many of the lecture halls. Duffey said, "We will try to be very competitive in these areas."

Amherst Town Meeting kicks off tonight

By JULIA MAYCOCK
Collegian Correspondent

AMHERST — Town Meeting begins tonight and acid rain, rent controls and a peeping tom by-law top the agenda.

Town Meeting members, 30 from each of Amherst's eight precincts, will convene tonight at 7:30 at the Amherst Junior High School on Chestnut St. The meeting will continue Tuesday and Thursday nights this week and Nov. 1 until all 38 articles of the Town Meeting warrant have been voted on.

The Amherst Select Board last week unanimously endorsed an article urging state and federal governments to limit sulfur emissions which have been determined as the major cause of acid rain.

The article, sponsored by The Massachusetts Public Interest Research Group (MassPIRG), calls for a statewide cap on sulfur emissions from industrial and utility sources within Massachusetts and a 50 percent reduction of sulfur emissions nationally. This is the only warrant article drafted by students.

UMassPIRG Campus Coordinator Rich McClyntock said reservoirs in the area have been contaminated by acid rain, causing the Ph level of the water to fall. Sodium has to be added to the water to make it safe for drinking but the amount of sodium added to the water is high, he said.

Rent control, a town concern since 1969, has been voted down about 10 times, including a 116-111 vote against it at last spring's Town Meeting. Ken Mosakowski, chair of the Amherst Board of Housing Authority, drafted the most recent article which would establish a commission will report to the town by Sept. 3, 1984 so action can be taken by next fall's Town Meeting, Mosakowski said.

Rent control affects between 7-10,000 students, said Joanne Levenson, director of UMass Off-Campus Housing Office. She said the burden of providing data and an argument for rent control shouldn't be "put on the tenants."

"It (rent control) is only meant to be consumer protection — no more, no less. The housing industry has been free of any controls. This would make it community controlled," Levenson said.

Amherst Police Chief Donald Maia has drafted a peeping tom by-law which makes it possible for the town to prosecute voyeurs. This article was written in response to community concern over numerous incidents involving spying in windows and exhibitionism in an Amherst neighborhood and Lincoln Apartments. The law would mandate a $200 charge for each offense.

While the by-law does not affect the UMass campus, Barbara McGlynn, a spokeswoman for the Lincoln Apartments neighborhood committee, said students should be aware of the problem and that they might be able to get a similar ordinance passed on campus by contacting the Housing Office and the Department of Public Safety.

Richard Minear, a selectman and UMass history professor, said, "The by-law points to the larger issue of security on campus. Students could pressure the campus police to deal with these issues if they haven't already done so."

Management students get new computers

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Correspondent

A University of Massachusetts alumnus presented the School of Management with a systems laboratory valued at over half a million dollars late Friday afternoon in a simple dedication ceremoney.

The ceremony attended by both President David C. Knapp and Chancellor Joseph Duffey, was the result of a project begun last winter designed to introduce management students to the uses of the computer in the business world.

The systems laboratory, equipped with 30 MDS Series 21 processing work stations, was dedicated by Ralph H. O'Brien, president and chief executive officer for Mohawk Data Sciences, a New Jersey based computer company, who donated the equipment.

"What a lot of people do not realize is that the students of today will be the leaders of the first half of the 21st century, and they will have to work with the computer," O'Brien said, a member of the Class of 1952.

"This systems laboratory is not just a learning center but a teaching center that will intergrate the computer into management letting both the professors and the students do a better job," said O'Brien, whose son Doug is a graduate student in SOM.

"What Ralph O'Brien has done is show his confidence in the University of Massachusetts to produce better students in this field and make our students better prepared to face the ever changing business world," Duffey said in his remarks.

"We welcome Mohawk to a partnership that will enhance learning and build for the future. Our students are a source of vitality that will be helped greatly by this laboratory." said he.

After the ceremoney, presided over by Harry T. Allan, dean of the School of Management, O'Brien spoke to the Collegian in greater detail about his contribution.

"I wanted to give something back to this school. It's a place where I got the background that put me where I am today and I feel that this facility will make students more aware of what the computer can do for them. If students can grasp the full understanding of how they can be helped, then their future is unlimited."

A plaque noting the contribution was presented at the dedication.

The systems laboratory is on the first floor of the SOM and will be directed by Dr. Craig Moore.

Chairman of NYSE is 'optimistic'

By BILL WALL
Collegian Staff

Speaking at the University of Massachusetts Saturday, the chairman of the New York Stock Exchange said both the Democrats and Republicans will have to agree on a plan to pull American out of the recession.

"The focus is once again on creating wealth rather than distributing wealth. If we could agree as a nation, (to make growth a goal), regardless of political parties, then I am optimistic," said William Batten, chairman of the exchange since 1976.

Batten stated a variety of reasons for his optimism, to more than 90 people Saturday at the third annual meeting of the Chancellor's Council. He also noted some of his concerns about various facets of the economy.

"We don't want to return to the 70's years of "stagflation." The days of 13 percent inflation and a 21 percent prime (interest) rate are behind us...we must continue to head in the direction we are now following," Batten, retired executive officer of J.C. Penney, said.

Batten referred to recent studies showing increasing overall productivity in the economy as a good sign, saying "these recent productivity gains I believe are real and sustainable."

He said that, in addition to inflation and interest rates being down, changes in demographics point to a larger, more productive work force because of the aging of the baby boom generation. Recent technological gains will also make widespead differencees, he said.

"We're just beginning a technological revolution. It will change the way people work and live more than the Industrial Revolution did. The application of technology will enable us to enjoy unprecedented growth (in basic industries such as steel and automobiles,)" Batten said.

"The days of 13 percent inflation and a 21 percent prime (interest) rate are behind us...We must continue to head in the direction we are now following"

—William Batten
Chairman, New York Stock Exchange

Less of an adversarial relationship between management is probable, because of the Japanese application of quality circles, he said.

Batten expressed concern over a de-emphasis of basic research that must be reversed in order to achieve growth. He also cited government budget deficits in the international debt crisis as possible hindrances to growth.

In a separate interview, Batten offered his appraisal of the current administration's performance in handling the economy and noted specific policy prescriptions he would advocate.

"Some of the programs that have been put into effect (by the current administration) have worked in turning the economy around. I think a case can be made that the tax reductions were enacted too quickly."

But all is not well in the economy, according to Batten.

"I think the concern now is the size of the deficit, and the paralysis of the governmental process will continue until after the 1984 election," he said. "The very negative effect of the $200 billion deficit will affect the savings rate...but crowding out the capital markets won't occur in 1984 but maybe in '85. Policy action will be delayed until spring '85," he said.

Batten advocated a mixed package of economic policies to be devised in a bipartisan approach, similar to that of the recent Social Security Commission, to cure the deficit. Policies he endorsed include capping the rate of growth in both defense and social programs, especially Medicare, and combined with a tax increase, as economic growth can't cure a deficit by itself.

"Pessimists will not build a future, it will be the optimists," he said. "I don't believe our best years are behind us."

WOMEN'S FORUM

Women's Forum is a weekly listing of upcoming events relating to women's issues. Notices should be sent to the Women's Issues Editors, care of the Collegian, 113 Campus Center, before the Friday preceding the event.

Since its inception in 1978, the Women's department of the Collegian struggled to accurately and fairly report issues and news relevant to the University community.

Through all the changes the department has undergone, through all the good times and the bad, the turmoil, criticism and the praise, one lesson has always been learned — change is the stepping stone to perfection.

Last week the Women's department officially came to an end and the Women's Issues Department officially came into being.

Although in many ways the same, it is in many ways different. It is at least defined. It is not a department made up of women, it is a department made up of reporters who cover news and issues relating to women but not necessarily involving only women.

Monday — The Anti-Racism Team will meet at 4 p.m. in room 905 Campus Center.

An art exhibit featuring the works of Donna Estabrooks will be held in Wheeler Gallery from 7 to 11 p.m. today and will continue through Thursday. The event is sponsored by East Side Arts Council and the Orchard Hill/Central Women's Center. Estabrooks is the University's artist in residence. For more information call 545-2882.

Tuesday — The Women's Issues Team will meet at 4 p.m. in room 805, Campus Center.

The Women's Leadership project will meet at 7 p.m. in 415 Student Union.

Wednesday — The Committee for Equal Rights and Reproductive Freedom will meet at 5 p.m. in room 811 Campus Center.

Thursday — Sally Fox, a nationally known performer will appear at 7:30 p.m. in room 163, Campus Center. Fox will be portraying various people in problem situations. The event is being sponsored by Hillel and is part of the Jewish Involvement Theatre. For more information call Hillel at 545-2526.

There are two hotlines available on campus for aid to victims of rape or other violence. The 24-Hour Rape Hotline is 545-2677. The Everywoman's Center Hotline for victims of violence is 545-0800.

WALLFLOWER ORDER DANCE COLLECTIVE AND GRUPO RAIZ

Wallflower Order is a nationally acclaimed women's dance theatre collective. Although Wallflower's primary art form is dance, they also incorporate theatre, music, comedy, martial arts, and sign language into their work to create multi-dimensional pieces of strong emotional impact. EDITORIAL/OPINION

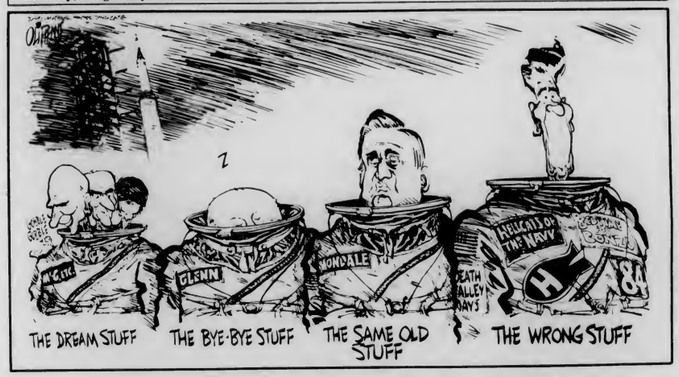
Controversy— SGA Constitution

An open letter to Chancellor Joseph Duffey,

As an undergraduate student senator, a representative of the commuter students, I would like to respond to your memo of the 7th to co-presidents Charlene Allen and Tom Ahearn. We vehemently oppose your threat of freezing our S.A.T.F. monies on the basis of not meeting some arbitrary deadline you wish to impose.



The S.G.A. and its officers know that the memo in question suggests negative ramifications of immense importance to all students, beyond the S.G.A. constitution.

First I must stress your administrations lack of respect for students and the S.G.A.. At your reception as Chancellor on October 1, 1982, you stated that "UMass is a place where we set goals together by consultation." Your memo of October 7 sharply contradicts this statement. On another occasion, you stated that "The Amherst campus is very complex. It has many constituents and they are used to being listened to. If changes are to be made, input would be gained from all concerned interests." Again, the memo contradicts this statement. One conclusion that can be drawn from the statement: those groups (faculty or student) which are most likely to be affected by administrative policies will no longer be listened to, as your threat to the S.G.A. has demonstrated. I, therefore, question your desire to work with, and not against, this campus.

Secondly, in light of your failure to inform students of your intention to have an immediate $50 tuition hike, we find the act of publicizing this constitution issue a disgrace to the entire University community. The attempt to overshadow an issue of such great importance which affects the future education of the 18,000 students of this campus, is in itself a statement of "perverted" priorities. Furthermore, your administration's demanding that your decision be approved by the trustees by November 1 leaves us no time whatsoever to analyze the proposal and acquire feedback from all factions of the University. The overall effect of the contention to freeze S.A.T.F. monies works to the detriment of all students. By freezing student payroll, you inhibit the ability of students to pay the very tuition you seek to increase.

In conclusion, I would like to state that we recognize this as but one act in a series of attempts to undermine the S.G.A. and its right to allocate and disperse S.A.T.F. funds. We stand strong and united. We are an autonomous cohesive unit of students; we control the monies of the S.A.T.F. and can solely freeze accounts at our discretion. We pay for the salary of the S.A.O., its affiliates, not to mention the faculty and administration of the University. It is paramount that the negotiations on the S.G.A. constitution continue in a non-threatening atmosphere, in order to maintain the communication so imperative to our campus.

On common concerns of students

Heaven help our student Senate if its leaders can't grasp a metaphor. Much of the squabbling in the Collegian's editorial pages of late has dealt with the S.G.A. Senate and its responsibility toward the "average student." The first and most compelling salvo lamented the past lack of concern shown for the interests of the average student. Responses from voices among Senate leadership centered on a point of semantics: the meaning of "the average student." The contention of the Senate leadership appears to be that since no individual can strictly be said to be average, this is not a constituency to which one should gear legislation and expenditures of student money.

Rodman R. Snelling

The argument demonstrates a breathtaking grasp of the obvious, while missing the point completely. While one will never, of course, meet "the average student", the phrase serves as an appropriate metaphor for the general tendencies of the student body. Contrary to the Senate leadership's assumptions, surveys of our student community show a marked tendancy toward, if not conservative, then certainly a moderate political perspective which is not reflected in the past radical shenanigans of the S.G.A. Senate. The recent unpleasantness over the United Technologies Corporation provides a good case in point. When a total of 26 Senators passed a motion demanding that the administration deny U.T.C. officials the use of the Campus Center as a meeting place, what popular will were they representing? While it's difficult to imagine University students marching to express adoration for United Technologies, most, if asked would probably support freedom of assembly. Pity the S.G.A. Senate didn't see fit to ask.

Rather than stirring themselves to a frenzy of impotent nostalgia for the '60's, perhaps the Senate would do better to concentrate on matters of more probable widespread agreement among students such as tuition increases, University scholarships, the state of library book purchasing, student housing, bringing more "name" guest speakers to campus, the availability of study space, faculty promotion criteria, and the importance of strong and sound student representation.

If the proper sphere of concern of the Senate seems ill-defined, and its actions, at times, unrepresentative, the problem can probably be traced, in large part, to the fact that the Senate has for too long been lead by a self-perpetuating oligarchy of self-avowed left wing radicals. A Senate that finds itself meekly towing this sort of ideological line in its declarations and funding allocations cannot convincingly claim to reflect the student will. Perhaps the central question is one of purpose: should the Senate act on questions of political ideology or instead address matters of concern to students as students (i.e., scholastics and practical matters of campus life.)?

With the meeting of the Senate last Wednesday, there is reason for optimism. There seemed a noticeable change in the temperment of new senators against cowed docility and submissiveness to radical leadership. It was heartening to hear forceful questioning and debate from all sides on what might in the past have been rubber stamp issues. If "the average student" had been there, she/he might have been given reason to hope.

Rain falling and darkness

The windshield wiper blades made a rhythm scraping across the windshield, back and forth. Tat-tat-tat, back; scratch; Tat-tat-tat, scratch. The rain came down in a fine mist. She stared straight ahead, at a day covered in a blanket of fog and a chill that would not leave her. She looked over at him and he caught her glance. He held her hand.

She had met him at a bus stop (of all places, how unromantic she thought. He was always kidding her about the passion for romanticism, old movies and her ongoing dreams about dancing with Fred Astaire.) She remembered how, when she looked at him on that cold night three years ago, alone and nervous, waiting for a bus that was taking all too long, that she wasn't afraid. His eyes were soft and innocent...safe.

John Kenney

"Okay Jane...Jane? Honey, we're gonna' start now; You're being very brave, ready?" The nurse held her hand. She tried to block it all out, but the noise...

She met him again, only this time under better circumstances, through a mutual friend. He asked her out. She accepted. It was all quite nice, quite exciting.

She remembered calling him, unable to sleep in the middle of the night. She called him and he listened. He didn't mind because, she knew, he cared.

Her parents liked him, her grandmother especially. He would sit for hours, talking with her, listening to her, of her life.

"Almost done, honey, you're being brave. What do you study at school?" "Sponge, c'mon sponge!" The doctor demanded. Just please stop the noise she thought.

They shared secrets, they talked about the future and they admitted they were scared. They lay still together, quietly, and thought. And one day, they said that they loved each other. And it was very special.

She remembered that he held very tightly while she cried when her grandmother died. He understood. He always did...or at least he tried. And now he was trying as he never had before.

"Okay, that's it, nice job," the doctor mused. "How you doin', Jane, Okay?" She simply nodded, afraid of the tears and screams that might come if she moved. She lay still. She could hear her own breathing, loudly, the hum that still rang in her ears...the noise...

The car stopped. The rain fell, still, it was growing darker. She stared straight ahead. She quickly looked at him. "The noise," she said quietly and paused. "The noise!" she screamed, "The noise!!" He looked around confused. He turned the engine off...the wipers. She looked at him and cried, her head falling into her chest. He held her.

"It's gonna' be all right, it's gonna' be okay, we've got each other."

The rain fell and the darkness set.

Reality in Nicaragua

I am writing in response to Steven Barrett's editorial "Revolutionary parallels are not there" (October 13). Mr. Barret rejects the parallels that have been drawn between the American and Nicaraguan revolutions. Further,he attempts to insult "liberals and leftists apologists" as "most uneducated", "ignorant souls". I am not impressed with Mr. Barrett's arguments, but I did note the similarity between his tactics and those of Reagan and Company: abusive rhetoric, disinformation and omission of facts. of facts.

The author claims that the Sandinsta revolution was (and thus, is) not an indigenous revolution, but was "formed in 1961-in Havana...receiving aid and indoctrination from the start." This assertion is a blatant falsehood. The Sandinista National Liberation Front (FSLN) was formed not in Cuba, but in the hills of Nicaragua. It took its name in recognition of Augusto Sandino, the Nicaraguan patriot who led an army of 8,000 peasants against the United States' military occupation of 1926-1933. The FSLN was inspired to action not by Cuban "indoctrination", but in response to the Somoza dictatorship (1933-1979) and the hunger, poverty and repression which it fostered. The bloody National Guard were overthrown not by Cuban aid to the rebels, but by the same popular support and guerrila tactics employed by Sandino forty years earlier against the American Marines. The Sandinista Revolution could never have succeeded were it not an indigenous struggle. The victory was due to a particular national situation: the desparation, the sacrifice, the heroism and unity of the Nicaraguan people.

Mr. Barrett, as you suggest, that "even a cursory glimpse of history by the most educated" may improve one's understanding of affairs in Central America, so do I urge you to take a thoughtful, honest look at the Nicaraguan/Central American reality.

A high of unknown equal

STEVIE WONDER
Saturday, October 15
Boston Opera House

By DAVID CHEVAN
Collegian Staff

When I think of all the concerts and shows I've attended, I don't think any one has been as anxiously anticipated as seeing Stevie Wonder. Having gone through most of my life listening to his music, this concert would be the culmination of a life-long ambition. It is sad, how anticipation can often kill a moment, thank goodness this was not the case with Stevie. From the moment he came on stage, to the beat of a new song, "It's Coming" to the last chords of "Happy Birthday" Stevie Wonder lifted the crowd to an emotional high of unknown comparison.

Unlike most performers, Stevie is very friendly and open with his audience. After the first tune, instead of rushing on to do another number, he joked with the crowd, totally destroying the image of the distant superstar. He was willing to goof on himself, tell jokes about Eddie Murphy, and bring the audience into his living room ("this is my house, do you people usually make this much noise when you visit someone's home?").

The show highlighted most of my favorite Stevie-tunes, including the incredible "Superwoman." I love that song, especially when Stevie gets to the part where the song changes mood and he sings "When the sumer came, you were not around, now that winter's here, love cannot be found...," it's so beautiful; seriously breathtaking. It seemed as though the audience knew all the words, whenever Stevie didn't sing a line, they did. He also covered some of his earliest hits, "Uptight (Everything's Alright)," "Signed, Sealed, Delivered," "Ma Cherie Amour," and "Sunshine of My Life."

As the music progressed into the newer tunes, the intensity of the show also built. Songs like "Living for the City," and "You Haven't Done Nothing" would suddenly stop, and Stevie would go into a call and response pattern with the audience. This was especially effective on "Living for the City" as the line kept modulating higher and higher instead of going into the story line about New York, "just like I pictured it." In fact, the highlight of the whole evening, if anything could be a highlight in an evening of enormous peaks, was the call and response during "Do I Do." Stevie separated the chorus into its basic elements, "Do I do," "what I do," "when I make..." and then would screw up the rhythm and expect it right back...I guess you had to be there. For "Ebony and Ivory" he called up members of the audience to sing along. I usually hate that song, but for once, it really worked. The enormous love and energy which flows from Stevie made the song's message much less a posture than the duet with McCartney could only have been.

For an encore, Stevie came out to sing "Happy Birthday." The song dedicated to a gaining national holiday for Martin Luther King. The song moved the audience so much that, long after the lights had gone up, Stevie had left the stage, and the roadies were clearing the area, the crowd was still singing the song. Walking back out to the streets and into Boston's Combat Zone I realized how, despite the impossibility and ludicrousness of the ideal, it is important to think and work toward harmony and brotherhood worldwide. Stevie's message, its honesty and straightforwardness, destroys all barriers of sex, color, and race turning an audience of many into a loving number of one. Any show that can do this is a beautiful experience.

Stevie Wonder in Boston: destroying barriers of sex and race.

Crue goes for groin

SHOUT AT THE DEVIL
(Electra/Asylum)
Motley Crue

By YANETT PENA
Collegian Staff

First Van Halan did it, then it was Def Leppard, (wince) Iron Maiden; and now, just when you thought it was safe to go back into your favorite record store, another mediocre heavy metal album fills a rack space. But this time the disappointment is even greater. The 80's.

Motley Crue, the same glitter guys who made an outstanding debut last with Too Fast For Love and brought the use of lipstick and Final Net to perverse new heights, have become tangled in their own teased hair-dos.

Just by the album title, Shout At The Devil, you instinctively start smelling trouble. By the time you open up the folding cover and listen to side one, you know trouble has arrived. "In the Beginning," a little tale narrated by a Mr. alllister Fiend, prepares you for what will soon be an onslaught of violent, sexual, and hate-filled imageries coupled with youth glorification. Those sometimes discordent, sometimes simple, and othertimes just plain likeable melodies (all written by bassist Nikki Sixx) are not as well defined here as they were on Crue's first album. "Looks That Kill," "Knock 'Em Dead, Kid," and "Danger" are the fine exceptions.

Nikki Sixx of Motley Crue

The whole album reeks of overmerchandising and heavy capital investments on the record company's part; and since the band is reportedly in a monetary rut, I'm sure this had some influence on the songwriting and modified image. Cynacism may run deep here, but what else can come to mind when these former red-lipped "pretty boys" start using the satanical pentagram as their logo and tell us to "shout to the devil?" How many more bands are going to sponge off of Black Sabbath's worn gimmicks?

But let's give credit where credit is due. The album is not a total disaster. "Shout At The Devil" is well produced, has good guitar tracks, and is definitely not AM radio commercial material. "Ten Seconds For Love", which should be retitled "Let's Have Quickie Sex," will probably never be heard on FM stations either. And no matter how much singer Vince Neil tries to toughen up on this record by snarling and grating his vocal chords, he still has one of the best voices in Rockdom; that feminine clean singing shines through and makes a perfect contrast against Mick Mar's searing guitar playing.

Someone once said that good music should hit you in three places: the head, the heart, and groin. On "Shout At The Devil," Motley Crue punches strictly below the belt. While these guys have always had a tendency for theatrical gross-out (check the November '82 issue of Oui magazine), they should have thrown out the skulls and kept the glitter.

TODAY'S PUZZLE ANSWER

Dixon, Waitz win

NEW YORK (AP) - New Zealand's Rod Dixon, fighting off leg cramps and a sore hamstring, wore down first-time marathoner Geoff Smith of Britian and won the New York City Marathon in dramatic fashion Sunday - the first foreigner to capture the prestigious event in the race's 14-year history.

Norway's Grete Waitz, meanwhile, continued her domination of the women's compftition, winning for the second year in a row and the fifth time in the past six years.

Dixon, in only his second marathon, was timed in 2 hours, 8 minutes, 59 seconds - the 10th-fastest in history- and nine seconds ahead of the weary Smith, who led from just past the 15-mile mark until the final-quarter mile in the grueling race run in a steady drizzle.

The 33-year-old Dixon fell to his knees after crossing the finish line in Central park, kissed the ground, then widly waved both hands in the air. The leg-weary Smith collapsed.

"I couldn't believe I passed him when I did," said Dixon, who had predicted he would win the race and do it with the fastest time in history.

UMass quarterbacks had been sacked 33 times going into the game and not once did the BU defense drop the gimpy kneed McGrath for a loss.

BU jumped out to a 14-0 lead on the strength of two touchdown runs by Paul Lewis. Lewis, the leading rusher in the nation at 154 yards a game had over 100 yards after six minutes and finished the day with 195 yards on 41 carries.

The Minutemen seemed to catch all the breaks this Saturday. In the second quarter and the Minutemen threatening, BU coach Rick Taylor decide to accept a holding penalty against the Minutemen. Instead of fourth and goal from the two yard line, Taylor decided third and goal from the 15 was a better choice. But McGrath stayed in the pocket and rifled a touchdown pass to Jackson to cut the lead to 14-7.

A roughing the kicker penalty on BU set up the tying touchdown for UMass. McGrath hit Frecker and Jackson with passes to move the ball to the 22 yardline. McGrath then found Freker alone over the middle and Freker rumbled in untouched.

The Minutemen put together the 11 play, 60 yard to go ahead drive in the fourth quarter, which culminated when Jenkins scored from two yards out. The big play was a 20 yard pass from McGrath to Simeone and a personal foul that put the ball on the two yardline. Jenkins scored on the next play, and UMass led 21-14 before BU came back to tie.

The University of New Hampshire (second place in the tourney) was the next opponent for UMass. U.N.H. was a bit stronger than the previous foes, but UMass held them to single digits in both games. Once again UMass swept, 15-8 and 15-9.

Following a two and a half hour wait, UMass was told they would be facing Dartmouth College in the final game of the tournament. Dartmouth would be the final hurdle UMass would have to clear before they could be called the champs.

The first game was another easy victory for UMass. Once again the spikers held their opponents to single digits, winning by a 15-8 margin. Game two had some controversy. UMass called their first time-out of the tournament early in the game but fought back from behind to tie the score at 13-13.

The next point was crushed by Sally Maher, but the official missed the call and gave the point to Dartmouth. UMass lost the next point and had their first loss of the weekend. Feeling robbed, the spikers blew out Dartmouth by 13 points, 15-2. UMass was triumphant and UM was celebrating and more than the uniforms of the Dartmouth team was green.

The 26-11 spikers have one more day to celebrate, before they head out Wednesday to face Smith College.

left corner of the net to give Holy Cross a quick 1-0 lead.

However, the Minutemen kept their composure and came close to tying it up on a number of occasions in the first half.

In the second half, the Minutemen came close again, as a Lenn Margolis shot hit the post, and HC goalie Mike Greene made three outstanding saves off Kayvan Khatami, Simon Ostrov, and Tom Giordano during a scramble near the net. Shortly after that, Uschok scored his goal during a similiar scramble. Greene stopped Ostrov's initial shot and Rich Fortescue's header off the rebound, but Uschok was there to fire home the loose ball to tie the score at 1-1. The goal was the first UMass in five games, and only the sixth in fourteen games this season.

In the overtime periods, UMass had the only real scoring opportunity, when Flynn fired a direct kick from just outside the penalty box over the net.

Throughout the game, both teams used a hard, aggressive style of play which led to 32 fouls (20 against Holy Cross) and three yellow cards (two against the Crusaders). But according to Minuteman fullback Lenn Margolis, "We expected a physical game, especially since last year's game (with Holy Cross) was pretty physical". Crusader coach Evan Holmes said, "In a good rivalry like this, you have to expect some rough play".

UM comes from behind to topple BU

By BILL SHEA
Collegian Staff

Two weeks ago, after the University of Massachusetts football team lost to Delaware 16-13 and came home with a 1-4 record, head coach Bob Pickett wasn't sure what the rest of the season would bring for his Minutemen.

"I may be totally wrong," he said, at a time when his offense was sporadic and his defense overworked, "but I think we can still salvage the season. The kids don't seem down at this stage. We'll know when we start practice Tuesday how our spirits are. I'm still confident!"

Pickett's confidence in his team and the belief that they were better than a 1-4 football team paid off when placekicker George Papoutsidis nailed a 27 yard field goal with 13 seconds remaining to give the Minutemen (3-4 overall, 2-1 Yankee Conference) their second straight Yankee Conference win 24-21 over Boston University, Saturday at Alumni Stadium.

Papoutsidis received most of the post-game attention but he saw his role in the biggest win of the year crystal clear.

"How about those guys busting their butt every play" he said in the jubilant Minutemen locker room. "All I do is kick the ball."

Anybody can kick a ball, but kicking under pressure is a whole different matter.

Immediately following a game tying seven yard touchdown pass from Jim English to Bill Brooks with 2:21 remaining, the Minuteman offense set up Papoutsidis' game winning kick, moving the ball 55 yards in a little over two minutes.

George Barnwell returned the kickoff to the 35 yard line and quarterback Barrett McGrath, who had an outstanding day in his first start of the year and his last appearance at Alumni Stadium, hit tight end Gary Freker at midfield. Fullback Rich Jenkins ran for 12 yards and McGrath hit Bob Simeone at the BU 29. Jenkins made another 12 yard run two plays later to put the ball on the BU 15 and it was time for Papoutsidis, who badly missed a 33 yard attempt earlier, to come on for the attempt.

"The closer we came in the more confident I became," said the transfer from Nassau Community College. "All I thought about was getting the ball in the air."

The ball was in the air often for the Minutemen, thanks to the accurate arm of McGrath and the sure hands of wide receivers Kevin Jackson (7 catches, 84 yards, 1 TD) and Bob Simeone (5 catches, 81 yards, 1 TD), and the protection of the offensive line.

Women's soccer knocks off Adelphi, George Mason 2-1

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

GARDEN CITY, N.Y.- It was a very successful weekend for the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team as they won the ADIDAS Adelphi Soccer Tournament by defeating sixth ranked George Mason University and host team unranked Adelphi University both by the score of 2-1.

"We were hoping to come out on a winning note. I am happy that we played two good teams back to back well, but we can play better," said UMass Coach Kalekeni Banda.

The third ranked Minutewomen opened up the scoring early on Saturday against George Mason as Beth Semonik headed a cross from the corner by Debbie Harackiewicz past the goalkeeper at 12:44 to put UMass up by a 1-0 count.

Less than three minutes later, tri-captain Stacey Flionis scored her seventh goal of the season on an assist from Susan Bird at the 15:16 mark, as UMass took a 2-0 lead into halftime.

George Mason got on the scoreboard late in the second half on a disputed goal which Banda thought there should have been a call on, to make the final score 2-1 in favor of UMass.

"Jeanne Paul played well in goal for us. She got banged up a few times because they were a physical team. She was a little light headed, but she hung in," said Banda.

Yesterday's game against Adelphi had a slow beginning due to the rain that persisted throughout the afternoon. Adelphi kept up the play and kept the game scoreless at halftime.

But the Minutewomen could not be kept off the scoreboard for too long. Ellen Taggart scored her fifth goal of the season as she dribbled through several defenders and put the ball in the net at 58:14 to give UMass a 1-0 lead.

Nadia Komarowski made it 2-0 as she walked in unmarked from her fullback position and easily put it in at 74:35 to give the team some breathing room.

Adelphi made it a game as they scored at 80:57 to cut the UMass lead to 2-1, but the Minutewomen's stingy defense held on for the victory.

Lisa Ellis started in goal in the game and did not face many shots, but held her own, according to Banda.

"We have a strong team which is getting into game shape physically, but we must work more on our mental game," said Banda.

The Minutewomen now bring their 9-1-3 record to Cambridge on Tuesday to face the tough Crimson of Harvard, who are ranked in the Top 20 and fifth in New England.

Minutemen tie Crusaders 1-1

Sophomore Tom Uschok's goal at the 22:26 mark of the second half gave the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team (1 8-5) a 1-1 tie with Holy Cross (4 5-3) in an extremely aggressive game that saw a total of 32 fouls committed and three yellow cards given out by referee Ted Smith Saturday at Boyden.

Just 28 seconds into the game, Crusader Pat Seely stole the ball at midfield, then passed to Kevin Casey, who fired a shot into the top

New Hampshire upsets UMass field hockey 1-0

By JILL LANG

Collegian Staff

Durham, NH-Everyone has an off day now and then...and most often the "now" occurs when it is least expected. Such was the case Saturday for the fourth ranked University of Massachusetts field hockey team, as they fell to the sixth ranked University of New Hampshire, 1-0.

Not that the Minutewomen played badly, it was just things did not seem to go their way.

"We had a lot of opportunities, but we couldn't find the net," co-captain Chris Coughlin said.

UNH scored in the first minute of the game, on a shot from the top of the circle. There was some confusion among the UMass players, because it seems the UNH forward who took the shot was committing a foul at the time.

"It was a judgement call," forward Diane Kobel said. "It (the ball) went off an attacker's stick and into the corner of the net."

"It happened really fast," kobel said.

The Minutewomen played 59 minutes of good hockey following the goal, but it wasn't enough.

"We were beating them to the ball throughout the game," Kobel said.

Coughlin said UMass had many opportunities around the goal, but didn't have the necessary punch.

"We played better against UNH then we did against Harvard (a 2-0 win)," she said. "We controlled the play and the ball."

Another factor was only the second game on grass in two weeks for UMass. Kobel said the turf might have been a small factor, but "that's not a good excuse." she said.

"We were not passing like we know how to," Kobel said.

Tomorrow, the Minutewomen will be facing Dartmouth on NOPE field at 3 p.m.

UM spikers take title at Vermont tourney

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

BURLINGTON, VT — They got it! The University of Massachusetts volleyball team sure did get it this weekend. The team traveled to the University of Vermont to participate in the Northeast Invitational Volleyball Tournament and came home champions.

"I told the team that we were going up there to win this tournament, and we did," exclaimed a happy head coach Elaine Sortino. "I am excited, it is the first tournament we've won... and it felt great!"

UMass was a step above and ahead of their foes on this weekend. The first victim was Brinmore College. The Minutewomen were in total control throughout the match and won 15-4, 15-3.

The ensuing two out of three matches proved to be just as easy for the spikers. UMass swept the next two matches, beating Wellesley College and the University of Vermont in straight games.

60's Speak to 80's

Nummo Staff

On Saturday, October 22, 1983, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst convened for a conference on activism and social change, entitled "The Sixties Speak to the Eighties."

There were several speakers present who participated in the Civil Rights Movement. They told of the many experiences which brought on the intial incentive to become an activist.

The first speaker was Anne Braden, a sixty year old journalist who has been a social activist for the past thirty-five years. Braden said she felt she had a very lucky life because of her ability to notice that there was, and is, a great need for innovation within our society.

She stated that many people would like to blot the sixties out of their minds entirely. She made several recollection of the sixties.

Having been raised in the "white society" of Alabama, she became aware that a "racist society" was established. It was a "society of white people, run by white people." She said that "one would have to be stupid not to notice this." She noticed that racism was destroying her friendships because individuals had to choose sides. She recalled one of the kindest men she had ever known saying that there was a need for more lynchings. She knew then that it was time to get away and try to make a difference.

She ran into many who were becoming involved and stated that whites have to come to terms with themselves and realize that our world and government is wrong. She felt that her involvement made life worth living.

Braden said that when Rosa Parks sat on the bus on December 1, 1965, the process began; and instantaneously there was hope for "change." Change will make this country progressive, said Braden.

James Farmer, founder of the organization CORE, thinks the sixties was the most noble decade in all of history.

He told a childhood story of being thirsty and wanting to go into a store for a coke. His mother tried to explain to him that they should wait until they got home, but he insisted and used the example of a small white boy inside a store drinking a coke. His mother had to explain to her 3½ year old son as best she could that he wasn't allowed to sit or drink coke in that store. Farmer said that he didn't know the thought process of a 3½-year old, but he remembers saying to himself that something had to be done about that.

He recalled college discussions in dormitory rooms on segregation. In 1942, while in Chicago, they studied the techniques of Ghandi and ways of applying them. He and some friends organized their first "sit-in", which was very successful. He made people aware that segregation was in the North as well as the South. He and his companions - The Freedom Riders, felt as though "they were nibbling on the elephants ear of segregation."

Finally, in the 1950's, that never-ending nibbling ceased. He asked, "How can one forget the burning of the bus?" On November 1, 1964, segregation signs were taken down. He and his followers wanted things enforced; if they were not enforced, the Freedom Riders would continue to fight for equality, by continuing the "sit-ins." He ended with, "If I am not for myself, who will be for me? And if not now, when?"

Martha Prescod Norman, a Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) field worker and fundraiser, said that by the time she was sixteen, there were events in her life that brought on a desire to attack the system.

She is originally from Rhode Island and stated that a Black woman in the 1950's and 60's could barely find work. When she was six her family moved into a white working-class neighborhood. Her family was harassed by whites.

Having to walk ten blocks home daily, her first organizing job was figuring out the most secure route home. She was the only Black in the school. A few teachers did not seem to think she "was able to learn algebra," said Prescod. Another teacher said that "she was culturally unable to write."

SNCC shaped her whole political perspective, said Prescod. She first came in contact with the organization when she was sixteeen at Michigan State. Many people came back to the school and told of their experiences. At that time she was involved in the peace movement.

Tom Haden, who had just returned to the college, asked Martha "why was she involving herself in such irrelevent activity, when her people were revolting in the South."That prompted her to go to a SNCC con-

We asked students the question: What effect do you think Mel King's candidacy is having on Boston?

Bethyl Rose: I believe Mel King's candidacy is affecting Boston in a positive way. It's giving the communities a chance to come together for the same cause instead of as opposing forces. In addition to this, Mr. King is giving the other candidates a run for their money.

Geraldine Allen: Mel King should be mayor of Boston because he is a candidate representing "ALL" the residents of Boston. I believe he will make a positive change politically, socially and economically.

Miki Simms: I think Mel King's candidacy is having a great effect on Boston. It is utilizing the votes of people whose voices have not been heard in previous elections. I strongly believe that if Mel King has a great victory in this election, there will be a chance in Boston for the better.

Yuan Yunsheng: Personally Speaking

by Brenda Ling
Nummo Staff

In a lecture last Thursday, Yuan Yunsheng, Visiting Five College Artist-in-Residence, spoke of his personal experience as a painter in the People's Republic of China (PRC).Yuan, born in 1937, was introduced as China's foremost contemporary artist.

Since he enjoyed art as a youngster, he devoted himself to it and attended the Beijing Central Academy of Fine Arts. In a lecture entitled, "Yuan Yunsheng: The Artist's Point of View," and translated by UMass art professor, Yuan Huimin, Yuan spoke of his impressions of the state of art in the PRC.

Yuan recounted his daily soul-searching of the past 30 years, his attempts to come to terms with his personal history by asking the question, "can I prepare myself for something?" He said that since the 1950's he has felt that "my soul is disturbed; what I paint is hurt, disquietude of my soul."

This disquietude takes shape in a complex mixture of forms. After he cared for animals at a labor camp, his black and white watercolors have been dominated by farm animals, bulls, horses. Other canvases representing physical realities are splashed with brilliant acrylics in flowing shapes, all the with the word "phenomena" beginning their titles, e.g. Phenomena Waves without Wind, Phenomena Mineral Surge.

In their wide variation, the paintings are tied to Yuan's self-proclaimed Post-impressionism, perhaps less by their abstract nature than by his philosophy that "painting is my memoirs, is a note in my life, because to respond to this immediacy is most challenging."

Yuan's artistic existentialism is reflected in his not planning paintings: "I don't know after the first stroke of a brush what will happen. The first stroke will lead to the second, will inspire me to do the second." This philosophy begat Yuan's major work, The Water Pouring Festival, an allegorical mural of a king and his many young concubines. The mural is composed of "millions of small immediacies."

Since 1979 criticism of this painting, the mural only reminds him of the ordeal of its censorship. Yuan's personal hurt from this incident is tied to his feeling that "the basis of all art (is) human feelings and emotions."

Yuan presently feels that art is oppressed in the PRC. He advocates the "anti-tradition" movement for "anti-art" to establish a base and to form its own tradition. In Yuan's view, all art has its basis; it is the viewers' responsibility "to adopt new attitudes to look at the old tradition" and to understand its relationship with anti-art. Then, all art will be displayed together and will not be alienated from the people.

Public opinion of Yuan's art is mixed. He says that some enjoy his work, or elements of it, while others consider it "unbalanced, disturbed." Regardless of this, he asserts that his art "reflects my own state of mind, the result of the moment."

Yuan's exhibit runs at the Amherst College Mead Art Museum through November 17, and Yuan himself holds open studio hours three times weekly at Smith College.

ference in Chapel Hill, North Carolina in the spring of 1962.

She was unable to describe what an accomplishment was made. She said that "there was a spirit there that was very real and compeling; walking to this little chapel with about thirty or forty people, who were all courageous, who were all committed, who were all veterans at sixteen and eighteen and nineteen; who talked about their experience in very understated terms." They were singing songs of freeedom and she felt as though she had come home.

She stated that the ingredient for social change was there and the only thing to be done now was the coming together of the people; with certainty that something would happen. She said that "if all we had was our bodies and our souls, then we could make change."

Prescod said "it makes poltical sense to attack something where it is most vulnerable," like when the Hatians challenged Napoleon; when the Angolans challenged Portugal and when Vietnam challenged the U.S. She stated that "there is no way this country could deny Blacks the right to vote, and that there is no moral justification for that." She said that she cannot recall "anyone getting up and saying, I want to be integrated," possibly referring to busing.

Her years in the movement gave her an "extended family," after her own family disowned her. SNCC gave her family once again.

Do Remember To See Do Lord Remember Me

by Brenda Ling
Nummo Staff

During the next two weeks the play, Do Lord Remember Me, will run seven performances in the Southwest Hampden Theater as the second of the Third World Theater Program's Fall 1983 offerings.Do Lord brings to the stage, in five scenes, the real life experiences of Blacks during the Civil War period. In the words of playwright John De Jongh, Do Lord is "a medium for the voice of these former slaves."

De Jongh stresses, as in a recent press release, that his script is "verbatim materials, interviews conducted during the 1930's," more specifically, between 1936 and 1939 in the Negro Studies Project of F.D.R.'s Works Progress Administration.

De Jongh originally wrote the play for a Smith College workshop in 1982. He then rewrote it in 1983 for the New York American Place Theater, a prestigious off-Broadway theater where the play will return in February.

Roberta Uno Thelwell, Director of the UMass production of Do Lord and Artistic Director of the Third World Theater Program, saw the play in New York. With the support of Smith College theater director, Regge Life, Thelwell decided to bring the play back to the Third World Theater Program.

"We had been looking for a musical production for about a year." The Program had wanted to feature UMass Music professor, Horace Boyer, in a work, and Do Lord's melding of music and theater provided "the perfect combination."

Thelwell describes the play as "different than the typical American musical, like My Fair Lady, in that the music, for one thing, was not written for this piece. Rather, the music is actual Negro spirituals, work songs. They emerge from real moments, they aren't apart from the text."

This focus on the artistic culture of Black communities reflects Thelwell's own "personal, multiethnic experience." Moving to the Northeast from the West coast was "a shocking experience" for Thelwell. Everything in Euro-American theater was "oversentimental, romanticized, totally depressing, downtrodden kind of experiences."

She considers Do Lord a good example of Third World theater, as it depicts human emotion and the "nobility and great humanity of the people."Do Lord expresses that human energy "in the great tradition of African history."Thelwell says that the five local cast members all "realize the importance of this matter, they really support each other - it's been a very positive experience for all of us."

Of the two women and three men in the cast, only one of the actors is a student, Felicia Thomas of Mount Holyoke College. Two of them, Richard Ammons and Gloria Bankstein, have never acted before. And of the five, including Mangold Washington and Leroy Blair, none has ever studied theater.

Thelwell emphasizes that "we feel very honored to be working with Dr. Horace Boyer" as musical director. She encourages all, especially students interested in oral history, to attend any of the seven performances over the next two weeks. On the day of the last performance, Saturday, November 5, playwright John De Jongh will lecture on "Oral History and the Development of Do Lord Remember Me" at 1 p.m. in Hampden Theater,.

Tickets, which the Program has tried to keep available to all, cost $2 for students and $3 for the general public. They are obtainable at the FAC Box Office, Monday-Friday, 10-4 or at the door before performances. ROOM TO BREATHE — Students in Goodell Library sit in a study room filled to capacity.

Study space sometimes scarce

By CAMDEN PIERCE
Collegian Correspondent

Most students have their own favorite place to study. Maybe it's in their rooms, braving the guy across the hall who thinks "quiet" is the time it takes to flip Van Halen from side one to side two. Or maybe it's the Library Tower, where if you arrive late you play a kind of musical chairs, looking for that elusive spot, which only opens up after 11 p.m.

But if study space is a real problem, students are keeping it to themselves.

"It's a phantom problem," said Justin Cobb, director of Space Management for the University of Massachusetts. "I don't mean that in a light sense, but once it's addressed it seems to go away."

Thomas Ahern, SGA co-president, said he didn't think student senators were being pressured by their constituents to work for more study space.

"To my knowledge, (the Student Senate) is doing very little if no work on study space," he said. However, he noted the University Library Committee is working to make sure that as books are moved out of Goodell Library, the openings are used for study space, and not for office space.

He also said that in a recent committee meeting with Vice-Chancellor of Student Affairs Dennis Madson, the group "discussed opening more buildings on Campus for study," and hiring students to fill security positions. But, he said, that idea is still "being kicked around."

George Wright, associate director of public services for the library, said he expects libraries to be crowded through the middle of November. "The last few weeks before finals are always a crunch," he said.

"Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday are busy days," he said. "But we've learned that over the years you cannot predict the pattern....

"We've got a little over 1000 spaces in the tower proper," Wright said. "When we reach the maximum figure before 8 o'clock, then there is a crunch." At that point "we have to discourage people" from studying in the library, he said.

The library system at UMass can't accomodate more than 3000 people, Wright said, so it has to be assumed some people will study elsewhere. But, "within the next week we hope to make another 125 to 150 spaces available on the main floor of the tower library," he said.

Cobb said that besides the library system, there is 11,000 square feet of reading space allocated to departments where majors within a particular discipline can study. Most buildings on campus are open until 10:30 or 11:30 p.m., he said, unless there have been security problems. But he reiterated that there has "been no request, and when done in the past, (study space) disappeared as need."

Grayson grumps over early mornings

By RISA FREEMAN
Collegian Staff

Noisy roof repairs have prompted the preparation of a petition by residents of Grayson dormitory in the Orchard Hill Residential Area for a partial refund of their residential fees.

Lynda Harbold, Orchard Hill Area Government secretary and resident of Grayson is one of many students who feel they have been inconvenienced by the construction which begins each weekday morning, sometimes at 7. She brought her idea of a petition for refund to the Grayson House council last week where it was unanimously approved.

"For those of us who have been trying to study or sleep while construction is going on, it has been more than just an inconvenience," Harbold said. "Many students have been complaining among themselves and I felt this was a good way of getting together and presenting a formal complaint," she said.

The petition, which already has 200 signatures, will formally request a resident fee refund and order the University administration to respect house council set quiet hours which are 11 p.m. to 9 a.m., Harbold said.

The Residence Hall contract stipulates a joint responsibility of ensuring the quiet enjoyment of the residence halls, Harbold said. Residents are wondering why the construction was not done during the summer break.

John Findlay, UMass assistant director of Operations and Maintenance said all construction work cannot possibly be confined to the summer. Roof construction was done on three other dorms during the summer and it was not possible to work on Grayson as well, he said.

"The contract with the construction company is from 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. weekdays," Findlay said. "The point of those hours is to get the most done as quickly as possible."

Many students, especially those living on the top three floors of the building, are woken each morning by loud noises from jackhammers, a crane which operates on the side of the building and by heavy objects falling from the roof, Harbold said.

The section on rebates and refunds of the Residence Hall Contract says that a student may apply for a rent rebate or termination of the contract as a result of hardship in living conditions.

When completed, the petition will be submitted to the Area Operations Manager, Donald Pelkey, who in turn will give it to Findlay. "We intend to send a copy to other University officials to get our voice heard," Harbold said.

Ann Koski, assistant director of financial affairs, said the decision as to whether the students would receive a rebate rests with Pelkey, and that if the students are not content with his decision they can appeal to the Residential Appeals Committee. Right now, however, none of the four student positions on that panel have been filled, she said, and no appeals action can be taken until the OHAG co-presidents fill those vacancies.

Acting SGA Atty. Gen. will resign

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The acting student attorney general of the University of Massachusetts Student Government Association said yesterday he will resign from his position, citing SGA politics and personal reasons for his action.

Dakin Ferris, appointed acting attorney general by SGA co-President Tom Ahern in June, said he will resign in part "because my academics are suffering," and in part because he was "outraged" that Ahern and co-President Charlene Allen didn't consult him prior to announcing Allen's resignation from her position last Wednesday.

The possibility of elections for a new SGA president "places my already tentative position in limbo," since the student attorney general is appointed by the SGA President, Ferris said.

Ferris added that "presidential politics" in the SGA have created "the inability for me to do my job for the students."

Ahern and Allen "have never supported me, and in my mind have been less than straightforward in their dealings," with the attorney general's office, he said.

Earlier in the semester, Ferris complained that "the attorney general's office has become so political that the responsibilities are not taken care of," and he said yesterday that this has not changed.

"Eight or nine" persons have held the attorney general position in the last five years, Ferris skk1fhhyspwkck of continuity has led to confusion about the purpose of the office and weakened its role in advocating for students when dealing with the University administration.

Ahern named Ferris to the attorney general position after a search process last spring, but said "a shortage of applicants" at that time made it necessary to conduct a new search this semester, and Ferris would be temporary attorney general until the search is over.

Ferris said appointment of a permanent attorney general has been "delayed through inept handling of the selection process" by Ahern.

Ahern would not comment on Ferris' allegations yesterday, saying he wants to wait until this week's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting. The President's mid-term report, which Ahern said has been delayed a month because of a crowded Senate agenda, "will address all these questions and problems that people have," Ahern said.

Ferris "has been doing a good job," Ahern said. "We're going to lose a decent person."

Ahern noted that Ferris "got a lot of good things started," including plans for a University academic honesty policy, an outreach assistand to better identify student problems, and recruitment of more women student judges.

Ferris said he will "work more closely with the UMass Legal Services Office," after he resigns and "continue to meet with administrators on judicial issues."

"My committment to the judicial system at UMass is unchanged," he said.

Soviets will deploy their own missiles in Eastern Europe

MOSCOW - The Soviet Union, in its strongest response yet to the planned deployment of U.S. missiles in Western Europe, said Monday it is readying its own new missile bases in East Germany and Czechoslovakia.

Western military analysts believe the Soviet armed forces already have short-range battlefield nuclear missiles stationed on the soil of their Warsaw Pact allies. But Monday's announcement was the first public acknowledgement by the Kremlin that it was even planning a nuclear role for Eastern Europe.

"Preparatory work is being started on the territory of East Germany and Czechoslovakia for deployment of missile complexes of operational-tactical designation," the official Tass news agency quoted the Soviet Defense Ministry as announcing.

It said the preparations were "one of the planned response measures in case the American missiles are sited in Europe."

The plan was formulated in agreement with East Germany and Czechoslovakia, the ministry said. The announcement came as Czechoslovakia leader Gustav Husak met in Prague with East German leader Erich Honecker.

The NATO allies are scheduled to begin installing 572 new U.S. medium-range Pershing 2 and cruise missiles in five Western European nations in December. Western leaders say these missiles will counter more than 200 Soviet SS-20 triple-warhead missiles stationed in Russia and targeted on Western Europe.

Western diplomats in Moscow described Monday's Soviet announcement as a further step in a Kremlin propaganda campaign aimed at convincing the European public and governments to reject the U.S. missiles.

Reagan says marines will stay

WASHINGTON (AP) — When U.S. Marines were sent to Lebanon in September of 1982, the Reagan administration thought their stay would be relatively short. Thirteen months later, with nearly 200 leathernecks dead, the road out looks longer than ever.

President Reagan resolved again Monday not to withdraw the Marines, because, he said, their mission remains vital and the United States can't give in to "international criminals and thugs."

Although the president said there has been a lot of progress since the Marines went to Lebanon, purportedly to oversee the withdrawal of foreign forces, it is hard not to conclude there have been plenty of setbacks, too.

The Marines, the administration argued, would not be combatants, but their presence would serve as a psychological lift to the budding government of Amin Gemayel as Israeli, Syrian and Palestinian fighters pulled out. Senior officials confidently predicted the Israelis would be out by the end of 1982. But all of the foreign armies are still entrenched in Lebanon and the Gemayel government's authority doesn't extend beyond a tenuous grip on the city of Beirut and a few suburbs.

Meanwhile, fighting among native Lebanese factions has spread, and only the intervention of American warships averted a disastrous defeat for the Lebanese army at the hands of Druse militia.

NBC ex-anchorwoman Savitch dies

NEW YORK (AP) - She became one of NBC News' bestknown correspondents, a hardworking and articulate woman from rural Pennsylvania who seemed destined for the top of her profession despite a life marred by personal tragedy.

Jessica Savitch died in an automobile accident Monday at the age of 35, still in pursuit of the "big things" in network TV. Killed along with her was New York Post executive Martin Fischbein, 34.

She was a success by almost any standard of the business. A network executive called her "a television natural," and only a year ago, viewers ranked her just behind three anchormen - Dan Rather of CBS, Roger Mudd of NBC and Frank Reynolds of ABC - when asked, "How much confidence do you have in his, or her, reporting?"

"The problem is, " she said in an interview with TV Guide published in 1979, "whenever you think of succeeding, you think you will be happy. You think happiness will be 'written on the ticket.' It's not. Success does not have to bring happiness. Success brings success. I think I succeeded because so many people told me I couldn't."

New report shows 'brooms and brisk breakfasts' offer most jobs

Boston (AP) - The state's most rapidly expanding job fields in the high-paying, high-technology fields, but the biggest number of new jobs will be behind fast food counters and pushing brooms, according to a report released Monday.

Those are some of the principal findings to emerge from a detailed report on the employment trends in Massachusetts over the rest of the decade prepared by the state Division of Employment Security and the Massachusetts Occupational Information Coordinating Committee. Released after a year of preparation, the report is titled, "80 Jobs for the 80's."

Kristin S. Demong, director of the employment division, said she expected the study to benefit businesses, job-seekers, guidance counselors and anyone else wondering about the state's jobs outlook.

N. J. Federal Court silences 'daily minute of silence' law

NEWARK, N.J. (AP) - A federal judge on Monday struck down a state law requiring a daily minute of silence in public schools, ruling the measure was unconstitutional because it forced students and teachers into a "posture of prayer."

The law was the only one of its kind in the country which had not previously been overturned, according to the American Civil Liberties Union, which represented an Edison high school teacher disciplined for refusing to implement the silent minute. The ACLU challenged the New Jersey law as a thinly veiled attempt to circumvent First Amendment guarantees of separation of church and state.

U.S. District Judge Dickinson R. Debevoise agreed, ruling "the law does not have a bona fide secular purpose and, in fact, has a religious purpose. It advances the religion of some persons by mandating a period when all students and teachers must assume the traditional posture of prayer of some religious groups..."

He permanently barred the state from putting the law into effect, even though legislators had insisted it was intended only to provide a moment for silent reflection.

High unemployment and aid cuts exacerbate U.S. hunger and crisis in American cities

WASHINGTON (AP) — The hunger crisis in American cities is growing worse and the cities are falling behind despite "extraordinary efforts" to feed the needy, the U.S. Conference of Mayors reported Monday.

The mayors, in a report, said the recent economic recovery hasn't yet reached the hungry, who are still suffering the effects of high unemployment, sharp cuts in federal benefits and inflation in the cost of necessities — food, shelter and energy — stemming from the 1981-82 recession.

"The problem of hunger is indeed continuing to grow in cities, despite recent reports and indications of an economic recovery," the conference said after the annual meeting of its human services auxiliary.

Academic honesty ideas to become documented

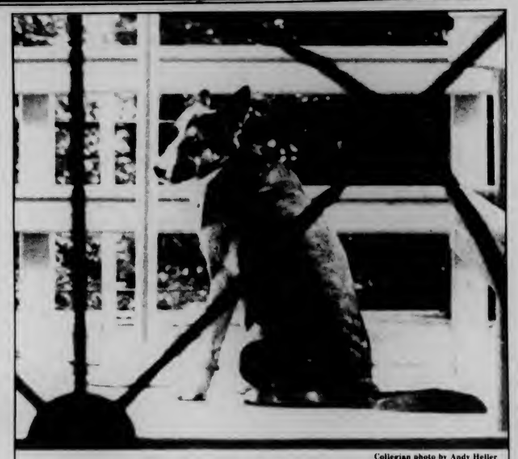
By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Staff

The acting Student Attorney General announced Monday that Dean of Students William Field has initiated proceedings to formulate a written academic honesty policy for the University.

"At this point, I'm optimistic about the administration adopting written academic polices."
— Dakin Ferris, acting Student Attorney General

Dakin Ferris met with Field last Friday to discuss the issue in detail.

"The meeting went well," Ferris said, "and, at this point, I'm optimistic about the administration adopting written academic honesty policies."



Currently, only five of the University's 10 academic schools have written academic honesty policies. Of those five schools, two have clauses that mandate the inability of a student to appeal an "F" grade received from a professor for cheating.

In addition, Ferris said, current policies lack procedural rights for students accused of cheating.

A memorandum issued last week by associate Dean Robert Brooks also recommended the adoption of a "University Academic Honesty Committee." This committee, as proposed by Brooks, would be made up of representatives from each University school and students appointed by the Student Senate.

Those in the proposed committee would be available for consultation when individual cases arise. Brooks also proposed that a faculty member in the accused student's major would be part of any acting board.

"We'll be meeting very shortly with undergraduate deans to familiarize them with the situation and to present guidelines for the construction of a written policy," Ferris said. "At the same time, we'll be discussing the difficult issue of the appealability of "F" grades with the Dean's Office."

Bulimia afflicts women under social pressure

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Staff

"Why can't I stop? My head hurts...mouth still full of cookies...I'm aware of my hand reaching for the leftover meatloaf...I grab some meat...can't take the time to cut it...can't stop...toast, cheese, cookies, peanut butter...stomach hurts...pain."

The above excerpt is taken from a book called Reflections on Recovery by Jane Evans Latimer. Latimer has experienced and recovered from bulimia, an eating disorder shared by 15 to 20 percent of all college women in the United States.

According to the American Psychiatric Association, bulimia is characterized by uncontrollable episodes of binge eating followed by rigid and severe methods to avoid gaining weight. Purging, as it is called, consists of fasting, improper use of laxatives or forced vomiting after a binge.

Research shows 98 percent of all bulimics are women. Almost all men suffering from bulimia are homosexual. Dr. Carolyn Hicks of Amherst Medical Asociates is a psychologist dealing primarily with bulimic women. Her studies show that bulimics are typically upwardly mobile and achievement oriented perfectionists who, despite their accomplishments, have little self esteem and measure their worth through the eyes of others.

Hicks said leaving home for the first time is unusually stressful for bulimic women. Many women, from families with conventional attitudes towards sexuality, have conflicts about being or becoming desirable and college is the first time students are independent.

"This forces the pressures of being one's person perhaps before the student is ready to deal with it" said Hicks.

In Reflections on Recovery, Jane Evans Latimer writes, "When I was a child, I moved freely in my body; I ran, played, worked, laughed, cried - spontaneously and unself-conciously. One day that changed. Self-conciously I plodded through the day. My body was changing and I was ashamed of the changes. I was growing into a woman, and I was frightened."

Bulimics are also vulnerable in times of transition, Hicks said. Her research shows that binging most often occurs during transitional points in a day such as on the way home from work or at bedtime.

On a more visible level, bulimia is the extreme fear of getting fat. Social pressures on women to be thin and beautiful have increased dramatically in the past 20 years Hicks said. In addition, she noted the average age of popular models had decreased and the desired figure is as much as 20 pounds underweight. Some models are as young as 13 years old.

"Women are trying to deny their bodies. They feel something uniquely painful about becoming full adult women." Hicks said.

Bulimics often binge in an effort to deal with painful and conflicting feelings of loneliness, sadness and anger. In Hick's study the parents of bulimics were often found to be physically and emotionally unavailable. Brought up by ambitious parents with high standards, bulimics are often face with overwhelming demands in the areas of apperance, friends and school performance, but have been neglected in their real needs for expresion.

"Bulimics lack the internal resources to deal with problems. They turn to food as a source of comfort. Binging becomes a way to deal with any stressful situation." Hicks said.

Union Records keeps turning after grant

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Correspondent

With a $5000 grant from the Student Government Association (SGA), the student controlled business Union Records Unlimited (URU) opened its doors Monday for the first time this semester.

Overspending and lack of communication within management has caused serious deficits in the past few years but new manager Jim Foley said he's going to keep a sharper eye on inventory and a running balance on expenses, sales and accounts of the business.

Foley proposed to run the store on a "smaller scale," limiting the stores merchandise to music, generating more sales.

The SGA passed the grant with a 2 to 1 margin. Some vocal opposition in the senate questioned why the SGA should continue to subsidize if Union Records has been faltering.

"I can see making money this year. We would have made it last year if we didn't have liquidation payments to make," Foley said. "We're cheaper than the average record store around the valley," he added. The average price for a record is about $6.30, in competition with prices at other record stores around Amherst.

Foley said past managers satisfied their own tastes when ordering records but he will be more conscious of what people want to see and buy.

Foley will mark down older merchandise in order to make room for more selections. Monthly sales on popular music should boost profits and help Union Records become more independent and successful, Foley said.

Protest begins Town Meeting

By JULIA MAYCOCK
Collegian Staff

About 30 teachers carrying placards and handing out leaflets and buttons demonstrated in front of the Amherst Junior High School last night before the start of the fall Town Meeting protesting year old contract negotiations.

Town Meeting members supporting teachers from the Amherst-Pelham Teachers Association (APTA), who will be working without a contract in two weeks, made a motion to postpone action on warrant article five until all other Town Meeting business had been voted on.

The motion passed 88-84 after a member of the Finance Committee said there was no vehicle on the warrant to address the teacher's contract negotiations. This means the federal revenue sharing fund surplus of $335,000 will not be saved, as proposed in article 5.

An article calling for a commission to study the housing market to determine the need for rent control in Amherst was passed after some ammendments to include tenant representatives were added.

Negotations between the school committee and APTA call for a raise in collective bargaining equal to enough money to buy an extra cup of coffee and a muffin per week, said Peter Kravitz, a special education teacher at Amherst High School.

A colleague of Kravitz's said, "I'd rather go to jail than do what we're doing. It doesn't affect anybody but the teachers and the kids. They're (the students) being cheated out of an education."

When the motion to postpone article five was made Town Meeting member Fredrick Ries said that although there was substantial sentiment concerning the contract he did not want to see the Town Meeting "held hostage to that."

Grievance procedure almost a reality

By NORREEN SINGLETON
Collegian Correspondent

The first encouraging sign that an academic grievance policy would be proposed sometime in the near future came last week at a committee meeting of the Faculty Senate, according to a staff member of the Student Center for Education and Research and Advocacy (SCERA).

Joel Weissman, director of SCERA, said, the issue of creating a policy for students to deal with problems with their professors arose at the meeting after a letter was circulated by the SCERA Academic team two weeks ago to University of Massachusetts faculty. The letter asked members to consider the need for such a procedure, he said.

"The issue was received with a general good feeling by members of the council," Weissman said.

Micheline Dufau, chair of the Senate Academic Matters Council confirmed the issue went over well, and said, "we will probably be taking up the issue again."

Dufau also said, "personally I would like to consult with the Ombuds office to see where the situation is at."

SCERA has tried in the past to propose a procedure, but failed to do so because "the procedure was too long and complicated, but mainly because there were not enough faculty members involved," Weissman said.

"This is a chance for students to work with faculty instead of against them," he said.

SCERA's researching of the issue has found that there is no policy for a grievance procedure at the University, or in any of the departments, Weissman said.

The only way for a student to argue a grade is to talk to the professor, the head of the department, or go to the Ombuds office. Weissman said, "the problem is that sometimes the Ombuds office is powerless and there is nothing a student can do."

Weissman said, "Overall, the University would be better off all around if we have a basic element of fairness."

Police arrest men for machine gun possession

By MARY ANNE BEEN

Two men who were seen walking through the Northeast Residential area carrying a UZI machine gun were apprehended by University of Massachusetts Police Saturday, and charged with being in possession of a firearm on a college campus. One of the men was also charged with being in possesion of marijuana.

UMass Police arrested Patrick J. Egan, 19, of Norwood, and Ronald G. Brandberry, 21, of Andover, at 12:35 a.m. Saturday in parking lot 43.

In other police action:

In a motor vehicle accident at the intersection of Massachusetts Ave and Commonwealth Ave, Roxanne E. Smead of South Deerfield was cited for failing to use care in starting, according to police. The accident, which occurred at 8:48 p.m. Friday, involved Thomas R. Eastaugh of Newton, police said. Estimated damage to the vehicles was a total of $800, $500 to Smead's 1979 Toyota and $300 to Eastaugh's 1974 Chrysler, according to the police report.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Party madness is on the wane

Most everyone is aware of the House of Representatives recent passing of House Bill 829 which would raise the drinking age in the Commonwealth from 20 to 21. On Thursday afternoon, while walking in front of the "Hatch" cafeteria, I was met by a representative of the Committee on Public Policy. I was handed a form letter and told that I should sign it and send it off to my state senator, urging him not to support House Bill 1829 when it comes to consideration in the Senate. At first I was compelled to follow orders and do what was asked of me, but then I began to reflect back to 1978, my freshman year, trying to assess the impact that the 1979 raising of the drinking age, from 18 to 20 has had.

Joseph M. Danaher

I remembered that prior to the raising of the drinking age, the University of Massachusetts, Amherst campus, was living up to its reputation as one of the top "partying" campuses in the country. "Zoo-Mass" was a drinker's heaven. Those were the years of the great "Spring Day." Beer distributors were sponsoring promotional beer bashes which attracted people from all over the state. "Fraternity Row" was at war over who could produce the largest "keg parties." Ah, yes! St. Patricks' Day at Theta Chi. Security in the dorm system was virtually non-existent, allowing practically anybody through its doors. There was never a need to worry about running out of booze because all of the area package stores delivered free of charge. We also attained national acclaim through the "Blue Wall" which somehow was able to sling more beer over its bar than any other campus bar in the country, and through "Playboy," which was passing out T-shirts declaring UMass the "number one partying school in the nation."

Halloween night on this campus was a sight to behold. The Campus Center was opened up for the wildest party around. Hundreds of costumed students roamed the campus leaving their marks in the form of rapes, injuries, and vandalism. What do all of the above incidents have in common? They all resulted in bad publicity, deteriorating the image of the University in the minds of the public, other institutions of higher education, and prospective employers. Well folks, times have changed, and in my opinion, for the better.

With the increase in the drinking age in 1979 came a crackdown on campus-wide alcohol related activities. The dorm system has adopted security measures which strictly monitors all guests and parties. Package stores can no longer deliver to campus and large events featuring alcohol have become few and far between. Instead of the riot like Halloween evenings of the past, the campus is now locked-up, tight as a drum, discouraging outsiders and vandalism. The institution of these measures, much to the dismay of many students, has greatly benefited the University and its population. We are slowly but surely losing our "partying" image and regaining our proper recognition as one of the finest institutions of higher learning in the country.

In 1978, I was hesitant to admit where I was attending college. I did not want to deal with the jokes and comments that were destined to follow. This no longer is the case.

In these times of high unemployment and tight job markets, the origin of one's degree may make the difference in whether or not one lands a job. I believe that the 1979 legislation which raised the drinking age in the Commonwealth from 18 to 20 has had a great impact on improving this University's image and will subsequently help all of our chances in the future.

Now, about that form letter handed to me in front of the "Hatch"...I decided not to send it.

Lebanon: The futility of it persists

One hundred and eighty-three more lives have come to an end. 183 more families have waited by their phones for a phone call and a confirmation of a fact they feared so much. 183 more families have gone to airports and picked up the remains of bodies massacred in an explosion, courtesy of an Islamic Revolutionary group.

Daniel Sobel

Ronald Reagan condemned it as a disgraceful, threatening act of violence as he rushed from his golfing in Georgia for emergency meetings in Washington to discuss how many more troops would be sent over to fill the void. A round figure of 200 was released to the media but he's probably sent an extra 75 just for safety's sake.

Certain groups like the Islamic Revolutionary Movement are still planning and scheming and waiting for more ways to defy and protest American presence in Lebanon. They will probably succeed in killing off more U.S. Marines, yet, inevitably another plane filled with nervous young men will land there. A fruitless venture it seems, we send in the bobbing ducks and they shoot them down. I'm surprised a video game isn't on the market yet. But they'll have to change the graphics on it so the "Ameritron" men will be exterminating the "Lebatron" men.

And our peacekeepers will continue to inhabit this hapless, war-split country, all the while continuing to be targets of snipers' bullets and devastating explosions.

How will death change the lives of these families as they make plans to bury their sons? Oh, many will be proud that their son has died defending his country. But what is he really defending? Peace in a country far, far from his homeland? The seneseless ignorance of Ronald Reagan? He's defending something but it's not his country, it's the strongarm attitudes of the American Government.

And however proud these families might be, how can they help but wonder what the hell their son was doing there? What good was he doing? He wasn't keeping too much peace for violence has occurred almost daily for some time now. Why isn't Ron over there keeping the peace if he's such an ardent believer in his policies?

But he wouldn't be caught dead (no pun intended) in Lebanon and there's a fresh healthy team of replacements on their way to relieve the tired and the dead.

One view of the Collegian

To the Editor,

A week ago the Collegian and the Chancellor hosted a conference on "Social Conflict and Freedom of the Press." I attended it in hope that something positive would be resolved. Now I believe it was a whitewash. It had the atmosphere of an annual meeting of the board in a bad year.

Chancellor Duffey in defining a few of the problems/conflicts of the Collegian as a student press proposed no real solutions. In fact it may be that in defining conflict he was actually creating conflict by stating that conflicting roles of the press as a "campus voice vs. a student newspaper" providing a "neutral forum" rather than "advocasy" (sic) is the problem. He summarized his views by saying that freedom of the press had to be moderated by "other concerns."

Journalistic Studies Professor Howard Ziff called him on this issue, but the Chancellor was unable to respond since he had already left. Ziff said that "freedom of the press is an absolute," although he modified it by saying that "press responsibility" was also. He accused the Chancellor of tripping over the "slippery slope" of censorship and press control by emphasizing restricted freedoms rather than addressing the issues of accountability and the First Amendment.

However, it was Professor Michael Thelwell who asked the gut question of whether or not the press has a social responsibility to the public. And he offered his advice: the press should aspire to be "intelligent, progressive, and affirmative." I believe the Collegian ignored and/or avoided his points even though several people in the audience re-addressed them.

Activities in the past week confirm my belief. While such R.S.O. groups as the Peacemakers and Students Against Militarism were under attack in the paper, the Collegian didn't print an interview with and an editorial by Peacemakers about the phone line to Washington on Friday so that students could call their Congressmen about the deployment of nuclear weapons in Europe, nor news about the bus transporting students to Boston for the peace rally on Sunday and back.

That the Collegian declines to address the peace movement on campus is a sad distortion of the news and the truth, for there is indeed a student peace movement. If the peace movement cannot have access to either the news page or the editorial page, then I question whether or not we have a free press. I also become suspicious of the political motives of a small group of students with considerable power as editors of the Collegian.

The Collegian has a responsibility to inform the student body of events of relevence (sic) to it, especially with R.S.O. and Student Government events, as well as a greater responsibility to the student body to cover a wide range of issues without bowing to special interests of any one group, particularly the university administration. I charge that the Collegian is failing that responsibility.

Charles Francis Carroll
Amherst

Editors Note

The Collegian does not decline to address neither the peace movement nor any other news events that occur. We cannot, however, report news until it happens. The editorial page is not for public announcements as the author suggests. Its access is for the expression of ideas which we rely on the community for. A truly free press relies on the responses of our readers. Therefore, any lack of positive feedback from the Collegian and the conference itself result from a misunderstanding about the roles and responsibilities of the campus newspaper.

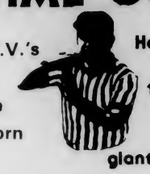
A beehive of radicals?

To the Editor,

It has come to my attention that the Student Government here at UMass is controlled by a radical-liberal group of students. The problem with this is that radical liberals are in the minority here at UMass. But this group of students use the power and money of the student government to further their own concerns that the majority of the students couldn't care less about. The student government was made for all the students and not just a small controlling few.

I have over 6 years of experience in student government, from president of my high school student government, to senator in the student government at the University I transferred from. We passed legislation that benefited everyone. For example, how about spending money on an investigation on the practicality of free tutoring financed by the student government and financial aid instead of sending people to anti-KKK rallies. Private groups who feel strongly against the KKK should do things like that.

Strong arm tactics to keep the senate a beehive of radical liberal activity like those used against Mark Brice are illegal. (Collegian editorial October 20, 1983). You can't remove someone from the senate for speaking out on what he or she believes is right. I hope I don't have to remind you that you are in America not the Soviet Union.



Legislation like trying to keep off-campus rent low is what I would like to see more of. Quit spending our money on things that aren't going to help us get through college.

Alan Marks performs at FAC

ALAN MARKS
Wednesday, Oct. 19
Fine Arts Center

By RONDA APPLEBAUM
Collegian Staff

Wednesday evening I had the opportunity to see yet another enjoyable performance at the Fine Arts Center, this time, the pianist Alan Marks. I'm not going to tell you a lot of technical things about his performance, because to be frank, my knowledge about piano and classical music is limited. However, I will give you an average college student's opinion of an evening of classical music.

Mr. Marks, who happens to be in his 30s, looks about 22. He entered the stage wearing a blue, pin stripe suit, with a white shirt adorned by a red tie. He began his performance with a piece by Haydn, but during the evening he also played pieces by Scriabin, Beethoven and Shubert. I especially enjoyed his piece by Scriabin. His fingers seemed to dance across the key board as he played it. However, up until his forth piece, which was Beethoven's Sonata in A-flat Major, Op 110, he seemed detached from the music that he was playing. But during his rendition of Beethoven he seemed to put more emotion into his playing, thus drawing the audience into the music. After the intermission one could tell that he was thoroughly warmed-up. He gave a fabulous rendition of a piece by Shubert. He put a lot of emotion into this piece and by doing so, he enchanted the audience.

In fact, when I had the opportunity to speak to him after the performance, he told me that out of the pieces that he played that evening, he seemed to enjoy playing the Shubert the most. He said that pianists go through different phases and that right now he was going through a Shubert phase. He feels that he can "identify with Shubert's world." While speaking with his I also discovered that playing the piano has always just come naturally to him. When he was three years old he would listen to nursery rhymes on records and then go over to the piano and try to play along with them.

Well, Mr. Marks has come a long way from nursery rhymes. It took some time for me to get involved with the music he was playing, maybe because I am not that familiar with classical piano, however, as the minutes passed I became captivated with the beauty of the music. All in all, I enjoyed his performance very much. His playing relaxed me and for about two hours took me away from the hectic world of UMass.

Mr. Marks is presently living in Berlin because he feels that the people there can better identify with the music he plays, because "it is part of their culture." However, if you wish to hear his playing while he is still in the Northeast, he will be at Fairfield University, Fairfield Conn., on Nov. 4. He also hopes to have a compact disc (a new type of record made with a lazar)coming out in 1984. The record will be of two pieces by Shubert, his favorite.

Internationally reknown pianist, Alan Marks, who performed at the Fine Arts Center Wednesday night.

Soccer battles at Harvard today

By ELLEN RICHARD
Collegian Staff

There is only one place the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team is going, and that is up. The Minutewomen are making a habit of being one of the best teams in the nation each year and as they prepare for their 2:30 contest in Cambridge against Harvard today, the team is looking to be THE best.

"We're going to play one game at a time," UMass Coach Kalekeni Banda said. "Our goal is to be number one in the region. We can finish number two or three and make the playoffs but we have to be tough in the next two games."

The Minutewomen's season will come to an end on Friday when they battle with Boston College. UMass is ranked third in the nation and second in New England, behind UConn, with a 9-1-3 slate.

Banda said the Minutewomen will try to jump to an early lead against Harvard and outplay them. Harvard is a team which has lost some power this year but the UM coach feels will still be tough competition.

"We're going to go out and play to win," Banda said. "We're the target so they're going to play hard to win. We're going to force the pace of the game and try to keep them from scoring. They've got a young team and will be more offensive minded against us."

Harvard is in contention for the playoffs and will be putting up a fight to the end in the match today. Being the young team that it is, UMass will be looking for mistakes from Harvard and trying to capitalize on them.

Tennis wins and loses one

By ARIEL FOWLER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts Women's tennis team had a nice time as they underwent an 8-1 loss against Dartmouth on Saturday.

"Dartmouth is an extremely forceful team," said UMass Coach Pat Stewart. "There was some lack of concentration amongst our players but I think this was probably the strongest team we've played yet."

Number one singles player Lil Sullivan lost to a formidable opponent in two sets and Anne Tauger (2) encountered a 1-6, 16pgxs1.

Anne-Marie Mackertich (3) was overcome 2-6, 3-6 while Diana Biagioli (4) dug in and performed well but was upset 2-6, 3-6.

Senior Trish Sullivan (5) and Karen Orlowski (6) experienced difficulty as they each fell in straight sets.

The number one doubles team of Lil Sullivan and Diana Biagioli unnerved their opponents 6-4, 4-6, 6-4 to chalk up the lone point for UMass.

Maureen Hanlon and Jill Nesgos (2) played well before sustaining a three set defeat while Marie Leary and Laura Morgan went down in two sets.

The netwomen will begin psyching themselves up as they pack their bags for the New Englands tournament hosted by Harvard this weekend.

Tough and rigourous summed it up for the University of Massachusetts women's tennis team as Harvard surmounted them 6-3, Thursday, October 13th.

The Minutewomen exhibited demanding determination with trim, tidy movements. Harvard has always been exceptionally strong throughout their lineup and this held true in the match.

"Harvard is very strong and I'm not disappointed with this loss," said UMass Coach Pat Stewart. "We had super competition which should help us in our future matches."

In singles action Lil Sullivan (1) played well before falling in a deciding tiebreaker while Anne Tauger underwent a 2-6, 3-6 loss to Potty Dider.

Anne-Marie Mackertich played with rifling power but was defeated by Jean McAndrews 4-6, 3-6.

"I won many of the long points but not enough to pull off the win I wanted," said Mackertich.

Diana Biagioli lost in a gruelling three set battle while Trish Sullivan was nipped 0-6, 4-6.

Number six player Karen Orlowski played a smooth and steady game before Andrea Gerlin upset her in three sets.

"I'm happy to have gone three sets with Gerlin but felt I could have won," said Orlowski.

The dynamic duo of Maureen Hanlon and Jil Nesgos (1) played intensely as they stamped out Jennifer Joss and Sharon Chang 6-3, 4-6, 6-2. While the number two doubles team of Marie Leary and Laura Morgan did away with Kathy Morgan and Stephanie Sheen in three sets.

Joyce Girasella and Lisa Corbett (3) won by default which was no fault of their own.

Women runners finish third while men come in fourth in Atlantic-10

The University of Massachusetts women's cross-country team finished third in a field of four behind host New Hampshire and the University of Rhode Island on Saturday.

With the New England's coming up this Saturday in Worcester, the Minutewomen had come off a week of intensive workouts and seemed a bit tired.

Kim Baker and Chris Pratt finished seventh and tenth overall and were trailed by Dana Mikesell (12th), Deidre Doyle (14th), and Sally Howes (17th).

"The kids ran well and we're looking forward to this weekend," said Coach Julie LaFreniere who added that this week would be a bit less intense as the team prepares for a tough battle in Worcester.

Rod LaFlamme and Rick Doiron turned in two stong performances Saturday to help lead the University of Massachusetts men's cross-country team to a fourth place finish at the Atlantic-10 Championship.

LaFlamme's time of 26:18 over the rugged five mile course was good enough for eighth place overall and he was followed closely by Doiron who came in twelfth in 26:33.

Host school West Virginia totally dominated up front, copping six of the top ten places including Steve Taylor's first place (25:51).

The Mountaineers improved on their 1982 fourth place team finish by returning this year with their squad unchanged and recruiting two of most sought after high school runners in the country.

Coach Ken O'Brien was very pleased with the efforts of LaFlamme and Doiron but hopes to see more improvement from the whole team as they move to the last stages of the season.

In describing the ruggedness of West Virginia course, O'Brien stated that "we are still not real fit in back and that kind of course points to our weak areas."

"It was the toughest cross-country course I've ever seen, never flat, just up and down, very hilly." It was a fast paced race with LaFlamme finishing just four seconds shy of the previous course record.

The team will be in New York City Friday to be part of a five team race at Van Cortland Park.

Offensive line has come alive

Hockey plays

By GERRY DeSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The offensive line has come of age. They really got their act together in Saturday's big 24-21 Yankee Conference win over Boston University.

"The offensive line did a great job out there today," said a pleased Bob Pickett in the locker room after the game. He had good reason to be pleased with his young line.

They had opened holes for the runners that kept the big drives alive. And they protected Barrett McGrath. Coming into Saturday's game, a more mobile Jim Simeone had been sacked 29 times.

Against a Boston University defense that featured end Gary Dergin (six sacks), the Minuteman line protected a less mobile McGrath very well. BU didn't sack him once.

"The offense came around. We worked great as a unit," said junior tackle Don Day. "We came off the ball well. We're getting better and better as we go along."

That they are. It took a while but the line has gained the needed experience and isn't being pushed around as much anymore. It is a young line that starts no seniors. Day is the left tackle and a letterman, Vince Reppert, a sophomore transfer from Syracuse is at left guard. Center Ken Runge is a junior letterman, right guard Tom McEvilly is also a junior letterman and Mike Briggs is a sophomore at right tackle.

McGrath had the time to toss 18 passes good for [illegible] yards and two touchdowns. "he picked us apart," said BU Sports Information Director Ed Carpenter. The running game pounded out 162 yards as George Barnwell ran for 68 and Richard Jenkins ran for 59.

The key to Massachusetts 10 play 55 yard drive, that ended with George Papoutsidis 27 yard game winning FG with 13 seconds left, was the running of Jenkins and the holes opened up by the line for him.

The 'glory' men of the backfield know it too. After the game McGrath personally thanked them for their job well done. After all, there all in this together.

Depending on the weather, the University of Massachusetts field hockey team may or may not face the Big Green from Dartmouth this afternoon at 3 p.m. at the NOPE fields.

The game may not be held due to the poor field conditions. According to coach Pam Hixon, there is a 50-50 chance that there will be a game. If it is cancelled it will be played on Wednesday at the same time.

The Minutewomen, ranked fourth in the country with a 10-2-1 record, are coming off a 1-0 upset loss to sixth ranked New Hampshire.

Dartmouth tied UMass last year 0-0 and is ranked in the Top 20 this season. Senior Carol Trask will be the woman to stop, as she has set a school record for the Big Green for career goals. - JILL LANG

U.S. secures Grenada in pre-dawn raid

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) — Nearly 2,000 U.S. Marines and Army paratroopers invaded Marxist-ruled Grenada in an airborne strike Tuesday, clashing with Grenadian troops and armed Cuban workers.

The U.S. forces, ordered to protect some 1,000 Americans on the tiny eastern Caribbean island and "restore democracy" there, were followed by 300 soldiers from six Caribbean nations.

President Reagan called the pre-dawn operation "completely successful."

He said 1,900 Marines and Army Ranger paratroopers had seized the two main airports on the mountainous, 21-mile-long island.

At least two American military men were killed and 20 wounded in the initial fighting, according to U.S. administration and congressional sources in Washington. They also reported three members of Grenada's 1,200-man armed forces were killed, and that 30 Soviet advisers and about 600 Cubans were captured.

Jamaica was one of the six island nations contributing troops to the invasion force and Prime Minister Edward Seaga told the Jamaican Parliament in Kingston he had received a report at noon saying 12 Cubans had been killed and 22 captured. He also said three civilians were killed and the allied forces had seized a large quantity of Soviet-made arms at the new airport being built by more than 600 Cuban workers at Point Salines.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz told a midafternoon news conference in Washington the decision to invade Grenada was taken because of the "atmosphere of violent uncertainty" and the fear that Americans on the island might be "hurt or taken hostage."

He said the U.S. forces "will leave promptly; we have no intention of staying there," but gave no timetable.

Reagan, appearing at a White House news conference, listed three reasons for the invasion: protecting American lives, "to forestall further chaos" and to "restore order and democracy."

Students react to American invasion of Grenada

By MARY CRESSE
and JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Shouting matches among students broke out intermittently as at least 15 people took the microphone yesterday at a rally in front of the University of Massachusetts Student Union Building yesterday called to question the United States invasion of Grenada.

About 150 students gathered in 50-degree weather to attend the noon rally led by the University of Massachusetts chapter of the Western Massachusetts Latin American Solidarity Committee (WMLASC), who began the rally but later opened the microphone to the public.

As many as 1900 U.S. Marines and Army Rangers invaded Marxist-ruled Grenada early yesterday, according to an Associated Press report, and captured two airports. A U.S. official said 30 Soviets and 600 Cubans were seized. The Pentagon reported 'minimal' casualties amont the forces, which were followed by 300 troops from six Caribbean nations.

The rally started with a speech by Jerry Fishbein, a member of the Latin coalition, who announced the predawn attack and deaths of Cuban civilians, and urged an end to the fighting.

Bill Martin, chairman of the Massachusetts council of the Vietnam Veterans of America, was passing through campus after an appointment and saw the rally, and said he felt compelled to address the crowd.

"Fifteen years ago, I stood in this very spot to protest another U.S. military involvement," he said, referring to Vietnam. "When we went over there, we didn't know what the issues were. We have an obligation to respond to what our government does," he said. Martin said he came to UMass in 1968 after serving as a medic in Vietnam.

During debate at the rally, a member of the crowd yelled, "It's just like Nicaragua, and the United Stated can't let the communists intrude on our sphere of influence."

"The Grenadians don't want to be under our sphere of influence," Fishbein said, taking the microphone.

Tim Kress, a junior political science major, said, "We're all getting emotional and we don't even know the facts. Once we know the facts, then we have an obligation to call or write our representatives."

A shouting match then occured between two students as the next speaker, Ilana Mainelli, said, "Who gave the U.S. and the Soviets the right to divide up the world as we choose? It's like candy. 'You get a piece and I want one, too.'"

Chris Ryan, a UMass senior and a member of the Army Special Forces Reserve, yelled, "What about the protection of U.S. citizens," referring to the 750 medical students who were in Grenada at the time.

"It's so easy to be liberal here," Ryan said. Say 'U.S. out of El Salvador' and you have a following. Say 'U.S. stay in El Salvador' and you have to know all your facts. And most of the people who favor military intervention know their facts."

Dennis Fishman, a graduate political science major gave a long plea for the of U.S. intervention in Central America to end the rally, asking that "not one more Grenadian, not one more Nicaraguan, will die in my name."

Another rally will take place Thursday at noon in front of the SUB.

MARINE KILLED--U.S. Marine PFC. and former UMass student Michael Devlin of Westwood, Mass, was killed in the bomb blast at the Marine barracks in Beirut over the weekend.

Former UM student killed

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

The news came as unexpectedly as the bomb blast which killed at least 207 U.S. Marines early Sunday morning in their Lebanon compound.

According to roommate Edward Jacobs, Sean Devlin, a senior University of Massachusetts music major, was sitting in an ensemble choir class Monday when he received word he was to call the Dean of Students office. His brother, PFC. Michael J. Devlin, 21, had died in the Beirut tragedy.

Devlin, a 1981 graduate of Westwood High School, attended UMass as a freshman College of Arts and Sciences major. A former resident of Hamlin and Brooks dormitories, Devlin left UMass after the 1981-82 school year and had been a Marine for 13 months. He was due home in three weeks.

Devlin is the only Massachusetts casualty reported in the incident thus far, though three other Marines from this state have been reported wounded as the search for bodies continues among the buildings' rubble.

The resident assistant on Devlin's floor, Wendy McInerny, remembered him as a student who kept to himself but was very well liked.

"He was a really nice guy--very much a loner, but really generous," McInerny said. "He was really into the floor and getting things together. He loved group activity...but he wasn't really close to anyone," she said.

McInerny, who graduated last spring, said she was not aware Devlin had joined the Marines but was not surprised.

"He was perfect for the Marines, being for the group, but still a loner," she said.

Devlin had been writing home every two weeks from Beirut and seemed to feel the Marines were receiving adequate protection, brother Richard Devlin, 28, told The Associated Press Monday.

"We kept on being concerned when we heard about the Marines being shelled with sniper fire, but he thought the situation was under control and safe," the elder brother told the Boston Globe.

Devlin leaves his widowed mother Christine, brothers Sean, Richard and Daniel and sisters Christine and Kathy.

Officers bear bad tidings

AP — Uniformed officers brought war to the doorsteps of more Americans on Tuesday as they delivered news of Marines killed in Lebanon, but many relatives waited for a third day without word of their servicemen.

Although the death toll from Sunday's terrorist attack on the U.S. garrison at the Beirut airport rose past 200, only a fraction of the victims were publicly identified and friends and family of the rest could only wait and pray.

Military officials said identifying the bodies in the mangled barracks building was slow and tedious, partly because many weren't wearing their dog tags on the weekend and many records were destroyed in the blast.

But many families got the news they didn't want to hear. Shortly after noon Tuesday, two Marines appeared at the Burlington, N.C., home of Pfc. Johnny Copeland, who had left for Beirut last May on his 19th birthday.

"We're just so emotionally upset right now we can't think," said the victim's father, Donald Copeland.

When a uniformed Marine appeared at his doorstep, Guillermo San Pedro Sr. of Hialeah, Fla., knew the reason why.

"Are you here because my son is dead?" San Pedro asked. When the Marine nodded, acknowledging that Lance Cpl. Guillermo San Pedro Jr. had died, the father screamed as his wife, Edilia, cried and held their two younger sons.

Orlando and Janice Valore of Slickville, Pa., awaited word on their two Marine Corps sons — one who was wounded in Beirut and the other who may be fighting in Grenada.

U.S. troops around the world

WASHINGTON (AP) — Thousands of U.S. troops — about a one-fourth of the 2.1 million Americans in uniform — are stationed outside the United States.

Here is a breakdown of where the major concentrations of American forces are.

—South Korea: 38,800.

—Lebanon: 1,600 Marines plus 100 Army and Marine trainers.

—At sea, near Sakhalin Island in the Sea of Japan: 10 ships, 800 men, searching for wreckage from the Korean jetliner shot down by the Soviet Union on Sept. 1.

—Southern Sinai desert: 800 troops, most of them Army, as a peacekeeping force to prevent incidents between Israeli and Egyptian soldiers.

—At sea, in northern Arabian Sea: aircraft carrier Ranger and escort ships, with 6,000 men.

—At sea, sent to southern Caribbean and Grenada region: five ships carrying 1,800 Marines and 4,000 sailors, and the carrier Independence and six escort ships, carrying another 6,000 men.

—West Germany: 242,000 military personnel, most of them Army.

U.S. citizens protest raid

BOSTON (AP) — More than 100 sign-waving demonstrators, several with relatives in besieged Grenada, marched in front of the federal building Tuesday demanding an end to United States intervention in Central America.

The hastily organized protest came as details of the American-led invasion of the tiny Carribbean island country filtered in.

Marchers chanted, "Hands off Grenada, bring the Marines back home," and "Money for jobs, not for war."

Protesters included the members of the pro-disarmament Mobilization for Survival, the Grenada Solidarity Committee, a U.S.-Grenada friendship society, and the newly formed Ad Hoc Coalition to Stop U.S. Intervention in Grenada.

Ted German, whose brother, Matthew, is among several hundred medical students trapped on the island since last week's coup, said he was worried about his brother's safety in the aftermath of the invasion.

"I was concerned about my brother before, but not oneeighth as concerned as when I heard that the Marines had invaded the island," he said.

The remark was echoed by Tony Palomba whose cousin, Mark Albini, is also in medical school in Grenada.

"I think my cousin is endangered further by the invasion by having Americans troops acting agressively," he said.

German and others suggested that the invasion might have been timed by the Reagan administration to divert attention from recent events in Lebanon. Nearly 200 Marines were killed Sunday when a terrorist drove a truck laden with explosives into Marine headquarters.

Students rally against drinking age bill

BOSTON — Chanting "Kill the bill," college students rallied on the Statehouse steps Tuesday against a move to raise the drinking age to 21.

"We're not here because we're a bunch of screaming kids that just want to party," Arthur Laske, 21-year-old undergraduate student government president at Boston College, told the cheering crowd.

"We've got statistics," he said. "We've got facts."

Students from Southeastern Massachusetts University, the University of Massachusetts at Amherst and Boston, Boston College and Fitchburg and Framingham state colleges were among about 150 the signcarrying demonstrators.

He and several other student spokesmen argued that raising the drinking age from 20 to 21 will drive the students off campus, and back to drinking and driving.

Sen. Louis P. Bertonazzi, DMilford, leading Senate opponent of raising the drinking age, said the bill could die in the Senate. The House passed the bill two weeks ago by better than 2-to-1.

The bill is on the Senate's agenda for Wednesday afternoon.

"We're minutes from any of the state borders," Bertonazzi said. "Every state around us would have a lower drinking age. They would be doing the very thing the (new drunken driving) law is supposed to stop."

Cubans, Soviets captured

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State George P. Shultz today said Cubans — "presumably construction workers" — were firing on U.S. forces in Grenada and "that, of course, forces us to fire back."

Shultz told a news conference some 600 Cubans were on the island, along with a number of Soviets, who he said were safe. He did not say whether any Americans or Cubans were casualties in the operation.

As the invasion began, Shultz said, the United States notified both governments "of our intentions and of our readiness to look to the safety of their people on the island."

Of the Soviets, he said, "as one might expect, they object strenuously to this action."

President Reagan fires three members of Civil Rights Commission

WASHINGTON — President Reagan fired half the Civil Rights Commission to make room for his own team of conservatives Tuesday in a move that effectively puts the gadfly agency out of business at least temporarily.

Outraged civil rights groups said the three ousted members, appointed by two previous presidents, were guilty only of criticizing the administration's record.

A bipartisan effort was launched in the Senate to reconstitute the commission as an independent arm of Congress and House Democrats unanimously approved a statement "strongly" disapproving of Reagan's action, which it said was taken "without cause."

Reagan's surprise move came after five months of wrangling between the administration and congressional liberals over the makeup of the independent commission.

In one stroke last May, Reagan proposed three nominees to replace members held over from the Carter and Ford administrations. The holdovers are Mary Berry, Blandina Ramirez and Murray Saltzman.

In a statement Tuesday, the White House said those three jobs now are terminated.

In firing the holdovers, Reagan called on the Senate to confirm his appointees: Morris Abram, John Bunzel and Robert Destro. They all share Reagan's belief that quota systems and mandatory busing are inappropriate ways to end racial discrimination.

The firing leaves the commission without its required quorum of four, meaning it cannot even meet until at least one more member is confirmed by the Senate.

Reaction to Reagan's move was swift.

"We are appalled by the abrupt firing of three dedicated servants of civil rights," said John E. Jacob, president of the National Urban League. "The administration's move is an insult to the civil rights community and to the Congress which has been searching for ways to preserve an effective Civil Rights Commission."

Joaquin Avila, president and general counsel of the Mexican American Legal Defense and Education Fund, said the firing was "both illegal and destructive to the fabric of civil rights."

Referring to the fired commissioners, Avila said, "Their only fault has been to denounce publicly this administration's efforts to dismantle federal divil rights enforcement."

Negotiations have been under way in the Senate toward a compromise that would expand the commission, allowing the current members to remain on the job and some of Reagan's nominees to be swornin.

Marine security described as inadequate

WASHINGTON — The first of the Marines injured in the Beirut bombing came back to America on Tuesday as the administration dispatched its top officials to explain why their barracks was so easily penetrated.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger briefed the Senate Armed Services Committee in a closed session and chairman John Tower emerged saying "It is the consensus of the committee that security was not adequate."

"Quite clearly, every security measure was not taken," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, DMass.

There was a call from House leaders that the families of the injured be flown to Europe to be with their hospitalized loved ones.

Meanwhile, the count of the dead in Sunday's explosion at the Marine headquarters rose to 214. The bodies of 197 already were undergoing processing and identification in Frankfurt, Germany. They will be flown to Dover Air Force Base in Delaware but no date has been set.

Secretary of State George Shultz told a news conference that security in Beirut was not as tight as officials would like because the Marines were at an operating airport.

"Naturally you make decisions that involve some sort of balance between security risks on one hand and what it takes for an airport to operate on the other," Shultz said. "I think that certainly in the light of this terrible tragedy that balance needs to be shifted and the emphasis on security will have to be heightened very significantly."

The secretary's news conference was concentrated on the American landings on the Caribbean island of Grenada.

Rally group seeks to educate public

By CAMDEN PIERCE
Collegian Correspondent

The rally organized to protest U.S. involvement in Grenada and Lebanon yesterday at the University of Massachusetts was only one project of a campus organization's drive to "agitate and educate" the public.

Jerry Fishbein, a member of the Western Massachusetts Latin American Solidarity Committee (WMLASC) for the past year and a half, described the purpose and the frustrations of his organization.

"We're starting an outreach and education drive, not so much to get people into (WMLASC), but to get people acting and aware of the situation in Latin America," he said. Here at the University of Massachusetts, he added, "a lot of people are against U.S. policy, but don't feel involvement is necessary."

Formed 10 years ago in reaction to U.S. involvement in the overthrow of Salvador Allende, then president of Chile, WMLASC is "dedicated to building solidarity with the struggles for national liberation, self-determination, popular resistance to economic exploitation, socio-political oppression, and anti-imperialist intervention in the Third World and here in the United States," according to the WMLASC charter, "Principles Of Unity." In 1979 WMLASC had over 50 people organized into task forces in support of the Successful Nicaraguan Revolution. Now there are only about 15 active members, Fishbein said.

Angela Keefe, another WMLASC member, said the main focus of her group this semester "is to bring the issues of international American policy into the forefront of student consciousness, and to try to organize people against U.S. policy in Latin America, and to support revolutionary movements in Latin America."

Members said they are "strongly supporting" a national march on Washington Nov. 12 to demonstrate against U.S. policy in Latin America. Said Keefe, "National demonstrations are important, but what's important after Nov. 12 is grass-roots organization and action." Leaning forward in her seat, she added, "Underline 'action!'"

Professor discusses Lebanese conflict

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Staff

The Reagan Administration's increasing hard line in Lebanon, calling it the "linchpin of the strategic Middle East" will make it "extremely difficult" for the United States to extricate itself from that area, professor Fred Lawson of Smith College said Tuesday night.

Lawson's discussion, sponsored by the University of Massachusetts History Club, took the form of a brief history of the Lebanese civil war followed by a question and answer period with the standing room only crowd.

Lawson said the conflict in Lebanon is based on the escalation of social class differences in the mid-seventies. These conflicts were due to a combination of lost autonomy partly due to the presence of foreign banking concerns in Lebanon, and the rise in unemployment and increasingly unstable economic outlook.

Lawson said the forces seeking power in Lebanon view the United States as partial to the "neo-imperialists" who they are in conflict with, and said he is "not surprised" at the deaths of the 200-plus Marines in a terrorist bombing incident Sunday.

"It saddens me that there is so little concern or consciousness on the part of the government that they undertook such a crazy mission as sending Americans into Lebanon," Lawson said.

Lawson also said it would be logical to have a peacekeeping force in Lebanon if someone could be found with "no vested interests in that area."

"France and the United States have historically had ties with exactly those parts of Lebanon that are being contested," said Lawson.

Lawson said he feels the Reagan Administration is pushing its interests so strongly in Lebanon because of the re-election campaign coming up and is perhaps "using Margaret Thatcher's success in the Falklands" as a model for his own success.

Lawson said the forces fighting for control in Lebanon are "rational, self-motivated people fighting for political goals" and denounced President Reagan's comment about "the bestial nature of those who would assume power."

"He is engaging in demagoguery. He shows a very ethnocentric and colonial attitude" said Lawson. "I can see no good reason for the Marines to be there."

CATE guide gets a new look

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Correspondent

With the recent release of "On The Other Hand X", the tenth edition of the Course and Teacher Evaluation, come several noticeable changes.

The most evident changes in this semester's edition are the change of the name from "On The Other Hand" to "CATE", and the addition of advertising.

Lauren Bertsch, chair of the Undergraduate Student Senate Academic Affairs committee, said the guide first came out five years ago as a student alternative to University course guides, and so was named "On The Other Hand." But since then, "CATE was the name most often used in reference to the guide, so we decided to make it more prominent on the cover," she said.

Advertising was included this semester "to increase our funds so that we could give the guide a more professional look," Bertsch said. "With the additional funds from the advertising, we were able to use a full-color cover for this issue."

Bertsch said she also hopes the color cover will attract students to pick up the book.

In addition to these changes, the "Index of Distinguished Professors and Teaching" was reduced in this issue to include only awards given for teaching ability, instead of including awards for research and other work, Bertsch said. She said this was done because CATE is primarily a teaching guide, and also to show that the majority of awards given in higher education are for research, not teaching.

Bertsch also explained that the evaluation forms CATE uses are not those distributed in classrooms. "We do not have access to those evaluations, so ours are mailed directly to individual students," she said.

Bertsch gave credit to CATE coordinator Joanne Kasper for most of the changes. Kasper "spent a great deal of time this summer working on a newer, better issue," she said.

Job offers down 35 percent from '82

By TOM KELLEY
Collegian Correspondent

The job outlook for the class of '83 has been dim.

According to the College Placement Council, the number of job offers reported for bachelor degree candidates is down 35 percent from last year.

"This was undoubtedly the worst situation we've faced in the last ten years," said Arthur L. Hilson, director of the University of Massachusetts Placement Service.

Hilson attributed the bleak job situation to the present state of the economy and the fact that employers had to make fewer employment offers because graduates were more frequently accepting their first of second offers instead of entertaining five or six as in past years.

In contrast to previous years, non-technical graduates fared better than technical graduates.

"Liberal arts students are extremely marketable," said Hilson. "They can fit in from one end of the job spectrum to the other."

Services offered at the Placement Service include resume and interview workshops, an aggressive outreach program to prospective employers, an on-campus recruiting program and a variety of other services designed to enhance a student's chances of finding a job upon graduation.

"We have declared war on unemployment for '84," Hilson said.

In an effort to encourage students to take advantage of the Placement Service, located in Hampshire House, the office is offering a free copy of the $10 College Placement Annual to students who bring in a copy of their resume. The manual includes occupational needs anticipated by more than 1,200 corporate and governmental employers.

Hilson and his staff are enthusiastic about the coming year and the success of the Placement Service but said, "It can only work if students take the first step."

Child care in high demand in Amherst area

Editor's Note: This is the first in a three-part series on child care in the area.

Because many parents want to increase their professional, educational and financial opportunities, the demand for child care in the Amherst area is increasing.

PLAYTIME - Teri-Jean and Chelsea cross the swinging bridge in the backyard of the dayeare center.

According to a study made by the Amherst Child Care Committee, child care is "a service that is becoming an increasing national concern reaching across all family income levels, heritages, and geographic areas."

In spite of the 62 child care facilities in Hampshire County, many parents do not know what types of care is available. Once parents find a suitable center they find long waiting lists, and many who finally find an opening discover they cannot afford the weekly fees.

This week the Child Care Committee is sponsoring a warrant at the Town Meeting, requesting the town to fund a position for referral, resource services and record-keeping for families in the area that need day care, said Laverne St. Mary, a committee member and director of the Hampshire College Day Care Center.

Although there are 20 child care centers and preschool facilities in Amherst alone, St. Mary said she has had "parents sign up (for day care) even before they become pregnant."

William F. Field, University of Massachusetts Dean of Students, said child care is part of the University's affirmative action goals.

"I think the fact that the child care system has in it a higher percent of minorities than University figures would support indicate how important it is," Field said. "Many of the students who take advantage of day care could not be students and work at the same time they were raising families."

The UMass Child Care System, which is administered by the Student Affairs Office, includes three full day, year-round centers and an information and referral service. The school of Education has separate part-time programs at the Skinner Laboratory School.

The centers in the UMass system, which include the Grass Roots Day School, New World Day School and North Village Children's Center provide day care for student parents and full-time working families, including single parents and Third World families. Each of the centers offers a multicultural curriculum and encourages the participation of families in planned activities, said Elizabeth Perkins, director of the UMass child care system.

The campus centers were originally opened to serve student families and followed the academic calendar, closing for the summer, intersession and spring break. When the centers started offering longer hours and full-year service, university faculty and staff started using them more frequently. Now, roughly one third of the families using the system are not students, Perkins said.

The child care system is funded by parent fees, federal funds from the Undergraduate and Graduate Student Senates, the Commuter Area Government, and state funds allocated through the Student Affairs Office, Perkins said.

NIGHTROVERS: PRIME-TIME SECURITY

By TRICIA A. YACOVONE
Collegian Staff

At 8:30 p.m., the phone rings. The person on the other end of Annemarie Ott's line says, "I need some help at Chadbourne."

"Bill, we need someone else to go to Chadbourne. Who do you want to move?" she asks.

"I think we can send over this woman from Gorman," answers Bill Murray.

No, it's not a scene from television's Saturday Night live, It's a Saturday night, live from the University of Massachusetts campus, and this Bill Murray is the head supervisor for Housing Security.

With the Halloween weekend just a few days away, students will be thinking about whether or not there will be a repeat performance of last year's stringent security measures employed over this holiday weekend.

And from all indications, it looks like the prime-time players of Housing Security will be supplying on-campus residents with a re-run, complete with 24-hour coverage of the dormitories and a ban on all non-residents from entering the dormitories, Murray says.

Murray, with Tom Jango, supervises the three roving supervisors, or simply "rovers" as they are called, located in the Northeast/Sylvan, Orchard Hill/Central or Southwest residential areas of campus, and all the receptionists working in the lobbies of individual dormitories.

They're also the people who knock the can out of the door, the can you jammed in so the door would stay open while you ran over to see your friend in the neighboring dormitory. Fortunately, they are usually long-gone on their journey to check all the dormitories on campus by the time you return to curse about the locked door.

At about 9 p.m., Murray or Jango leaves the Student Security Office down the hall from the Campus Police Headquarters in Dickinson to start their five- to six-hour trek around campus that brings them to Sylvan, Northeast, then Orchard Hill and Central, and finally to Southwest. They make sure all doors are locked, the receptionists are not drinking on duty and that there are no broken windows in any of the dormitories.

Murray agreed with Howie Axelrod, the rover for the Orchard Hill/Central area of campus that their jobs are important for the campus security, in an interview Saturday night.

"It's a shame we have to have security, but (very few people) have respect for property," Axelrod said.

Jerry Epstein, the rover for Northeast/Sylvan said, "We can't totally deter crime and vandalism, but we do the best we can."

LOCKED TIGHT (Everything's alright) -- Sophomore Tom Muirhead, a housing security supervisor, checks a Prince House door.

All agreed that the main causes of trouble were partying and drinking and people coming in from other dormitories or off-campus.

Another service the security system provides is for individuals, especially women, walking home at night.

Students can request an escort any night from 8 p.m. to 1 a.m. by calling the Student Security office at 545-2123. If the student for example wants to travel from Southwest to Orchard Hill, the walk is usually split between the two rovers' working in the areas so neither of them have to be away from their areas for very long. Since previous attempts at an escort service have usually been short-lived at UMass, a natural concern would be how long this one is going to last.

Murray said, "I like the idea behind it (the Escort Service), but if people don't utilize it, it'll be phased out. But if we've got it and people like it, we'll keep it."

The other way students are provided with security is through more stringent dormitory security and special attention by the rovers in critical areas.

Because of the recent assaults in Southwest's John Quincy Adams, that dormitory has a rigorous system arranged for entry. First a visitor must have the receptionist call the resident of the dormitory to make sure the resident is actually in the dormitory. Next, the visitor must sign in and show proof of identification and walk to the other side of the lobby to be met by the resident and to have his or her hand stamped. Only then will the visitor be permitted to enter.

"JQA has had a lot of problems. The longer the wait, they'll (potentially troublesome visitors)) mellow out," Murray said.

Because of the rape that occurred outside of Butterfield, Murray said, the rovers have increased their activity there. "Breaks are taken up there if they have to be taken," he said, and the fires at Crampton have resulted in the same measures being taken at the dormitory.

Although to some people there are more glamorous or exciting jobs than sitting in the lobby of a dormitory until 3 a.m., or roving aroung campus on weekend nights, at least a few of Housing Security's employees think the job is fun and important.

Marie Gilespie, the coordinator at Moore House in Southwest said, to her, the idea of the service is important and "worthwhile."

"Watching all the dorms is such an important thing and the whole system works so well. They (the supervisors and the office in general) are prepared to handle situations they don't expect," she said.

Gilespie, who said she "Likes the job a lot," is in charge of scheduling and training the receptionists who work in the dormitory, as well as seeing that all acitivities are run smoothly within the dormitory.

Mike Abbatessa, Saturday night's supervisor for Southwest saw his job on a more philosophical level.

"I'm doing something positive for the university - trying to stop some negative things that happen," he said.

RESIDENT ASSISTANTS COMPLEMENT SECURITY

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

If you didn't look too closely at the hands of some Southwest residents, you might think they'd been out drinking or dancing the night before.

But the red stamps on their hands don't say "Blue Wall" or "Hangar," they say "John Quincy Adams," and their, "two for one" means people, not beverages.

Residential Assistants have more to contend with lately than students who are looking to put their eardrums out of commission for life or people who arrange to live with their boyfriend or girlfriend -- without telling their roommate.

They're the ones who have to contend with people who happen to slip past security in one way or another.

HAND STAMP--Ana Cristina Cornea (right) stamps the hand of Maureen Riccio in a prodecure now familiar to guests of JQA residents.

And the danger, as many R.A.s say is not in watching for broken doors or windows where people might sneak in -- because they know assailants can stroll right through the door.

"It's not that security people aren't doing their jobs," said S.E. Chase, an R.A. in Emerson House in Southwest. "Residents let assailants in sometimes,too, without even knowing it. Sometimes people who want to meet people will sign others in who they don't even know for a party someone else might be having--a 'friend of a friend' type thing. Sometimes people have to go on an errand and leave the locked door on the side of the building open--you never know how many people can fly in that way."

Chase noted that after the person is in, they can become obstinate or too drunk, or enter in that condition.

Northeast, everyone thinks, is not such a rowdy area, but it isn't lax when it comes to security.

"Every now and then, I'll spot a person I don't think belongs on my floor," Diane Spagnoli, an R.A. in Leach House said.

"If I see somebody roaming the halls looking for someone and they look like they're not really looking for anyone or anything, I'll go up to them and ask them whether they have an escort. If they say no, or have no answer, I'll just ask to escort them out."

Spagnoli agrees that people are too nice in letting people in, as they exit, for instance.

Events at John Quincy Adams tower and Butterfield dormitory show the possibility of danger on campus—what is most sobering is that it could happen again no matter how tight the security.

Resident assistants want to avoid that.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Gaining power through faith

Sometimes the future looks so gloomy.

There's no jobs for college graduates, the environment is polluted with toxic wastes, the arms race keeps escalating, and Reagan and his pals in Washington continue to play "macho, macho man" in Central America, and Lebanon, and now Grenada. Sometimes it really looks like we've got a depressing future ahead of us.

Miriam Zoll

But actually, it's the present foreign policies and administration that is depressing, not our future. No one knows what's going to happen in 1984. Many people look ahead and envision a nuclear holocaust, or a war in Central America or Lebanon but these are only speculations, and pessimistic predictions.

Other people tend to shrug off the deaths of the 214 U.S. Marines who were killed over the weekend in Lebanon. Maybe Lebanon is too far away for some of us to mourn over. Maybe it's easier to shut out the bad news, and all the crazy thoughts about America entering another war, or sending the Euromissiles into Western Europe despite international protests. Maybe living in the 80's is easier if we stop trying to control our lives and the future, and let whatever happens just happen.

Last weekend I met some people who convinced me that people have the power to make social changes, even in the midst of a never ending feeling of doom. I went to the all day conference called "The Sixties Speaks to the Eighties" at UMass and the panel of speakers were people who had been involved with civil rights organizations like SNCC (Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee) and CORE (Congress for Racial Equality).

In the early 60's, college students, went down to places like Alabama, South Carolina and Mississippi.

They lived with black families, and saw and felt the social and economic racism that had festered for so long in the deep South. Most of the SNCC workers were in the south registering black people to vote. The southern bigots and racists weren't too pleased with "Yankees" coming into their territory to undo the segregation and oppression they worked so hard to establsh and maintain.

One of the speakers, a man named James Farmer who had been with CORE since 1942, organized the first "Freedom Ride" in 1961. He told us that some of the white people in Anniston, Mississippi reacted violently against the Freedom Riders and shot the tires off the Greyhound bus they were traveling in. Then they set the bus on fire and waited outside the door, with clubs and crowbars, to beat and kill some of the thirteen riders who were still inside the bus.

While I was listening to these people tell their "horror" stories about their work in the south, I wondered what ever gave them the idea that they could change, or lessen, the racial problems in the south. One of the speakers answered my question when she explained that SNCC members gained power from having faith in themselves, people, and the community.

In the years since the 60's, it seems like a lot of people have lost faith in their neighbors and communities, not to mention the government. Many of us may never experience the same feelings of faith and hope the former civil rights workers spoke about. But people haven't lost the ability to feel, or possess optimistic visions of the future.

This past weekend, over one million people in Western Europe demonstrated against the United States' plan to deploy the Cruise and Pershing II missiles later on this fall. Last Sunday, over 3,000 people from the New England states marched from Cambridge to the Boston Common to show Reagan, the "nuclear madman," that they want to stop the deployment of these Euromissiles. At UMass during the fall semester of 1982, over 10,000 students attended the anti-nuclear rally and over one thousand students registered to vote. Last August 7th, over 300,000 Americans marched through the streets of Washington D.C. shouting "Jobs, Peace and Freedom!" And this November 12th, there is going to be a national demonstration to show our current administration that the majority of the American public is against U.S. intervention in Central America.

People are still concerned with putting "people before profits" like the movements of the 60's were.

Our generation has been labeled "apathetic," and some of us even accuse ourselves of being so. But do we really not care about our future? Is it true that we don't care what Reagan does in Central America or Grenada?

When we take the time to think about all these things, most of us discover that we do care. For our own sake, I hope we do because if we don't care now, who's going to care later?

Life during WARTIME

At least 214 Marines were killed in Lebanon Sunday in what has been called "the most carnage since the Vietnam War." Monday, Marine reinforcements were packing for Beirut, led by Maj. Paul Kelley, the Marine who recently "mistook" Lebanon for Vietnam in a press conference, and apologized by saying it was a Freudian slip. And all this after a shakeup of high-level National security advisors, leaving the U.S. extremely vulnerable in sensitive international affairs. Before reaching Beirut, these Marines made a pre-dawn attack on the small but strategic island of Barbados. The country was "secured" last night, and the "brutal group of leftist thugs" (Reagan) that commandered a coup of the country last week were under U.S. control.

Sound confusing yet distressingly interrelated? Do you get the impression that there will be serious repercussions from this barrage of events, all of which no one has been able to understand or explain yet? Do you think that things will get only worse? If you do, then you're not alone.

Havoc on the international scene has caused students on this campus to finally wake up and take part in debates on issues ranging from U.S. intervention overseas to citizen participation in affecting policy changes through organizing.

Yesterday on the steps of the Student Union, more than 150 students (and others) expressed their views (and came close to fisticuffs several times) on the U.S. invasion of Grenada, and on the massacre of U.S. Marines in Lebanon. Of the twenty people that spoke while I was there, there were twenty different causes and solutions to the problems at hand. Even more abundant were the questions. Does the U.S. have the moral and/or Constitutional right to invade the small Caribbean island of Grenada? Were the countries in the area (the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States) consulted, and were recommendations heeded, as Secretary of State George Schultz said they were? The participants of the coup that took over last week and executed most of the members of the previous government may have been a "brutal group of leftist thugs" as Reagan has so hastily called them. But isn't this harsh rhetoric and military action a blatant coverup of an attempt to protect our financial interests (shipping lanes, etc.) in the area? Did the action of the U.S. in invading Grenada constitute an act of war? an unconstitutional police action? or a legitimate response of one ally to another in dire need of help?

I wouldn't pretend to know the answers to any of the above. The political and moral positions on "either side" of the issue of U.S. involvement in the affairs of developing nations are so wrought with contradiction that it is absurd to embrace either side. Unfortunately, most people choose one or the other without seeing the contradictions or analyzing the middle grounds of the debate. People are nervous. And when they get nervous they do surprising things, as evidenced yesterday outside the Student Union.

Students listened to the views of others for hours, and spoke their minds in a somewhat responsible fashion at an "open mike session." Last night people crowded into Campus Center rooms to discuss and plan immediate responses and plans of action for organizing against the recent U.S. militarism. People seemed scared of faraway events as they seldom have in the recent past. In the midst of almost complete international chaos, it's good to see students waking up. I guess "the War" has finally hit home.

Letters

Confusion over sexism arises

To the Editor,

I write this letter to set the record straight, to put statements which I made in proper context and to correct serious misquotes in the article entitled "Male Professors Make More" by Diane Lane on October 17,1983.

On Friday, October 14, 1983, I received a telephone call from the reporter who reminded me that she had interviewed me earlier about sex discrimination on this campus. She then paraphrased Dr. Charlotte Rahaim's interview such that she inferred that Rahaim's statements were critical of the current Centralized Affirmative Action. (At that point I began to take notes.)

I asked the reporter if she would read Rahaim's statement to me. My notes show that she responded "Affirmative Action is asleep on campus." I then asked her to explain in what context Dr. Rahaim made the statement.

The reporter explained to me that Dr. Rahaim said "Affirmative Action is asleep on this campus because there has only been a 1.9 percent increase in female faculty since 1970."

I responded to this information in some detail, stating that I did not see that statement (in its context) as one that was critical of the current affirmative action staff, rather it seemed to me that Rahaim's opinion was that over the last 12 years Affirmative Action on this campus had not worked well for women.

I could neither confirm nor take issue with Rahaim's research since my office has not done a longitudinal study. But if Rahaim's research is correct, I would, unfortunately have to agree that Affirmative Action has been asleep.

This Centralized Affirmative Action Office has only been operating for the last fifteen months. Our prime focus has been to open opportunities for women and minorities, not to review or evaluate past efforts. Rather, we are addressing current problems and developing strategies for systemic change which will lead to increased hiring, tenure and retention of women and minorities.

While getting women hired is still a problem, tenure and retention is an even greater problem. Each department interviews and selects its faculty and determines which of its members is to receive tenure.

There are historical road blocks in terms of perceptions of the competence of women and certain minorities. Across the country where departmental tenure committees are comprised entirely or almost entirely of white males it is difficult to get women and minorities tenured in some of these departments.

Although I have had pleasant and candid experiences with the Collegian reporters, I must say that I will find it difficult to grant interviews to Collegian reporters if my remarks are to be taken out of context or if by your actions I am led to believe that the only purpose for the interview is to create dissention.

Black Affairs

Eighties question the sixties

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

The decade of the sixties was a turbulant period in America during which time women and youths revolted against a stringent society and achieved milestones for their future survival in the United States.

For blacks, the Sixties was a time of struggle with a society which denied to recognize them as humans, less Americans.

During this time, blacks were determined to abort the vestiges of slavery, an institution which though legally "abolished" was living in the heart, mind and callous acts of many Americans.

But the sixties was not the beginning of black uprising, it was merely a continuation of it.

Protest was deeply rooted in the Afro-American experience. When Africans were forcefully brought to the new world, they expressed opposition to enslavement by escaping, self-mutilation, passive reluctance, starvation and suicide by drowning. Thus, when blacks revolted against white's discriminatory and segregatory laws after they gained their freedom, it was a natural act.

Lynching, terror and numerous degrading acts of discrimination brought about the Civil Rights Movements, which started at the end of the nineteenth century. Though passive at the start, this first movement opened doors for the revolt of the sixties.

Blacks first tried to passively gain human rights with mass marches and demonstrations as popular acts.

The most instrumental non-violent group then was the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC) led by Martin Luther King, Jr.

Violent treatment of blacks by whites and the failure of civil rights enforcement led to a militant direct action phase of the movement.

The Student nonviolent Coordination Committee (SNCC), an organization formed of students from the black colleges of the South was the most dynamic in the fight against segregation.

SNCC's main purposes were to desegregate public facilities, and register Southern blacks to vote. It also attempted to organize a third political party in Mississippi and Alabama.

Stunned by reprisals, SNCC denounced nonviolence as a technique after Stokely Carmichael succeeded John Lewis as the national chairman in 1966.

Consequently, members of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE), who like SNCC faced reprisals adopted Carmichael's "Black Power" slogan in 1965.

Segregation and discrimination were implemented in its hardest form in the South due to its history of slavery there.

Though the Civil Rights Movement was a revolt against these acts, and although some laws were enacted giving blacks more rights as Americans, blacks should reflect more on the sixties to bring about more evident changes in the '80s.

Ex activists trace roots of the beginning of activism

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Saturday at Mahar Auditorium, friends who haven't seen each other for years, met once again. This reunion was not held for nostalgic purposes nor did it have an antiquity interest.

Instead, it was held for the same cause these friends met twenty or more years ago; for "activism" and "social change."

The Sixties Speak to the Eighties - a Conference on Activism and Social Change not only brought together old friends from the Civil Rights Movement but also provided the audience with an overview of the decade.

Esther Terry, spokesperson for Chancellor Joseph Duffey, gave the welcome address while Sara Lenox, of the Social Thought and Political Economy Program at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst led the introduction.

The purpose of the conference, Lenox said, was not to point out the failure, but the successess and achievements of the sixties.

"If the Civil Rights Movements had not come about, its very possible that the student's movement and feminist movement (would not have) also never have originated," Lenox said.

The panelist for the first section of the conference entitled "Roots of the Sixties" included Anne Braden, a journalist active in Southern civil rights, civil liberties, labor and peace movements for 35 years and James Farmer, founder and former national director of the Congress of Racial Equality (CORE). Moderator of the panel was Arlene Avakian from the Women's Studies Program of UMass.

Braden challenged the "Jim Crow" laws in her state when she bought a house in a white neighborhood then sold it to a black family. She and her husband were sentenced to a 15 year jail term.

Braden's message for the audience was important she said. Her message was to historically set the record straight on what the United States needs to hear about the Sixties.

If the U.S. denies to do so, it would "lead (the nation) down the road of destruction," she said.

Braden said, the sixties is a period in history which is sometimes seen as if almost never happened.

"Blacks in this country were able to organize into a movement strong enough to challenge and say to this nation 'you have to make room for us and if you can't do it we'll create a whole new society'," Braden said.

The direction in which this movement was moving was to make the needs of blacks important, but it was misunderstood because of racism.

Racism is, Braden said, an organization of society established in such a way that that society is run by whites to benefit whites.

Braden, whose experience in the movement "crippled (her) for life," wrote The Wall Between, based on her knowledge and involvement in the movement.

"One of the noblest period of American history, a time when blacks and whites, people young and old rose above themselves," Farmer said of the sixties. Unknown people became famous and also found something to believe in.

These people were living without a tomorrow and were not sure if they were to have a tomorrow, Farmer said of the student volunteers from SNCC and CORE who went to Mississippi in 1964 for demonstrations.

"The sixties are the roots for the eighties, but the sixties had roots in the fourties," he said.

Farmer read Mohadma Ghandi as a nonviolent basis for destruction of a violent institution, and ultimately applied and adapted the Ghandian belief into CORE.

In the first chapter of CORE, in April, 1942 in Chicago, Farmer remembered the first sit-in. Although dozen other chapters in the North were doing the same, "nobody knew about it." However, CORE's first sit-in was successful.

"The technique of non-violent had work," Farmer said. "This was a movement and idea which time had come," Farmer said.

John Bracey of the Afro-American studies department of the University of Massachusetts moderated the second section of the conference, "SNCC and the Resurgence of Activism."

Speaking here were Jim Forman, Executive Secretary and International Affairs Director of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), and incumbent Chairperson of the Unemployed and Poverty Action Council and Martha Prescod Norman, SNCC field worker and fundraiser.

Prescod-Norman talked about her experience in SNCC. She said she was attracted by SNCC's system of organization 'No one knows better of a situation than those who lived it," she said of the assumptions made of the period.

"Nobody was singing 'we want to be segregated'," she said.

Forman said most youngsters went underground because of family opposition. His own mother once told him to leave the civil rights alone, to which he responded,

"We are going to make more changes in 5 years than what has been done in 50."

Civil Rights-preserving past for the future

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
and MICHELLE HYDE

Although there is currently no mass movement to join like the civil rights movement of the 1960's, people can still struggle today to fight the injustices of the 1980's.

This was one of many messages presented in the second part of last weekend's conference on activism and social change at the University of Massachusetts, entitled, "The Sixties Speaks to the Eighties."

"This is about agitation and activism" said Johnnetta Cole Associate Provost at UMass who acted as moderator.

"Power concedes nothing without a struggle. If the 1960's could understand that, do we today not have the responsibility to understand it too?" Cole said.

Following her speech Dr. Cole introduced a panel of several people who participated in the civil rights movement whom she described as "agitators".

The panel spoke about their involvement and how they got started in civil rights and did not speak on activism for today.

"My feet have followed in the footprints of James Farmer and Martin Luther King but their contribution is much greater than mine," said Thelma Griffith-Johnson, Director of the UMass Office of Affirmative Action.

"I only got into the struggle because they refused to educate my five year old child. I didn't know anything about marching in the south at the time."

Wally Roberts, who was coordinator of the Mississippi Freedom School in 1964 and later became a journalist, said he joined the movement after "staring in disbelief at the level of poverty that the blacks were in," from a bus window in New York City.

"The same kind of racism that killed three civil rights workers in Mississippi when I was there was going to kill hundreds of thousands of people in Vietnam. It became clear then that the rest of my life was going to be with that struggle against racism," Roberts said.

Martin Sklar, founder of several socialist clubs and magazines, said "the civil rights movement was a great breakthrough of all those seeking self determination in the sense that we should struggle for ourselves and move on our own behalf. It began with Rosa Parks and Martin Luther King."

Another activist, Sue Thrasher said as a child she was taught that "all were created equal on the side of God" but then while growing up discovered that others did not feel the same way.

"I began going to Student Nonviolent Coordination Commitee (SNCC) meetings and this changed my life and my naive beliefs of the church. I saw the bigotry and the discrimination and was outraged," she said.

At the conclusion of the speeches a question and answer session began in which the nature of discussion changed from strictly being about the 1960's to more about what can be done in the 1980's including here at UMass.

One of the few students who attended the conference said, "Everyone has talked about their activism in the 1960's and the gains that were made, but what hope do they offer to the 80's and my generation?"

"Freedom is a matter for each of us wherever we are. For me this campus is as much a place as any where freedom can grow," said Griffith-Johnson.

"It is a matter of each of us taking on the struggle for each other. You can't rely on other people but must feel it yourself," she said.

Dance concert will honor Piaf

By JEFF FIEDLER
Collegian Correspondent

Edith Piaf comes alive this weekend on the UMass campus at the Five College Dance Concert to be performed Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 8:00 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. Edith Piaf was a French singer who rose to international acclaim in the late '40s and '50s from singing on the streets of Paris. Although small in physical stature, Piaf had a unique ability to communicate her feelings through songs that touched all those who heard her sing. She could control an audience with her amazing charisma. Richard Jones, an Associate Professor of Dance at the University, will attempt to portray this great artist in his dance "That Voice". Like Piaf who communicated through her songs, Mr. Jones will be communicating his message through dance. The piece will include songs that were sung by Piaf as well as actual slides of her. Rebecca Nordstrum, a Hampshire College Dance faculty member, will dance the solo role. The Concert will include works from other faculty members in the Five Colleges and is sure to be an event not to be missed.

Minutewomen upset by Harvard, 3-2

Defense falters in O.T. loss

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

CAMBRIDGE - As the playoffs approach, teams like to fine-tune themselves and gain some momentum. Yesterday the third-ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team moved in the opposite direction as it was upset by 11-3 Harvard, 3-2 in overtime.

The Minutewomen had one of their worst games of the year yesterday and the defense gave up three goals, the most during the season in a single game. The UM defense, which has been winning for the team all season, had problems staying with the Harvard attackers, who were trying hard for the victory.

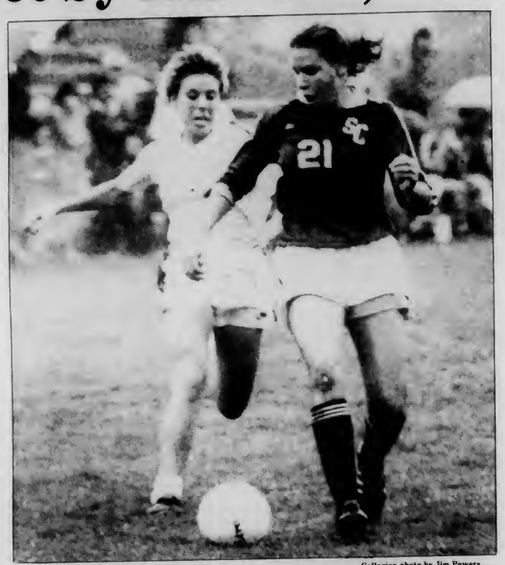
"Harvard deserves the win," UMass Coach Kalekeni Banda said after the disappointing loss. "They were better and much tougher. We were shakey all around."

UMass struggled through the first half and the score at half time was 0-0 despite a physical Crimson team. In the second half, Harvard dominated offensively and the only reason UMass stayed in the game was because of its first goal scored on a penalty kick.

Harvard's Wendy Zeeben put her team on top 1-0 with a rocket that sailed just over the crossbar and past the reach of Minutewomen goaltender Lisa Ellis at 34:34. Stacey Flionis tied things up for UMass at 36:42 on a penalty kick after Nadia Komarowski was hauled down in the penalty area.

Massachusetts, now 9-2-3, seemed in command when the shot gave the team a 2-1 advantage at 15:54. Flionis stole the ball away and beat one Crimson defender before passing over to Komarowski. She controlled the action by beating another Crimson defender and went in one on one with the Harvard goalkeeper before stuffing the ball in the net.

However, the Harvard offense kept pounding away at the Minutewomen, whose defense was not on top of its game.



"This is the worst I've seen them play," Coach Banda said. "We can play better."

With a little under six minutes left, Harvard's Electa Sedier launched another rocket in the far corner of the net and the score was tied sending the game into overtime.

In the first 10-minute overtime period, the Crimson continued to apply strong offensive pressure and UMass could not convert scoring chances into goals.

Kelly Landry, who has scored in the past seven games for Harvard, gave her team the eventual game winning goal with two seconds remaining in the first overtime with a blast into the corner of the net.

The Minutewomen will finish off their season on Friday when they face Boston College. Because of yesterday's upset, UMass is in a must win situation. UM is number one it its region and needs a victory against B.C. on Friday to have a chance at receiving a bye in the first round of the NCAA Champoinship. With the loss to Harvard, the bye was pushed a little further out of reach.

UMass spikers midterm report card scores an A

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

Here it is! The University of Massachusetts Volleyball team performance grades are in. The fourth ranked UMass spikers have put forth an honor roll effort thus far. Here is the way the grades came out player by player.

Patty Grant is first up. Playing her third year for Elaine Sortino, and second year as captain, she has played very well this year. Patty is the setter for the spikers and has cut down her errors to a minimum this season and has become a great team leader. Grade A.

Joanne Siler, another one of the tri-captains, is also a three year starter. Siler is an excellent offensive player with strong passing serving and spiking skills. Her 'C' for captain is well deserved. Mid term Grade A.

Sally Maher is an aggressive sophomore who plays the net game very well. She is a good passer and server, Maher also possesses a great spike. Mid term Grade A.

Debbie Cole is the only freshman who has started since the start of the season. She is a back court specialist who has come up with some spectacular digs and excellent passes. Mid term grade A-.

Ann Ringrose is another good all around player who plays hard all the time. Ringrose is one of the better passers and, along with a good serve, earns herself a grade of A-.

Michele Barys is a freshman who comes off the bench with a great serve and some blocking and spiking ability, which may need some polish. 'Micky' can be and is counted on to give an honest effort every game. Mid Term B†.

Ellen Deady is yet another freshman on this years squad. Primarily a strong net player (especially blocking) Deady is not afraid to hit the floor for digs. Mid Term B.

Susan Grant rounds out the freshmen. Not called on too often, Grant has played very steadily when beckoned. Grant should be a great setter in the future. Grade B†.

Leslie and Kirsten Smith receive incompletes. Both players were playing at an honor roll clip, but due to injuries have missed some key games.

The coaching staff has done an excellent job with this young team. They have taken a young team and molded them into a winning corps. Mid Term Grade A.

Amherst butchers Wesleyan

By JOHN BADGER
Collegian Correspondent

Amherst College opened their Little Three season Saturday with a 35-7 trouncing of Wesleyan at Pratt Field on Homecoming weekend. "Here comes the meat" echoed through the Cardinal's sideline as the Lord Jeffs entered the field, unaware that the locals would be doing the butchering.

After a scoreless first quarter, Amherst quarterback Jeff Templeton broke through the visiting defense on a keeper to the right side and went 45 yards for the game's first score. Bob Minicus kicked the extra point and Amherst led 7-0.

Wesleyan tied the game on their next possession when quarterback Dave Ross snuck in for six. The play was set up by a 38 yard reception by tight end Pete Bush. Greg Zlotnick connected on the extra point to tie the game.

The Lord Jeffs scored once more before half time. Running back Dave Nurme gained 22 yards off the right side to set up another Templeton sneak, giving Amherst the lead for good with 1:08 left in the half.

The Jeffs opened the third quarter with a 14 play scoring drive that ate up over eight minutes. Nurme, Templeton, and Bob Minicus took turns running the ball for 79 yards. On third and goal from the eight, Templeton went back to pass, found no receivers and scrambled away from would-be sackers, taking the ball in himself for his third touchdown of the day and the 21-7 lead.

The Lord Jeffs put the game out of reach in the fourth quarter, once again using up almost eight minutes running the ball, setting up a 2 yard touchdown run by Minicus.

Defensive back Craig Anderson ended the scoring with a 25 yard off of a Ross interception with 6:14 left in the game, leaving Amherst's undefeated record at home intact.

"The Little Three is our division," asserted head coach Jim Ostendarp. "The other games are important but this rivalry brings the fans." 9000 were on hand to watch the game, almost four times as many as last week's game against Hamilton.

"We asserted the running game and played with good intensity," said Ostendarp. Amherst chalked up 318 yards running, and if they can play with the same intensity against Williams, they should take their third straight Little Three championship. The Lord Jeffs take their 3-1-1 record to Tufts next week.

UMass crew races in Regatta

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Correspondent

Not only is the Head of the Charles Rowing Regatta the world's largest, single day, rowing event, but it is also the most important single race for the University of Massachusetts racing crews during the fall season.

Coach David Kumlin supervised the entry and competition of UMass' best men's and women's boats, making sure both were practicing on the Charles River course Saturday, the day before the race.

"This race is important to us because it gives us a chance to compare our boats against our spring competition," Kumlin explained before the event.

"This fall we had a newer, less-experienced crew team so we decided to work on technique and team work before we concentrated on power," noted coxswain Dave Croke. "When this race is over, we'll examine how we did and decide what needs the most attention during our winter and spring training."

With this in mind and realizing that 60,000 people would be watching them race, the two crews appeared nervously excited while launching their boats from Magazine Beach on the Charles River.

The women's crew raced in the heavyweight division for 8 person boats. They finished in 28th place out of 40, and beat many of their Division II rivals.

The men's crew finished in 35th position out of 40.

Soccer battles Westfield today

By MIKE LEVINE
Collegian Correspondent

Here's one from the 'good news, bad news' department. The good news is that the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team (1-8-5) will have a chance to break out of their season-long drought against a Division III team this afternoon at Boyden Field. The bad news? Westfield State, the team UMass is playing is 11-2-1!

Of course, when a team scores just six goals in 14 games, they can't expect to win too many games, but according to UMass goalkeeper Donald Donahue, "It doesn't show how well we've been playing. We've dominated most of our games, but we just can't seem to be able to score."

The UMass defense did a good job last Saturday in its 1-1 tie with Holy Cross, limiting the Crusaders to five shots on goal. But according to Minutemen Coach Jeff Gettler, "A good defense doesn't mean a thing if you can't put the ball in the net."

The Minutemen played a rough and tumble game against an aggressive Holy Cross team, and they should be in for a similar type of game this afternoon. Game time is 2:00 p.m. This may be the day that the UMass offense finally breaks loose.

US increases troops in Grenada

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) — The United States landed about 800 paratroopers in Grenada today to reinforce the almost 2,000-strong U.S. invasion force and began evacuating American citizens. Pentagon sources reported six U.S. troops killed, eight missing and 33 wounded in fighting so far.

A Cuban government announcement in Havana said six U.S. helicopter gunships attacked Cuban positions on Grenada before dawn today, destroying the Cubans' main building at the Point Salines airfield. It said the "casualties are numerous. But survivors will continue fighting."

White House spokesman Larry Speaks said 61 Americans were en route to Charleston, S.C. on the first evacuation flight from Point Salines. There are about 1,000 Americans on the island, many of them medical students.

Pentagon sources, who disclosed the casualties and the number of 82nd Airborne reinforcements, said the Americans were encountering stiff resistance from hundreds of Cubans and Grenadians. The military sources, who spoke on the condition that they not be identified, said U.S. forces were being sniped at and that fighting was continuing around both of Grenada's airports.

Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger declared earlier in the day, "There will be some more casualties because the price of freedom is high."

The White House said today the evacuation of Americans from the island nation of Grenada had begun, with a U.S. military plane heading for South Carolina with 61 U.S. citizens on board.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes said he understood most were not students, but American citizens living or visiting in the country.

Jamaican Prime Minister Edward Seaga said he was told 12 Cubans and three civilians were killed on Grenada when the invasion by Marines and Army Rangers began Tuesday. Cuba said six U.S. helicopter gunships attacked Cuban positions today, along with jets and artillery. President Fidel Castro vowed his men will not surrender.

On Tuesday, the Pentagon said two members of the invasion force had been killed and 23 wounded on the Caribbean island.

At the news conference with Weinberger, Gen. John Vessey, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said he hopes U.S. forces can be withdrawn from Grenada within "days or weeks."

Vessey confirmed that the invasion force, consisting largely of Marines and Army airborne units, "got more resistance than we expected" when it began the surprise attack before dawn Tuesday.

Student senate receives two resignations

By LISA-MARIE CANTWELL
and JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night accepted the resignations of the acting Student Attorney General and the UMass representative to the State Student Association of Massachusetts (SSAM), while Student Government Association co-president Charlene Allen postponed her official resignation by one week.

Allen announced last week she was going to resign because of financial problems which stem primarily from having been denied Massachusetts resident status. Allen said the move by the senate last week to support her appeal to the University Residency Board was submitted and "while nothing definite has happened, there has been enough to make me want to postpone the decision until next week, if people can stand the uncertainty," she said.

While nothing definite has happened, there has been enough to make me want to postpone the decision until next week, if people can stand the uncertainty.
— Charlene Allen, SGA co-president

Acting Student Attorney General Dakin Ferris attributed his resignation to failure in maintaining "the academic standards that I have set for myself," along with what he called "inherent constitutional conflicts" between his office and the SGA president's office.

A motion was later introduced which would amend the SGA constitution and transfer the authority to appoint the student attorney general from the SGA president to a two-thirds vote of the senate. The motion was automatically tabled to the Governmental Affairs Committee for further study.

UMass SSAM representative Fran Pheeny said she resigned from the state-wide lobby group, because of "personal reasons and lack of organization within SSAM."

In other business, the Senate loaned the UMass Sporting Goods Co-op $3,750 so the co-op could open for the semester. The co-op had its entire $2,300 worth of sporting goods stock stolen over the summer.

The business also had a $600 cash deficit at the end of last semester, "but we had more inventory than we started out with, so it really wasn't a loss," Dave Fechetti, the co-op accountant said.

"We've got a whole new management team this semester," Fechetti said. "You can be sure everything will be accounted for, because I am taking full responsibility," he said.

The co-op is a student controlled business, and received over $10,000 in revenue last year, Fechetti said.

Senator Jim Finkle urged support of the loan because the co-op allows "students to get things at discount prices and provides jobs at the same time."

The Senate also loaned $3,700 to students who want to start a new snack bar in Pierpont dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area. The snack bar has been in the planning stages since last year said manager Joe Palumbo, and has received some equipment from a snack bar in John Adams dormitory.

State Senate votes on bills:

Aid seekers must register

BOSTON (AP) — After an emotional two-hour debate centering on patriotism and the need to obey the law, the Massachusetts Senate approved a bill Wednesday barring state scholarship aid for students who fail to register for the draft.

The lawmakers voted 19-14 in favor of the measure after defeating several attempts to weaken the bill. The proposal has already been approved by the House and now needs routine enactment votes before going to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis.

Sen. Francis Doris, D-Revere, said the bill would guarantee the best possible use of scholarship funds and would apply only to a small percentage of young men who fail to comply with the selective service requirements.

"There isn't one of us here who ever hoped the day would come we could see a draft implemented... But those not complying would not receive benefits," he said.

Doris, who led the fight for approval, said government statistics showed 98.2 percent of eligible males had registered nationwide and 94 percent had complied in Massachusetts.

Sen. Dennis McKenna said he was saddened that the bill was even needed.

Drinking age bill is defeated

BOSTON (AP) — The Massachusetts Senate, heeding the advice of its expert on drunken driving, killed a bill Wednesday that would have raised the state drinking age from 20 to 21.

The lawmakers voted 27-7 against raising the age after Sen. Louis Bertonazzi argued that the bill, approved by the House by a 2-to-1 margin, could backfire and cause even more highway deaths.

Bertonazzi, whose Post-Audit and Oversight committee has extensively studied drunken driving, said the bill would prompt many 20-year-olds to drive to the states that surround Massachusetts - all of which would have lower drinking ages.

"We'd be urging them to buy cheap liquor, drink as much as they can and get behind the wheels of their cars and drive home. It doesn't make sense," said Bertonazzi, D-Milford.

Bertonazzi also said a key to combatting drunken driving is to teach young people to drink responsibly in a controlled social atmosphere. Banning alcohol sales to 20-year-olds would urge them "to get involved in glut drinking or pig drinking, in the woods or backseat of cars," he said.

Grenada issues appeal for military withdrawal

WASHINGTON (AP) — Grenada's leftist government issued an emotional appeal to the Organization of American States on Wednesday to demand the immediate withdrawal of American and allied forces.

Ian Jacobs, Grenadian delegate to the OAS, called on the organization "to stop this flagrant act of aggression ... to put an end to the breakdown of international law that is taking place" as a result of Tuesday's military intervention.

But Dominican Prime Minister Eugenia Charles said pro-Western states of the eastern Caribbean sought U.S. military intervention in Grenada because of fear that country's new government might commit aggression against its neighbors.

Jacobs and Charles spoke at an emergency meeting of the Permanent Council of the OAS called at the request of Bolivia to discuss the Grenada question.

Latin American delegations criticized the invasion.

Argentina, Mexico, Peru, Colombia, Bolivia and Ecuador all denounced the U.S. role in the Grenada invasion. Colombian Ambassador Francisco Posadade la Pena spoke for many Latin delegates when he said the intervention constitutes "a frank and open violation" of the OAS principle of non-intervention.

Jacobs, almost shouting at times, ridiculed U.S. administration statements that the intervention was justified by alleged threats to the safety of the estimated 1,000 Americans on the island. Insisting that no U.S. citizen was in danger, Jacobs called the rationale a "smokescreen" to conceal other motives.

USSR says new missiles may stall diplomatic talks

MOSCOW (AP) — President Yuri V. Andropov said Wednesday that continued talks on limiting medium-range nuclear missiles will be "impossible" if NATO puts new ones in western Europe, but the Soviet Union will ease its demands if the deployment plans are scrapped.

He expressed new flexibilitiy on the number of Soviet missiles in Europe and Asia, on the number of nuclear-capable aircraft and on the destruction of missiles that would be eliminated in an agreement.

A Western diplomatic source said the proposals probably would not meet with Western approval, since they required that no new U.S. missiles be deployed. The statement came closer to an actual threat of a Soviet walkout at the Geneva talks than any previous public comment. It followed cryptic statements by other high-ranking Soviet officials who had hinted at a walkout.

He said, "The appearance of new American missiles in western Europe will make a continuation of the present talks in Geneva impossible. On the other hand, the Geneva talks can be continued if the United States does not start actual deployment of the missiles."

The North Atlantic Treaty Organization plans to begin deploying 572 cruise and Pershing 2 missiles in western Europe starting next month if an accord is not first reached in Geneva. U.S. officials say the missiles are needed to counter 243 Soviet SS-20 missiles trained on Europe.

The Soviet leader's statement made it clear the Kremlin is pinning strong hopes on getting NATO leaders to postpone the deployment.

Bush inspects Marine base, says troops shall remain

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) - Vice President George Bush, wearing a helmet and flak jacket, today inspected the devastated Marine base where a bomb killed 219 American servicemen and said "insidious terrorist cowards" will not change U.S. policy.

At dawn, before Bush's arrival, the Marines were fired upon with small arms, mortar and bazookas and fired back, said Maj. Robert Jordan, a Marine spokesman.

Bush, standing before the mountain of rubble where rescuers were still looking for bodies from Sunday's bombing, said: "We're not going to let down friends because of terror."

"We're not going to let a bunch of insidious terrorist cowards shake the foreign policy of the United States," he told reporters. "Foreign policy is not going to be dictated or changed by terror."

Bush later left Lebanon, but his destination was not known.

The latest Pentagon figures placed the death toll from the suicide terrorist bombing at the Marine post to 219 dead and about 70 wounded. The French command today put its casualties at 48 killed, 15 wounded and 10 missing.

Evacuees glad to be home

CHARLESTON, S.C. (AP) — Seventy exuberant evacuees from the embattled island of Grenada landed here Wednesday, expressing their delight at being back on U.S. soil and their thanks for "how well those Rangers came down and saved us."

Several people kissed the ground when they got off the C-141B transport plane carrying 69 Americans and one British civilian to Charleston Air Force Base. Others waved or gave the thumbs-up sign.

"I don't think there's a more beautiful sight then being back in the United States or seeing the Rangers at the True Blue campus to save us," said Jean Joel of Albany, N.Y., a St. George's University Medical student.

Joel said she woke up to shooting about 5:30 a.m. Tuesday, and the U.S. Rangers had secured the campus two hours later.

The students could hear that the fighting was quite fierce, with constant sniper fire and constant passes by American planes. But they said none of those isolated at the campus could see the fighting. "We were too busy being under our beds," said Randall Tressler of Jarrettsville, Md.

"I tell ya, I've been a dove all my life and I just can't believe how well those Rangers came down and saved us," said Jeff Geller of Woodbridge, N.Y.

Until their rescue, the students had been under 24-hour curfew since the coup except for a four-hour period Friday when they were allowed to buy food, they said.

First Lt. George Sillia of the base said a second plane with 70 civilians was scheduled to arrive around 7:30 p.m.

The planes flew from Grenada to Roosevelt Rhoads Naval Base at Puerto Rico before heading to Charleston, he said.

Nuns' murderer confesses

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) - A National Guardsman charged in the murder of four U.S. churchwomen said in a written confession that he raped and killed one of them under orders from a superior.

Carlos Joaquin Contreras, one of five guardsmen accused in the Dec. 2, 1980 slayings, said in the statement that he was acting on orders from Sgt. Luis Antonion Colindres, also charged in the killings.

Contreras's statement quoted Sgt. Colindres as saying he also was acting on orders from superiors. But Contreras said he did not know whom Colindres was referring to.

The confession, taken while Contreras was in jail, was provided by court sources in Zacatecoluca, 35 miles southeast of the capital, where the murder case is being handled. The sources insisted on anonymity. Contreras did not say which woman he killed.

American Maryknoll nuns Ita Ford, 40, and Maura Clarke, 49, both of New York, Ursuline sister Dorothy Kazel, 41, and lay missionary Jean Donovan, 27, both of Cleveland, were driving from an airport to San Salvador when they were abducted and slain a few miles from Zacatecoluca.

It was the second piece of testimony in the case indicating higher orders were involved. Cesar Valle Espinoza, a guardsman called as a witness in the case, testified earlier this year that Colindres had told him he was ordered by superiors to kill the women.

United States government overspends by billions, setting record deficit

WASHINGTON (AP) - The government outspent its income by $195.4 billion in the fiscal year just ended, smashing the all-time deficit record of the previous year by $85 billion.

Fiscal 1983 was the 14th year in a row that the government operated in the red and the 42nd in the last 50 years.

And many in Congress are predicting that no action will be taken to bring deficits under control after next year's election.

Presidential adviser Martin Feldstein told a congressional panel Wednesday that waiting that long "will probably produce a recession in fiscal year 1986."

Last October, the first month of fiscal 1983, officials had estimated the deficit would only be several billion dollars higher than $110.7 billion shortfall of 1982. But projections were raised as high as $210.2 billion during the year and down slightly from that during the summer.

Officials said the final tally reported Wednesday didn't turn out quite as badly as the most recent official estimates because the summer drought, improved economy and lower inflation decreased spending for farm supports, jobless benefits and other purchases. The pick-up in business activity also increased tax income from corporations.

interest rates unusually high, threatening the economic recovery, keeping the dollar too strong and worsening the imbalance in foreign trade.

Duffey outlines tuition hike

By BILL WALL
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey yesterday explained his proposed $50 tuition increase for next semester and outlined his plan for spending the additional money.

"If we have this money in the second semester we could open approximately 80 sections to accommodate more than 2,500 students who are now not able to fill their schedule out," Duffey said.

Duffey noted that students in the social sciences, natural sciences, and humanities would all benefit through fewer instances of oversubscribed classes. He also said the initiative to increase the number of class sections came from both students and faculty and cited a petition presented to him last semester asking for a solution to the unavailability of classes.

"The issue must be of some importance if both the faculty and the students (addressed it) far before this possibility ever came up of raising tuition," Duffey said.

In response to the concerns raised that students would not be able to pay for the increase, Duffey said approximately 7,000 students would be granted exemptions from the increase based on need. Those students will include those already receiving federal and state aid, because their grants could not be adjusted to reflect the increase.

Duffey said revenue from the increase would remain on the campus to be used to ensure better availability of classes. If the Massachusetts legislature, which currently allows the campus to retain the increase, were to rescind the authority, Duffey said the additional sections would be lost.

"My understanding is that this is an experiment. The $50 increase will not continue unless this campus is able to keep the money," Duffey said.

Duffey acknowledged that it was late to start searching for people to teach the new sections, but expressed confidence that new teaching associates can be brought in from the new doctoral program and other areas.

"I'm not making this because it is popular. I am making it because I think it is in the best interests of quality education on this campus, and finally in the best interests of the students. I think I can defend this. Everything is open to negotiation, and the Trustees will have to decide," Duffey said.

Student government president Tom Ahern said that there will be a rally opposing the increase at 12 p.m. today in front of the Student Union building.

Profs fight tenure denial

By RITA MURPHY
and BROOKE STATES
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP) said Wednesday they will continue to fight the University of Massachusetts despite losing court action last week involving the tenure denial of a professor two years ago.

One of the options now being considered by the MSP faculty bargaining union is to treat the case not only as a faculty rights case, but also as a woman's rights case, said Sara Lennox, a member of the MSP executive committee.

The case involves a disputed denial of tenure to a faculty member by former UMass Provost Lorin Baritz in 1981.

Ann Mockon, an art history professor, was approved for tenure by her department chair, the college personnel committee, and the dean of the college of arts and sciences. Baritz and then-Chancellor Henry Koffler, denied the tenure request.

MSP filed a grievance in May 1981 following the tenure rejection. Four months later, Koffler denied the grievance and UMass President David C. Knapp refused an administrative appeal. The MSP filed for arbitration in January, 1982.

The State Labor Relations Commission ruled in July of 1982 that Mochon should be reinstated with back pay and new consideration.

The Board of Trustees challenged that ruling in Superior Court and last week the court ruled in favor of the Trustees.

According to James Boylan, the president-elect of MSP, one of the key points of the ruling was a difference in meaning of an article in the MSP contract which states, "Academic administrative officials may make a recommendation or decision counter to the original faculty recommendation only in exceptional circumstances and with compelling reasons in written detail which shall specifically address the content of that recommendation as well as the established standards and criteria."

The Superior Court found that the provost of the University did not fail to meet contractual standards.

The court found "nothing in the agreement (MSP contract) obligating the provost to instruct the faculty as to documentary shortcomings, or to withhold decision until the tenure candidates and her supporters could cure the discrepancies thus identified."

Until now the union has been treating it as a faculty rights case, but because the University has such a poor ratio of tenured female faculty members, the case has evolved into a women's rights case, Lennox said.

The UMass "woman's community should make it clear they are not going to stand for this (low number of tenured women), Lennox said.

Lennox said many people believe Baritz never would have denied Mochon tenure "if she hadn't been a woman."

Child care faces difficulties

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

Editors note: This is the second in a three part series on child care in the area.

A discrepancy between the cost of providing child care and the child care centers income has created staffing and space problems at University of Massachusetts child care centers, according to Elizabeth Perkins, director of the UMass Child Care System.

The shortage of funds has caused a difficulty in recruiting early childhood professionals, retaining the current staff, and placing infants and toddlers in the system, she said.

Perkins said increasing child care expenses are caused by an annual 10 to 20 percent inflationary cost increase for equipment and supplies and the 1981 increase of the 03 minimum wage to 5.10 an hour. This increase caused a 25,000 thousand dollar budget increase and boost in fees, she said.

While the average weekly cost to provide preschool care is $64.02 per child, the average fee paid per week by parents is $52. For toddlers, the average cost per child is $94.53, but the average amount received by the center is $62. For infants the average cost per child is $120.18, but the average amount received by the center is $72.

Infant and toddler care is so expensive because the centers have to maintain smaller, state-mandated adult-child ratios during the day than with older children.

Weekly fees for student families are based on a sliding scale, depending on the family's size and income, while non-students pay a set rate.

Gail Brown, director of New World Day School at Farley Lodge, said, "The ongoing issue is money to support the staff. Infant care costs $120 per week. You can't ask a student to pay that much and feasibly live."

While there are 120 employees at the day care centers, only 12 receive full-time benefits, Perkins said.

Michael Denney, director of Grass Roots Day School at Bowditch Lodge said, "Employees aren't equally treated. As this service becomes more and more important in society, we need more recognition and more money."

David Zuccalo, director of the North Village Children's Center, said, "I've had gigantic waiting lists, but when the parents saw the reality of paying $72 a week, they dropped the whole idea."

The Faculty Senate Committee on the Status of Women recommended the University increase its level fo funding to the Child Care System to help alleviate some of its problems.

The committee recommends that state funding be increased through the Chancellor's Office, Administrative and Finance and Academic Affairs, since members of these departments are frequently using the child care facilities, according to Lori Clarke, a member of the committee.

They have not received a response yet, she said.

UMass professor speaks on poetry and social concerns

By PETER ABRAHAM
Collegian Correspondent

Speaking before a crowd last night of about 75 at the University of Massachusetts, Paul Mariani, poet, biographer and a member of the UMass English Department stressed that modern writers, "first be committed to the craft of writing" before using poetry or prose as a means of trying to speak on an issue of importance.

Mariani spoke about his own development as a poet/writer and his realization that he must write about his own experiences and his own search for truth if he wanted to truly make social commentary.

His lecture entitled "Awakening to the Nightmare" touched upon the images that make up his memories and how that affects his poetry.

"Anger in literature is harmful if that is the only reason for writing," Mariani said. "I want my poetry to heal, not to divide. I cannot manufacture experiences I have not had."

Mariani, author of five books and several published essays and poems, said that recent world events such as the murder of five nuns in El Salvador, the "folly that can be Presidential politics," and the current situations in Grenada and Lebanon can make writers think about the world around them and their writings will order the news of the period.

"Writing and poetry sings of the human condition," Mariani said, ". . . and that language means life for me."

Mariani was the fifth of seven writers to speak on "Writers on Writers and Social Responsibility," a series sponsored by the Institute for Advanced Study in the Humanities. Primarily a poet, Mariani read several poems, both his own and those of others, to illustrate his points.

Workers feel involved

By BOB BURGESS
Collegian Correspondent

"The key to Japan's success in the international business community is the intensity with which its corporations involve employees in the hierarchy of the company structure and employee diversification," Frank Gibney, author of Miracle By Design, said Wednesday at the University of Massachusetts.

Gibney, president of Pacific Basin Institute and vice-president of the board of editors at Encyclopedia Britannica said, "In Japan corporate executives hire 'the whole man,'" rather than for the worker's specific skills in attempts to introduce employees to both the overall company design and its long-term goals.

"They let the man know what the company is all about, and after three or four months, begin training him for a variety of different jobs," he said. This assimilation period is necessary to give employees a "sense of the corporation as family," he said.

"Personnel diversification," is the unique Japanese process of "moving employees around (within the company) to increase their personal involvement," and is another successful way of building company unity, he said. Because the employee feels this community spirit, the worker is much less likely to strike.

"The labor-management relationship has a certain smoothness and the amount of (work) hours lost is minimal," he said.

Gibney also described the historical origins of this philosophy in Japanese corporations.

Officer promotes equality

Women On Campus

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

For senior English major Mary Palazzo, it is gratifying to get a process going on campus and see it work, and her job as affirmative action officer of the Student Government Association (SGA) at the University of Massachusetts has allowed her to do this.

"I enjoy having a voice in this University but I find it very challenging," she said.

Palazzo's job is to oversee all job searches conducted by Recognized Student Organizations (RSO) and assure they are run properly and provide equal opportunity for women and minorities.

To do this effectively, Palazzo has developed a set of procedures for affirmative action to be implemented, something she said the office has never had in its seven years of existence.

"As far as I can tell there has not been much procedure and now I am implementing methods so there can be and the office can do what it has to do," she said.

Palazzo says she is mainly a "watchdog" for search committees throughout their hiring process.

"I ensure that job advertisements encourage women and minorities; that search committees have equal representation of woman and minorities and, that the questions and the criteria used in the interview process are non-discriminatory," she said.

After the committee has hired someone, Palazzo said she makes sure the person is qualified and if she concludes that he or she is not qualified, she then recommends to the committee that the search be redone.

"The process is starting to work and people are starting to use it. Everyone I have dealt with has been very cooperative about affirmative action," she said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

They deserve what's coming

Well, it's about time! It's about time this nation stopped being so "diplomatic" and got down to business with the communists and the threat they pose in the Western Hemisphere. Scratch one less captive nation from the Communist Camp — Grenada.

I have rarely written a column based primarily upon emotion — yet this liberation of Grenada from the communists is a rare exception which I clearly relish.

For the past four years Grenada was ruled by a Marxist dictatorship. It was a convenient staging area for the Cubans and Soviets. Make no mistake about it — the airfield and two-mile long landing strip being constructed by the Cubans was not going to be used for tourism purposes. If the airfield had been completed last Spring, the Libyan supply plane carrying "medical supplies," (which was caught in Brazil) never would have been detected. It would've gone straight to Grenada which was closer to Nicaragua — its real intended destination.

Steven P. Barrett

The Brazilians found precious few "medical supplies," but they did find a large shipment of military supplies.

There is one less jewel in Castro's Caribbean Empire. Somehow I didn't believe for one moment the crocodile tears shed by the gang in Havanna for the late (murdered) Maurice Bishop, former dictator of Grenada. But, for the moment, I'll give Castro the benefit of the doubt since Bishop was killed by a more brutal Marxist, Gen. Austin.

Lest anyone forget, Grenada is a strategic nation — not just a tropical vacation spot for the well-to-do. Just look at a map, and notice its location — just astride the Strait of Trinidad. More than half of our imported oil is shipped through this highly important area. While we wring our hands over the remote possibility of another Arab Oil Embargo, we often forget how vulnerable we are so close to home. But the Soviets and their Cuban puppets haven't.

Naturally, the supporters for leftist thugs and their miserable governments, built and maintained only upon the fear of death and imprisonment, will take violent exception to what I have written thus far. Too bad.

By the way, what did the dictators in Cuba and Nicaragua do for their comrades? Nothing; which is exactly what they could do. In Nicaragua, they can't even defend their own major port from a rag-tag guerrilla force. It's no wonder they're scared.

The Cubans can do no more than lick their wounds, and pray for the souls of those deceased "construction workers." Oh I forgot — the Cubans are officially atheistic. Or they could make a lightning strike at our installation in Key West. But thankfully, they don't have the fortitude for that kind of outrageous foolishness.

Surprisingly, the Iron Lady of the Falklands War, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Great Britain expressed her "doubts" (i.e. Her Majesty's Government) during a public session of Parliament while our soldiers, and those of the Eastern Caribbean States, were ridding the hemisphere of the Marxist pestilence in Grenada.

Leave it to Uncle Sam to clean up after Her Majesty's Government has left another one of the British Empire's outposts. I wonder what kind of "doubts" President Reagan will have or should have in case Britain has difficulty with Guatemala if the former British colony of British Honduras (Belize) is threatened by the Guatemalans. Come on Mrs. Thatcher, we stuck out our necks for you during the Falklands War, and this is what we receive in return?

Well, nations don't have friends — only interests, right?

Not too surprisingly, the handwringers and terminal victims of the post-Vietnam-era-syndrome were having a field day on Capitol Hill.

One of our arch-appeasers, Cong. Edward Markey of Massachusetts, (where else!) said in the House of Representatives, "We have a new king of gunboat diplomacy...move over Teddy Roosevelt."

If only Markey and his ilk had half the backbone of Teddy Roosevelt, Congress would be in much better shape — and I wouldn't feel so miserable about the ideological (and intellectual!) make-up of this state's congressional delegation.

Admittedly, I have probably offended many people here on this campus, and from elsewhere, but no apologies will be forthcoming. Why should I, or any other citizen be ashamed of our actions in Grenada? We have only paved the way for a return to democracy in that previously enslaved nation.

I will conclude my remarks with a passage from Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick's book, Dictators and Doublestandards, and a question of my own: "Why are Western liberals — who are often such smart people — such slow learners about Communism?"

I'd like to know why the Markey's of this nation are so given to public acts of self-doubts and flagellation about their nation's conduct abroad.

Tuition hike who will pay?

Is Joe Duffey tripping on air, or what? Three weeks ago he came up with a proposal to increase tuition by $50 for the coming semester. By way of a rationale, he claimed that students could easily afford such a paltry sum, and that they should begin to shoulder more responsibility for the cost of their education. It takes an incredible amount of gall for someone who gets over $1000 a week and a free mansion, to say something like that. There are also some major problems with the proposal itself:

Charlene Allen

1. Duffey has little idea of where this money is to go. He has claimed that the additional funding will be put toward such things as providing greater access to courses and majors with high demands, support and training for Teaching Assistants, and "a portion of these funds would also be used to supplement student scholarship and financial aid." However, he has given no specific breakdown for this, nor has he given any indication of how much of this money will go toward financial assistance. Now I ask you, if I were to come up to you and ask for $900,000, and couldn't really tell you what I intended to do with it, what would you say (Don't say it — this is a family newspaper)?

2. This increase will not be restricted to $50. Traditionally, fees for such things as housing, board, the Campus Center, and Health Services have increased on a yearly basis. There is no indication that this year will be any different. In addition, it is all but inevitable that we'll be hit with a new, $20 fee to pay for renovations on the Curry Hicks Cage; despite the fact that students do not support the endeavor. Finally, the Regents have plans of their own for all of that extra cash that we students have lying about. Whether or not Duffey's proposal goes through, they plan to increase tuition throughout the state, in order to "assure the people of Massachusetts of the committment of our students to the pursuit of learning..." Just how much does it cost to be taken seriously?!

3. The proposal is an excuse to raise tuition again and again. Over the past four years, tuition has gone up 66 percent. This has put UMass out of the reach of those students who are most in need of public education. At the same time, we're attracting more and more students who can't afford expensive private schools. The result is what we lose poorer students, and replace them with those whose families are more affluent. These students are then used to "prove" that all of us can afford tuition increases, the cycle continues, and guess who gets cut out completely?

There will be a rally at noon, in front of the Student Union today. At that time, students from the Amherst and Boston campuses will protest these proposed increases. Duffey has already met with opposition from some members of the Board of Trustees, but there will not be a vote until November. This means that we have to get a message through to the Board before the Chancellor does. Otherwise, many of us will be among those replaced next year. See you at the rally.

Good news spanning the globe

The world is spinning out of control, my pool game is going down hill, there is too much school work, and my friend just told me that the trout at Stop & Shop died when somebody put cleaning fluid in their tank. October has not been a good month so far.

Three people have helped though. The first is a 40 year old Polish electrician, Lech Walesa. He won the Nobel Peace prize for 'the "unconquered longing" of all people for peace and freedom.'

Brooke States

Walesa has been arrested by Polish authorities over 100 times, and lost many jobs for his speaking out on workers rights. On August 14, 1980 he moved into the public eye and Polish history, by climbing a fence at the Lenin shipyard in Gdansk, and helping lead a strike that had broken out. From that strike emerged Solidarity, which Walesa led until martial law was declared on December 13, 1981.

Solidarity was the first free trade union in Eastern Europe. It grew from nothing to ten million workers, with almost 40,000 organizers. Solidarity became not only a trade union, but a social movement and vehicle of expression for a people and society tired of the Russian enforced style of Socialism that they lived under.

As the situation in Poland deteriorated in 1980-81, Solidarity became more political. Walesa was uncomfortable with this trend, and was frequently in conflict with others in the union. Despite that, he was re-elected at the Solidarity national congress, October, 1981.

Martial law was declared in Poland at the end of 1981. Solidarity was banned on October 8, 1982. Resistance continued in many forms, and Walesa has refused all government attempts to get him to join with them in declaring Solidarity dead.

When told that he had won the award, Walesa stated; "I consider this for the people." His winning of the prize should not stand by itself, but will hopefully serve as an example to people in struggle against oppression everywhere.

The second person who did something good was James Watt. He resigned. Watt may well be missed as the man who brought everybody from Ducks Unlimited to the Audubon Society together to oppose him. When not holding government land in trust for higher powers as steward of the earth, he made new contributions to American political thought. These included the discovery that there were liberals and Americans, that Indian reservations were examples of failed Socialism, and that the Beach Boys attracted undesirable elements to the nations capitol. (AC/DC eat you're heart out.) Even old Nancy got fired up when Watt pulled that one off. (I didn't know she was a Beach Boys fan.) Unfortunately his successor is also a God fearing steward of the earth, according to Reagan anyway. Lets hope there are no unbelievers among the forest denizens.

Closer to home, and of more importance to many UMies, is the presence of Mel King in the Boston mayoral finals.

His strength at the polls is both a personal and a collective triumph. On the personal level Mel King has covered a lot of ground in his years from Boston activist to State Representative and Mayoral candidate. After years of Kevin White and downtown development, which had created a vibrant core city, but neglected the neighborhoods, people went for King and challenger Ray Flynn, who ran a similar campaign. King should get credit for running and for running the way he did.

On the collective level the Black community rallied behind King, and approximately 20,000 new Black voters were registered. King attempted to build a rainbow coalition, and not just deal with issues on a racial basis, but on a class one. The entire campaign was free of the racism that marked the Chicago mayoral contest.

Where only a few years earlier the city had seemed mired in racism, some things had changed. The defeat of Louise Day Hicks, John Kerrigan, and Pixie Palladino between 1977 and 1981 was one sign. While the victories of Harold Washington and Wilson Goode of Philadelphia may have made a difference, the leg work and willingness to fight, of Kings supporters was the real measure of the battle. He helped show that Blacks can run and win in Boston.

Random Notes
— My dinner with Meryl —

— by Count Ramin Zahed

When Meryl called me last Friday, I wasn't very surprised. She always contacts me after she finishes a project. Last time I saw her was after she had finished working on "Sophie's Choice." I took her out as usual, and she insisted on speaking Polish all night long. I did not understand a word, but I told her that her nose looks a little longer when she speaks Polish.

Meryl adores Amherst. She says the charm and cozyness of a place like Taco Villa is exactly what she needs after working with big shots like Jeremy Irons. Jeremy really got on her nerves two years ago. He kept comparing her to Anthony Andrews, and that really made Meryl mad. She once said that I reminded her of Jeremy; we're both going bald.

The last time she came to UMass, I made the mistake of taking her to Basics for dinner. She loved the raisins, the blue cheese and the anti-gravity tofu. However, she simply couldn't stand the people there. So, now, we only eat at Franklin. She says she almost feels at home there.

Meryl told me I had lost some hair since the last time we met. I told her that her hides-while-it-heals extra strength Clearasil wasn't working miracles. Then, she told me about her September affair with Mr. Rogers.

Her latest movie, "Silkwood" is going to premier in New York. I wished her luck. She gave me one of her French Lieutenant's Woman looks, and I was almost sure that she was thinking about Mr. Roger's neighborhood.

As we walked towards the Peter Pan bus station, I noticed that I looked extremely ridiculous walking with a woman of her stature. I always felt more comfortable with midgets like Bette Davis.

Finally, she gave me a big hug and promised me another visit after she was through with her passions. Having dinner with Meryl is always exciting. I just wish she would take our relationship more seriously.

On dropping "back in" to school

Three years after dropping out of college in a state of confusion, depression and apathy, I'm back.

My adventures in the real world included a few months of unemployment, two stints at a local Burger King, collecting loans from deadbeats, and finally two years as a secretary for a group of psychologists.

I was 17 when my mother let me off at a dorm in a State University of New York several hundred miles from all things warm and familiar. I watched her departure with concealed panic. Paralyzed with uncertainty, holding suitcases full of makeup and designer jeans (my armor against all unknown) I wondered, what next?

Diane Lane

Without further hesitation I bought a pack of cigarettes, although I had never smoked before. Baby, I had come a long way. My first night there, I went out, got drunk and in the darkness couldn't find my dorm. I sat on a bench until the sun rose, then sauntered casually into my dorm (which had been right in front of me), making a lasting impression on my new roommates.

The rest of my three years in school were equally undistinguished by academic effort. I changed majors like most people change underwear. My life in high school as a cheerleader and a "real popular chick" had not prepared me for the necessity of choosing a career. In fact, it had never occured to me that I could have a job that I would like and maybe make money too. The liberation movement of the seventies had passed me by completely unheralded. I always assumed that I would work until I could (oh happy day!) get married and turn the distasteful and unfeminine job of earning money over to my new-found husband.

Well, I got married and dropped out of college, (not necessarily in that order). Marriage was great and my husband did earn money but my confusion persisted. The frustration of watching Luke and Laura not make love day after day drove me into the workforce. Unfortunately jobs for women (and men I'm sure) without college degrees were limited and stultifying.

Working at various menial positions was the beginning of my enlightenment. The more bored and unused I felt, the more I looked for ways out, and the more I grew aware of how trapped I really was.

My last two years working at a medical office was the final launching pad for my re-entry into life. The doctors I worked for treated me with a respect previously unknown. An older woman psychologist was a real role model for my growing sense that I could be somebody. Doors I had felt were closed to me forever began to seem open and flexible.

Finally, fueled by disgust at the rut I was in and a growing sense of confidence, I made the move to drop back in.

UMass is a lot different from my other University in its opportunity for a good education. It is a slow and continual process to unlearn old habits of depending on others for your self worth, and not pushing yourself to the limits of what you can do. Perceived male domination was less of a problem for me than socially-taught self-suppression. If the consciousness-raising era had passed me by once, I am determined now to find my place in this overwhelming world.

What price intervention?

To the Editor,

In consideration of the recent trilateral "invasion" on the independant island of Grenada in the South Atlantic, it was said that the Americans were acting out of weakness when they sent their Marines to aid. Well, one must realize that a weak nation would certainly not be in the position to spread their military forces around the world in order to keep the peace or squelch military buildups by leftist governments. But what could this speaker possibly mean when he says the US was acting out of weakness? Weakness of mind? To many, the invasion seems premature. To others, it seemed a bizarre act of an overzealous American Government fixed on policing areas in which it does not belong. The true situation in the area is difficult to decipher and totally impossible if your sole source of information is the American press, but what if human rights were being violated? What if the new Grenada airbase has military significance as a Soviet outpost? What if American lives are in danger? Does this justify a military response?

American forces enter these areas with the stated mission of putting an end to the threat, the danger, but can't U.S. policy-makers see that they are threatening national and world peace by playing losing war games against people struggling for independence and security? Is it necessary to so forcefully impose our commitments to democratic morality and human rights so far from home, when there are plenty of problems right here? I suggest that this is a political action designed to shift the focus of the press away from domestic economic issues, while displaying U.S. strength and resolve.

These people, the people of Grenada, Lebanon, and a series of other areas historically, are in states of revolution, and they resent U.S. involvement. If the U.S. becomes so predictable in their paramilitary activity, people around the world will soon be lining up against us with a cry for an end to this proud form of dogmatic imperialism which threatens the free development of independant nations struggling for peace and order. If you think that a military outpost and regime in Grenada is a threat to American security, consider some revolutionary group who is well-convinced of their historical mission and desperate enough in struggle to consider attack on American soil to teach the lesson of "no, no" to American Imperialism and "hands off!" to America's police actions.

No baby should be a mistake

To the Editor,

I am writing this letter in response to Anna Roell's article "Thinking through the Abortion Issue", (Collegian 10/13/83). It seems to me that Miss Roell hasn't thought it through at all. Maybe her mother considered her a "mistake", because when she was born abortion was not an available choice as easily attained as it is today.

Many young women in today's society are using some form of birth control. But, what about those who started too late? Last year I was an R.A. in the dorms. I had to counsel a young woman with a pregnancy problem many times. This is an example of a situation that is typical among college pregnancies:

A young woman is a freshman in college. She is not Catholic, but comes from a happy middle class family, of whom she has high respect for and a decent upbringing. Her grandparents are religious, and she is very close to them. She is also in love. She is in love with a young man she has been dating for about a year. He, too, is in college and has a promising career ahead of him. They will be probably be married in the future. And everything is going along wonderfully, until . . . she discovers that she is pregnant.

Her choice? To some, there is no choice. Have the baby, for a life is a life. But, my question is, what about the mother's life? Should she be forced to drop out of school to have the baby, and then try to struggle along in school once it is born? Should she risk shaming her family and disrupting all close family ties? Should she put the pressure on her young man to let him know he is now a father? Or pick the route of leaving school and never telling him? For, she knows he will feel a deep sense of responsibility and guilt, and it could force him to want to marry her and become a father. My opinion to all of these questions, is NO.

It is true that last year one and a half million babies had their lives taken away. But how many unwanted children were born into homes that did not want them? Into homes that could not afford them, did not love them, and even homes that inflicted abuse upon them; in some cases causing death in a much more painful way. There are countless unwanted, homeless and abused children on this earth today. Why add to that list?

In today's society, a child is now going to be able to join a family. With highly advanced birth control methods, this is done very successfully. But, for all those too many times when a pregnancy is a "mistake", abortion is at least a choice, if not the answer.

It is true that we fight to save the whale and protect baby seals, because they truthfully are becoming extinct. I do not know where Dr. Jefferson gets her ideas that "we're on our way to becoming extinct"; because any ecologist will tell you we are living in an overpopulated country, if not world, where the population is increasing daily. Because of this fact many people live in poor conditions with little to eat, just barely surviving.

There are all sorts of opinions when human life actually begins; from the moment of conception to the minute of actual birth. But, I feel it should be the choice of the mother, or parents to decide if an abortion would be an alternate decision. And if they do choose that decision, I feel that they should not have to feel condemned by our society by guilt.

The Halloween weekend always holds some special unknown surprise, and while I personally know of no particular "surprise" for this weekend, I do have one for next week. Next Thursday November 3, Hot Tuna and Bobby and the Midnites will be playing at the Springfield Civic Center.

As a belated Halloween surprise, Livewire, in conjunction with C Group Productions, will be giving away a pair of tickets to this show. All you have to do to enter is send in your name, address and phone number to: Livewire Contest, UMass Daily Collegian, 113 Campus Center, by next Tuesday.

Meanwhile, tonight at the Fine Arts Center, Electric Avenue and Eddy Grant come together for an exciting evening of pop-reggae. Grant's tenure as reggae star has finally extended to America, and with a new hit on the way up the charts, it should be a pleasant evening. Other shows tonight include blues specialists, the Nighthawks at the Rusty Nail and the tribute band that should never have been formed, Pearl, a Janis Joplin show, will be at the Hangar One.

Tomorrow night, the Five Collee Orchestra will open its Fall season with a performance at Smith College, and another concert at Amherst College Saturday night. Under the baton of conductor Dennis Burkh, the Five College Orchestra consists of the cream of local college musicians, and admission is free. Robin Lane is currently touring with her old band, the Chartbusters, they'll be at the Rusty Nail, and everyone's favorite nouveau darlings, the November Group will pulverize the Hangar. Saturday's biggie is Elvin Bishop at the Rusty Nail.

On Halloween night the Hangar will feature Blotto in an all out bash, so, for those without plans for Monday night, there you go.

Upcoming concerts include Albert Collins Nov. 3, at the Ironhorse, Stan Getz and Astrud Gilberto Nov. 3 at the FAC, David Johansan Nov. 3 at the Bluewall, and Arthur Blythe Nov. 13, at the Iron Horse.

Don't forget about the big concert ticket giveaway, see ya next week.

Itals' show predictable

THE ITALS/ROOTS RADICS
Oct. 18
Blue Wall

Saying as much could incur the wrath of Harvard Square wannabe white Rastas (get that leaflet outta my face), but the state of reggae music '83 is a sorry one. Despite massive U.S. crossover hits for the likes of Musical Youth and Eddy Grant (the former being a one-shot joke, the latter being an overnight success after over a decade of ass busting), real (huh?) reggae's as far from the mainstream as it's ever been . . . . which might be deserved. Too much dope-addeled bullshit being spun, too much dope being smoked, too much lame chatter about "unity". Exceptions? Mutabaruka for one, ultra pissed anti-drug raps that cut Minor Threat any day of the week; Yellowman for two, foulmouthed and funny: Prince wishes he was this explicit.

All of which has got zilch to do with the Itals/Roots Radics show at the Blue Wall, a relatively uninspired, albeit competent exhibition of pretty much everything the crowd figured they'd get. I suppose the Itals are OK frontmen, they glide alright, vox 'soar', more stylish but no as seductive as a Greg Issacs, but that's a minor complaint. The Roots Radic, touted as JA's top session men (and I've heard that one before), were pretty hot; an economical groove laid down, soloing that doesn't go overboard. Biggest flaw was the idiotic onstage banter between songs, reggae's equivalent of listening to some arena/heavy metal fool tell you how swell it is to be in your neato burg (yes, the Itals do indeed, "love" us, more than life itself I'd bet). So they were "uplifting and inspiring"? So's Oral Roberts. Crucial quote of the evening goes to WMUA Music Director Jim Neill, who thoughtfully intoned, "They're OK, but I wish they wouldn't keep playing the same song all night." Hey, if I wasn't so goddamned objective, I'd agree.

TODAY'S PUZZLE ANSWER

UM water polo moves to third

Special to the Collegian

The men's water polo team, with their best record, at the University of Massachusetts is not a popular favorite and it does not draw huge home crowds, but this unsung squad had quietly cruised to a sparkling 16-5-1 record and a solid hold of the New England third place ranking trailing only perennial powers Brown University and Harvard.

After two days of competition last weekend at Brown University's Smith Swim Center, the men's water polo team emerged victorious in 3 of its 5 games played.

"Considering this was our first in the 30 meter tank this season, I felt the guys responded really well to the change and it appeared to me that all the extra conditioning we've been doing paid off for us," Coach Russ Yarworth said. "We were very sharp in the games that we needed to win." Those games were three convincing victories over Yale, Columbia and MIT.

"In the games that we won we controlled each team in every quarter of play. It was a very impressive showing," assistant Nick Reggio said.

Leading the offensive charge for the Minutemen last weekend were senior Chris Porter and junior Paul McNeil.

Senior Jack Fuchs had a successful weekend as well. His explosive driving produced 5 goals and 1 assist and numerous ejection fouls. Another significant contribution to last weekend's success was turned in by senior goalie Andre' La Montagne.

"His aggressive play proved to be why our wins were convincing ones and not nail biters," Reggio said.

"Defense and our bench were the big reasons for our success last weekend," said Yarworth. Anchoring the defense at Brown was senior Phil Surette. Senior Jay Earls and junior Bill Feeney also played well in the tournament.

The game ball for the tournament, however, might very well be given to the bench.

"They gave the starters the rest and support that enabled them to play at their best. The results, definately would not have been as successful," Reggio said.

Minutewomen stop Dartmouth, 1-0

Carol Progulski fights with a Dartmouth defender for control of the ball in Wednesday's 1-0 win at NOPE.

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

Snow flurries trickled down on a surprised campus Wednesday morning and that signals the coming of winter. It also signals the coming of the NCAA field hockey championships. And the University of Massachusetts is preparing for them.

Wednesday, in their game with 19th ranked Dartmouth, UMass coach Pam Hixon made several changes in the lineup and the Minutewomen prevailed, 1-0.

Carol Progulske, normally on defense was moved to the midfield, and Nancy Goode, another defender was moved to center halfback. Patti Smith was moved to a different forward position.

"We are working on different things in prepartion for the upcoming tournament," Hixon said. "We're seeing how people react in different situations.

In this situation, Massachusetts came out on top thanks to a fine team effort and fine play by those players in new positions.

Smith scored the winning goal with 15:15 gone in the second half. Although UMass dominated much of the offensive play on this cold day (UM had 23 shots on goal compared to eight for Dartmouth), the Big Green defense was tough.

However, Pam Moryl brought the ball into the circle and passed it off the Chris Kobel, who tapped it to Smith, who sent it into the corner.

"Patti Smith had a great day," said Hixon. "She was everywhere. She made things happen. She did well playing in a different position.

"Carol and Nancy played different positions and they handled their responsibilities well."

But the Big Green came right back at the Minutewomen, now ranked fifth after a upset loss to New Hampshire last week.

Goalie Patty Shea made one of her four saves with just 5:25 left in the game by coming out of the goal for a kick save. Then the Minutemen effectively killed the clock by keeping the ball in Dartmouth end with three corners in a row to finish up the game.

"Dartmouth is a tough team to play against," Hixon said after the game. "They stop the ball well, They're a gritty team."

The Minutewomen's next immediate goal will be to win their next two games against Rhode Island on Saturday and Boston University next Tuesday. If UMass can top these two teams they hope to sneak back into the Top 4 where they would recieve an automatic bye.

Men's soccer takes second win of the year

By MIKE LEVINE
Collegian Correspondent

"It's about time!"

That's what senior captain Kevin Flynn said about the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team's 1-0 win over Division III powerhouse Westfield State. The victory raises the Minuteman's record to 2-8-5. Westfield State falls to 11-3-1.

The winning goal came when senior Herb Sidman launched a corner kick into the goal crease and Steve Berlin came up with the ball and booted it past OwlsgoalkeeperRich Mueller at 15:35 of the first half.

The Minutemen had several more scoring chances throughtout the game, but could not convert on any of them Westfield State used an 'offside trap' throughout the game to put some extra pressure on the defense, but the trap also resulted in a number of breakaways for the Minutemen.

According to UMass coach Jeff Gettler, "We knew they were going to use (the offside trap), so we spent an hour yesterday (Tuesday) practicing breakaways."

Despite the win, the UMass season-long scoring drought still continues. Thus far, the Minutemen have scored seven goals in fifteen games this season.

"We need some composure near the goal. We're still not scoing, but you can't complain about a win,"Coach Gettler said.

Freshman goalkeeper Jamie Firmage did an excellent job in the nets, stopping nine shots to gain the credit for the shutout.

The Minutemen take to the field next Saturday at 1:00 p.m. to battle Boston College at Boyden Field.

Spikers start slow, but win

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — A lot of athletic teams have off nights and lack-luster performances. Good teams over come such diversity and still win. The University of Massachusetts volleyball team did just that last night, in beating Smith College 10-15, 15-4, 15-12, 15-8.

"We got off to a real slow start," confessed assistant coach Sara Bonthuis.

The score of the first game in the best of five series proved Bonthuis' point. The sluggish spikers fell to Smith 15-10.

The following two contests were won by the Minutewomen, but that is about all you can say. The spikers continued to play 'flat', but still managed to come up with victories. The scores were 15-4, 15-12 in favor of UMass.

"We were playing flat. The passing got a little better and Patty Grant did much better in the second game. They (Smith) were getting to a lot of balls, but they didn't play aggressive offense. They were waiting for us to make mistakes," stated Bonthuis.

UMass, 22-11, may have been lucky that Smith did not attack on this night. Continuing to play less than inspired ball, the spikers were victorious in the fourth and deciding game, 15-8.

The fact that the team was sluggish but was in control enough to win is encouraging. Even more encouraging was the play of Susan Grant. S. Grant responded to the call last night, and turned in one of her best performances of the season.

A good team performance will be in order at the Hofstra tournament this weekend.

Grant sets up UM spikers

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

Three years ago, Patty Grant was told she could not play varsity volleyball and be a dance major at the University of Massachusetts. Lucky for both programs Grant did not listen to her elders.

Today, Grant is enrolled as a dance major and is also trying to fulfill the requirements for the exercise science program. She is also one of the tri-captains on Elaine Sortino's volleyball squad.

Grant is the product of a very successful high school program at Westhill High School in Stamford Ct. She was captain of the Westhill team for two years, and led the team to the state title her senior year. Her outstanding play did not go unnoticed. She was a two year All-County player and Area player of the Year her senior year at Westhill.

Grant's play at a three year starter and two year captain at UMass has not been overlooked either.

"She's as fine a player as I've had. I am real pleased with what she has done," UMass Coach Elaine Sortino said.

The volleyball accomplishments are evident but what people don't see is the day in and day out schedule of Grant.

"I'm a dance major carrying 21 credits, I run from practice to dance class. . . and then sometimes back to practice!" confesses Grant.

Such a busy schedule would make most people lose interest or enthusiasm - not Patty Grant.

"We have good personnel, this is the strongest team I've played on at UMass and everyone will be back next year," said Grant. Maybe it is her optimistic outlook which gives Grant the energy at the end of practice to still be heard to yell an encouraging 'good job' or 'let's get going'. Is there anything else that drives Patty Grant?

"I like the competition, friends, players, coaches and being in a good program with good coaching. Plus my parents come to every match and my sister is on the team," adds Grant.

The only problem Grant poses for the UMass volleyball and dance program is that she only has one more year to give them.

Patty Grant in action for team.

ACTIVISM LIVES - Marchers opposed to the U.S. invasion of Grenada wind their way through campus as part of yesterday's rally.

500 students protest U.S. invasion of Grenada

By MARY CRESSE
Collegian Staff

What began as a small rally of 150 students protesting the U.S. invasion of Grenada yesterday became a shouting, chanting crowd of nearly 500 people as protestors joined together to demonstrate across the University of Massachusetts campus.

After initial speeches by students, the crowd, carrying placards containing slogans such as "Ronnie is a murderer"marched from the Student Union building to Dickenson Hall, where UMass Air Force ROTC is located. The crowd then went to Whitmore Administration building where the demonstration culminated with more anti-military speeches.

The front doors of Whitmore were then locked, as were the doors leading to the offices of the chancellor and his staff. The lobby was monitored by security guards.

The rally was the second in three days addressing U.S. foreign policy.

"It is time for us not to stand back but to show, by numbers just how strongly we feel," graduate student Satya Gabriel shouted after comparing Grenada to Vietnam. 'We cannot be ignorant of the facts. We cannot be repressed. We must fight against our government and against this invasion."

With participants chanting "No more Vietnam," the crowd assembled behind a "U.S. Out" banner, as sophomore political science major Mike delaPena, 20, tried to assemble an anti-march, pro-Reagan group.

"We're not going to put up with their bull anymore," he shouted. "We've been listening to them (anti-military protesters) for two days now, and it's time to let everyone know there are students who don't agree with them.Everybody against this farce, raise your hands." Twenty persons responded.

'This campus is controlled by leftists. This group (the counter group) is simply expressing its patriotism," delaPena said.

Pro-military members later gathered at Whitmore and chanted, "USA yes, Marxism no" and "USA all the way" as they saluted. Later they sang the "Star Spangled Banner."

While Gabriel and Michael Martin, an economics graduate student addressed the crowd outside Dickenson as Air Force Capt. Guillermo Merado said upstairs, "I think it's healthy they're involved and concerned about what has happened. They're exercising their perrogative to free speech."

As the crowd walked to Whitmore, Ingrid Babb-Bracey, a Grenadian graduate student in education said, "I'm just horrified by the whole situation. It doesn't really come as a surprise. It's just out and out American aggression. The American government is running this propoganda saying the fight is between American Marines and Cubans, which is misleading."

Students march to oppose possible tuition hike

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

Problems of access and the purpose of public higher education were in contention yesterday when about 20 students marched on University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey's office and argued with him against his proposed $50 tuition increase.

The 40-minute session with Duffey followed a noon rally on the steps of the Student Union Building led by Student Government Association (SGA) members.

"Do you really want a $50 increase?" Paul Gosselin, chair of the public policy committee, asked the crowd of about 75 people. "No!" they answered.

SGA co-President Tom Ahern told the crowd that "Chancellor Duffey is one of the few people who wants to see tuition raised. $50 today, how much tomorrow?" he asked.

Duffey proposed the tuition increase plan to the UMass Board of Trustees on Oct. 5, and the Trustees will vote on it next Wednesday. Students claimed Duffey was trying to give some trustees who oppose the plan the impression that students here do not care about a $50 increase.

UMass-Amherst students met with UMass-Boston students last week to plan the rally, and several people from that compus marched on Duffey's office yesterday to express their opinions on his plan.

"I appreciate how you feel about it," Duffey said. "I have to make my decisions on the basis of what I think are the problems of this campus."

Duffey said the money raised by the increase, approximately $800,000, would help alleviate problems of overcrowding in high-demand classes. He pointed to a Collegian story on a petition signed by 13,000 students last spring asking the University to do something about the problem. "The students asked for that," he said.

"But did they ask you to do it in a form of a tuition increase?" Ahern asked.

Some students complained that the initial $50 increase could exclude many lower-income students from the school, and that would defeat one of the purposes of public education.

Duffey said the problem was to balance the needs of access to the university and access to classrooms, "and that's why it's so complicated."

"You say you want this increase to solve overcrowding in classes," student senator Bill Collins said to Duffey. "I don't think we're going to have a problem with overcrowding if you get this increase passed."

Collins and others also said an increase could set precedent", since it is part of a program offered by the legislature this year which allows state colleges and universities to raise tuition and keep the extra monies on campus for programs which the trustees must approve.

Gosselin said that "money's pretty tight" in the state budget, and if the program is continued, "the burden is going to be shifted from the state to the students."

"Nobody quite knows what the legislature is going to do," Duffey said. "There are perils for the University if they don't (continue the program) and there are risks if they do."

"I don't intend to turn back on this," Duffey said, but he vowed to "do everything I can do" to make sure the legislature doesn't turn over more education costs to students.

Duffey said Wednesday that approximately 7,000 students would be granted exemptions from the increase due to financial need.

The first in a series of workshops to prepare students for a financial aid lobbying trip to Washington D.C. scheduled for early next month begins today. Attendance at three out of the four seminars is suggested for students interested in going on the trip.

Students Advocating Financial Assistance (SAFA) is organizing the workshops and sponsering the excursion to be held Nov. 6,7,8 in part as a membership drive , said former SAFA president Jim Shaw. The workshops, to be held today, next Tuesday, Thursday and Friday from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m. in the Faculty Club near Franklin Dining Commons, will train students in current issues and lobbying techniques.

This year SAFA will be lobbying for the reauthorization of the National Education Act, the piece of legislation that incorporates the many grant and loan programs available to students.

"Every year there is a move from the right to cut educational benefits to students and every year there is a push from special interest, like SAFA, to hold down cuts from various programs," Shaw said.

During the workshops, sutdents set up mock meetings in which they approach congressmen in the same manner as they would in Washington. Both pro and con arguement for the proposed legislation are discussed prior to the trip. We attempt to justify our presence and the importance of the legislation," stated Shaw, a senior majoring in political legislation," stated Shaw, a senior majoring in political science.

As well as meeting with legislators, SAFA representatives work with "established legislative agents and lobbyists to help sharpen our knowledge of the various issues, and to help build confidence," Shaw said.

With 70 percent of students dependent on some form of financial aid, Shaw said students should have a very personal interest in financial legislation. SAFA provides an opportunity for students to gain vital information, and to meet people with common interests.

"The more people down there, the more effective we are," Shaw said.

Reagan says U.S. arrived " in time"

WASHINGTON (AP) - President Reagan charged the Soviet Union Thursday night with encouraging the violence in both Lebanon and Grenada.

As for Grenada, Reagan said it is "clear a Cuban occupation" of Grenada had been planned.

"We got there just in time," Reagan said.

The president said the foremost mission of the American invasion of the Marxist-ruled Caribbean island was to guarantee the safety of U.S. citizens. "The nightmare of our hostages in Iran must never be repeated," he declared.

Reagan also vowed that those responsible for the bombing in Beirut that killed 225 Marines and sailors "must be dealt justice. They will be."

In a televised address to the nation, Reagan said, "The events in Lebanon and Grenada, though oceans apart, are closely related. Not only has Moscow assisted and encouraged the violence in both countries, but it provides direct support through a network of surrogates and terrorist."

"It is no coincidence that when the thugs tried to wrest control over Grenada, there were 30 Soviet advisers and hundreds of Cuban military and paramilitary forces on the island," Reagan said.

"Two hours ago," said the president, "we released the first photos from Grenada. They included pictures of a warehouse of military equipment, one of three we have uncovered so far. This warehouse contained weapons and ammunition stacked almost to the ceiling, enough to supply thousands of terrorist.

"Grenada, we were told, was a friendly island paradise for tourism. But it wasn't. It was a Soviet-Cuban colony being readied as a major military bastion to export terror and undermine democracy. We got there just in time."

Reagan said the United States had initially assumed that several hundred Cubans working on an airport runway on the southern part of the island could be military reservists.

U.S. invaders crush final strongholds in Grenada

BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (AP) - American forces on Grenada crushed the final strongholds of Grenadian troops and armed Cubans, and went to work Thursday tracking down the Caribbean island's last diehard defenders, U.S. and Barbadian reports said.

The United States, meanwhile, continued to pour hundreds of fresh paratroopers into the fight for the tiny nation.

The Cubans holding out at Richmond Hill prison, in the steep green hills east of the harborside capital, St. George's, were overrun by attacking troops 2½ days after the U.S. invasion began, Pentagon sources said in Washington.

A second St. George's strongpoint, the Grenadian army headquarters at Fort Frederick, was captured Wednesday, the sources said, confirming earlier reports by a Barbadian radio station.

There was no immediate word on the status of Grenadian Marxist leader Gen. Hudson Austin, believed to have been at Fort Frederick.

Reagan administration officials said, meanwhile, that American forces discovered "upwards of 1,000" Cubans on the island, some 400 more than claimed by the Cuban government, and said they were more heavily armed than expected.

"It was a combat engineer battalion in there, commanded by a Cuban colonel," White House spokesman Larry Speakes said. The Cuban government says almost all the 600 to 700 Cubans on Grenada were airport construction workers who had been issued light arms.

In the third day of the Grenada invasion, the officially reported U.S. death toll rose to eight, international anger deepened over the American action, and a U.S. congressional committee pushed for a time limit on the U.S. military operation.

The Pentagon said the casualty toll among the almost 3,000 U.S. troops stood at eight dead, eight missing and 39 wounded.

One third of staff harassment victims

CAMBRIDGE - About a third of Harvard University woman teachers and students who answered a questionaire said people in authority harassed them through looks, teasing, touching and pressure for sexual favors.

Of 1,141 women returning the written study, 32 percent of tenured faculty, 49 percent of nontenured faculty, 41 percent of graduate students and 32 percent of undergraduates said they experienced some form of harassment at least once from people in authority.

In contrast, only 13 men graduate students and 45 undergraduate men reported being harassed.

The report made no recommendations, but the two students — Christina Spaulding and Joseph DiNunzio — who directed the survey said Harvard's harassment policies and procedures are "wholly inadequate."

They recommeded a stronger policy statement with quarantees against reprisal, a system of advocates for victims and informing victims of the progress and results of cases.

Media, government, loyalty save Tylenol's image

REMARKABLE COMEBACK - Robert Whitaker of McNeil Consumer Products Company speaks on the resurgence of Tylenol last night.

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

After a tragedy which took Tylenol from a product whose sales by itself could rank among Fortune 500 companies to near extinction a week later, the company has almost fully recovered its original sales, according to an executive who helped engineer its rebirth.

"Our business is basically back," said Robert E. Whittaker, director of product management for McNeil Consumer Products Company, which has fought to restore the mammoth command of its market that Tylenol enjoyed before seven deaths in the Chicago area were attributed to cyanide poisoning of the product.

Speaking before a group of 180 students in the Campus Center, Whittaker explained the near panic situation which resulted when the non-aspirin pain reliever, which since 1978 was the nation's best selling health and beauty aid, fell victim to what is now believed to be random tampering. Publicity associating Tylenol with the deaths made it the number two story of the year in the country, second only to the economy, said Whittaker.

Whittaker said the company took several key steps in the weeks and months following the first three cyanide deaths reported on September 30, 1982, including a $100 million recall of all McNeil capsule products, full cooperation with government, medical, and media agencies, safety sealing of the reintroduced product, and the distribution of 800 million free coupons for Tylenol.

Although he said "the media did an excellent job of dealing with this," and public opinion consistently showed the company to be perceived as a blameless victim which acted in the public interest, Whittaker said the company had many skeptics that felt the name Tylenol could never be used again on any product. However, he said "The enduring loyalty of Tylenol users" and the openness of the company allowed it recover in a time shorter than most anyone would have expected.

Whittaker's appearance was the first in a lecture series sponsored by the marketing department of the School of Management.

Meeting condemns Grenadian invasion

By TOM MIDDLETON
Collegian Staff

After the Amherst Town Meeting Tuesday night 64 people stayed to endorse a letter condemning the use of force against the island of Grenada. The letter was sent to President Reagan, Rep. Silvio Conti and senators Paul Tsongas and Edward Kennedy.

"This is a violation of United States and international law," said town meeting member Mary Wentworth of district six.

"It's definitely bully-on-the-block type behavior that a country of 220 million is invading and declaring victory over a country of 100,000," added Wentworth.

Responding to the reasons given for the invasion Wentworth said, "That's a very thin pretext." Wentworth added, "There were ways we could have gotten American citizens out through negotiations."

During the town meeting, a proposal to appropriate $17,000 to expand and improve child care services passed 99-56.

A study report submitted to town meeting members by the child care committee stated that "local information and referral services were for the most part, either not used or not seen as providing helpful information regarding local child care services."

Opposing the motion, town meeting member Nancy Gordon said, "It's too vague." Gordon added, "Many other agencies provide child care referral."

"The parents of 100 percent of infants, 100 percent of toddlers, 66 percent of pre-schoolers, 66 percent of kindergarteners and 80 percent of elementary school aged children" favored some town funding for better information and referral services, stated the child care committee's report.

Centers provide parents' freedom

By MICHELLE HYDE
Collegian Staff

Editors note: This is the last of a three part series on chold care in the area.

In child care programs, children between the infant and kindergarten age develop socialization and learning skills, while the parents, either as students, employees or administrators can pursue educations or careers knowing their children are well cared for.

Child care centers are staffed by professionals, non-professionals, and students. They are equipped with fenced yards, sandboxes, art supplies, and cots for the children to take naps on.

Activities at the centers range from group discussions and daily meals to outdoor play and occasional trips to University gymnasiums.

"Everything here is geared toward children," said Michael Denney, director of the Grass Roots Day School of the University of Massachusetts Day Care system.

"This focus is not found at home or in the world at any other time during the children's life," he said.

In this atmosphere, "the child begins to learn a sense of self worth and to respond to other people by sharing and taking turns," Denny said.

But "it should be a good time for the children and they should want to be here," he said.

Carolyn Edwards, assistant professor of Education and director of the Human Development Laboratory School at UMass, said children who go to early education centers "develop schemes," by learning how to "do things with toys and people."

Denney said people who work "need to bring a child somewhere they know (he or she) will be nurtured and cared about."

Women who work at UMass and other colleges can especially benefit from child care because they are no longer forced to interrupt their careers when they have children. UMass is mandated to provide only eight weeks of maternity leave, although a woman can frequently negotiate a six month leave, Elizabeth Perkins, director of the UMass child Care System, said.

While Denney said child care is "a social service," William Field, UMass Dean of Students, said it is the "determining factor about whether (many women) can be part of this university."

Duffey defends proposed tuition hike

By RITA MURPHY
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey Thursday defended his proposed $50 tuition increase for next semester while telling the Faculty Senate the plan will help "the university do a better job in meeting" students academic requests.

"We have an opportunity to respond to a problem...(the tuition increase) is a way of responding to it."

Duffey, who will present his tuition increase plan to next weeks Board of Trustees meeting in Boston, said about 7,000 students would be granted exemptions from the $50 increase. Students currently receiving Pell grants and state scholarships would be exempted.

Student Government Association co-president Tom Ahern questioned Duffey at the meeting asking whether or not students receiving student loans and work study would also fall into the category of needy.

Duffey said they did not.

Following the meeting, Ahern asked "what is his definition of needy?"

Thomas E. Hutchinson, associate professor of Education, also questioned Duffey's proposal at the meeting asking whether or not tuition should be lowered instead of increased.

Duffey said the question of how much a student should pay to go to college is "a complex social policy question."

"There is a need for student aid to increase...but in the mix of all this I have begun to recognize reluctantly that low interest loans are now with us," he said.

One of the porblems higher education faces in respect to financial aid is people's "unwillingness to pay higher taxes" to help subsidize increases in the cost of education, he said.

Ahern called Duffey's tuition increase plan a "bandaid solution" to the problems on campus with respect to overcrowed classes.

Daylight Savings ends at 2 Sunday

By JOHN YONCE
Collegian Correspondent

Students can get an extra hour of sleep this weekend, thanks to Daylight Savings Time, which ends at 2 a.m. Sunday.

Daylight Savings Time, which was adopted by the U.S. in 1916, capitalizes upon the naturally longer days of the summer by moving the clocks ahead one hour, said David Van Blerkom, University of Massachusetts professor of astronomy.

"This is due to the fact that the axis which runs through the north and south poles is inclined so that at certain times we have longer hours of daylight than of night," he said. The difference in the length of day and night depends upon the distance the location is from the equator, Van Blerkom said.

Massachusetts, located at a latitude of about 42 degrees, has about 15 hours of daylight in midsummer as opposed to the North Pole, which can have full days of daylight.

Daylight Savings Time, which starts the last Sunday in April and runs to the last Sunday in October, has always had controversy surrounding it, Van Blerkom said.

"Daylight Savings Time has had a long complicated history surrounding it ... there are groups who have tried to oppose it and groups who have tried to put us on it permanently," he said. It has always been subject to "political compromise" by competing interest groups he said, citing the 1974 oil crunch as an example.

Van Blerkom said the current system employed in the U.S., which is set by law, has "no real astronomical reason," referring to the April and October endpoints.

Grad students learn of LSO

By SEAN CASEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Graduate Student Senate was addressed last night by Charles Dimare, Director of the University's Legal Services Office, who explained the offices uses.

Dimare explained that the office, which has four full-time lawyers and eight to 10 legal assistants on its staff, will represent or advise students on legal situations which face them in the areas of consumer and tenants rights, medical or legal malpractice and even in some criminal cases.

Dimare said that 20 percent of the offices workload involves students' disputes with the University.

Senate President Sanjiv Dugal said that Dimare's presentation was one of the many which the senate plans to have at its meetings this year to educate graduate students about services and programs available to them.

Also, last night, the senate voted to table a resolution condemning the U.S. invasion of Grenada on Tuesday.

The resolution was presented by Gerry Fishbein, a graduate student in the Labor Center, and a member of the Western Massachusetts Latin American Solidarity Committee.

Fishbein's resolution stated "The Graduate Student Senate condemns the invasion of Grenada. We believe that all troops should be immediately withdrawn from that independent nation."

The resolution was tabled until next week's senate meeting after some senators said they didn't have enough information yet to make a decision on the resolution. Some senators also said they doubted their power to make a ruling on a "political" issue without first speaking to their constituencies.

Fishbein said that he wanted the resolution passed at last night's meeting so that it could be presented along with similar resolutions to U.S. Rep. Silvio Conti (R-Mass) who will be in Northampton tomorrow. Fishbein did not say what other resolutions he was referring to.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Grenada - land of tropical beauty

The invasion of Grenada by the United States is just one more example of the callous militarism practiced by the Reagan administration. The war in Grenada has gone one step further than any other of Reagan's aggressions to date. It has introduced the direct involvement of U.S. troops in an offensive manner. It is an outrage equal to that of the Russian invasion of Afghanistan, but no one is talking about boycotting the Olympics this time.

John Gilman

The fact that Grenada is a small nation in our sphere of influence is not a justification for invading the country. Neither is the fact that the government is Marxist and strongly anti-American. The way we behave internationally, it is amazing the whole world is not anti-American. The U.S. spits out self-righteous rhetoric when condemning Russian expansionism and their disregard for the soveriegnty of their neighbors, but when we are the perpetrators of the heinous international crime, we stress the "atmosphere of violent uncertainty" in the region. The Reagan line is repugnant.

To fully understand the hypocrisy of the official justification for this invasion, we must examine some of the facts. The administration claims that one of the reasons we went into Grenada was to protect our citizens there. Reagan wanted to avoid another Iranian crisis. This line of reasoning ignores the fact that many of the parents of these students pleaded with the administration not to attack, the school's chancellor said they were safe, and the Grenadian officials sent a cable to our embassy in Barbados guaranteeing the safety of our students. This flimsy excuse must be discarded as a disdainful fabrication constructed for domestic consumption.

The purported invitation on the part of the members of the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States (OECS) is also a thin veil. The terms of the OECS treaty states that the organization may intervene in another state's internal affairs when they are under external attack, and then only with a unanimous decision on the part of the members. The U.S. intervention is not stopping an external attack, it is the external attack. The purported request was not advanced by a unanimous decision on the part of the OECS.

What of the Organization of American States in which both the U.S. and Grenada are members? I quote Article XV of the OAS treaty:

"No state or group of states has the right to intervene, directly or indirectly, for any reason whatever, in the internal or external affairs of any other state."

It is quite apparent that we have disregarded the terms of this treaty also.

Carter was criticized for not being tough enough on foreign affairs. He got pushed around by Marxists and terrorists, and refused to act decisively in the Iranian hostage crisis. However, one thing positive can be said about his handling of the crisis, which cannot be said about Reagan's policies in Lebanon, El Salvador, and now Grenada. No matter what failings of the Carter handling of the hostage crisis, he got them home alive.

Letters

Are these people real?

To the editor,

Having worked as an associate executive-editor for the Collegian I realize how difficult it is to get a decent response to the editorial page through letters-to-the-editors; so I sympathize with the editor's attempt to incite response, but ENOUGH IS ENOUGH!!! This hoax of an alleged columnist called "Steven P. Barrett" has gone from a good ploy on his part to an insult. Surely you don't expect us to believe that such an unashamed fool as "Steven P. Barrett," who is obsessed with his aggressive naivete, would continue to expose himself to us week after week?

No, Mr. Editor, it was a nice try but you've let your wild imagination run too far. Now the "Katherine Curda" ploy is much more plausible, but you've got to resist the temptation to push your fictitous columnists to the limits of rational thought and comprehension.

Good luck, though, I find the whole idea very amusing, if a little grey ethically.

Editor's note: These are real people, really!

Words say a thousand things

I don't love Bill. I hardly know Bill. From my first impression Bill is a witty, intelligent guy; but of course I could be wrong.

I first observed this blond-haired, hazel-eyed figure feeding himself what looked to be like semi-cool french-fries. As I moved nearer I noticed a graceful sway to his chair and then a determined look in his eyes. In the bustling business office, Bill was about to take time out of his schedule to give a gift even he didn't know he was sending: Encouragement.

Taara Eden Hoffman

Wrapped in style and charm, Bill's gift opened itself for me last week. When I told him I wanted to get involved -write articles, join organizations, I received continuous, positive roseate responses.

Lack of this promising, supportive spirit from others is a major cause of the boredom and intimidation in many students today. People need to hear enthusiastic feedback on their thoughts, ideas, dreams. Stagnation creeps up on us and it is really easy to get discouraged and despondent if there is little or no support around us.

"Run with it, run with it," is what I heard after I hesitantly suggested a possible theme for an article. "Go for it," Bill offered immediately. (Okay, so it's a cliche, but it sounds great when said with vim and vigor! - Excuse the cliche...)

A pat on the back in any form is always appreciated and well-received. A smile or nod or a positive point may be just what your friend, sister, relative, or current squeeze needs to get through the month, day, or moment.

There is no harm done in saying or doing something positive. You'll feel good for "being nice" and "helping out" and the recipient of your gesture will benefit, even if only in a small way. There's a saying that goes: "One small deed is bigger than the grandest intention." If you would like to praise or encourage, do so! Don't hold back. Tell people to "run with" whatever they want to accomplish; give the gift of encouragement.

Bill and I chatted briefly and then parted. Our first encounter was swift but full. I don't think my first impression was wrong, so this is To Bill, With Love.

Reflections on the free world

A 19 year old Argentine soldier who had just come back from the Malvinas (Falkland) Islands war called home from Buenos Aires, and tells his mother he had a fellow soldier with him who had lost his eyes, who had just lost his left leg and had his body burned by the British bombs. Moreover, he asked his mother if he could bring his friend home with him. His mother told she would be too disgusted by the sight of that friend. The 19 year old soldier shot himself in the head. That friend was nobody but himself!

Foad Vafaei

In any war similar stories occur too often. But when the President of a nation which has the power to literally burn every living species on this planet 30 times over, is jubilant about the idea of building more and more machineries of human destruction, talks about the Vietnam war as a "noble cause" (never mind if it resulted in the destruction of 1 million Vietnamese and 55,000 Americans), refuses to negotiate in any serious way any arms control agreement with the Soviet Union, talks about wars as though they were games, refuses to negotiate any peaceful settlement of the Central American crisis, opposing almost all other countries in the NATO alliance and our main allies in Latin America, that means we are so close to a nuclear war, that we no longer need to fear the emotional problems of the next world war. After all, in order to have emotional problems, one needs human beings, left alive.

Every political crisis has a human dimension to it. It is absolutely irresponsible to leave out these human dimensions and aspects while speaking in terms of "national interests" of the U.S., "combatting communism," "saving the free world," helping "friendly nations" etc. without looking beyond these terms.

Perhaps that is why there are still people among us who do not feel concerned when "our" ally the Salvadoran dictatorship is responsible for the murder, mutilation, and torture of 40,000 men, women, and children (and 4 American nuns) in the last 4 years alone, using the most barbaric and savage methods. But fortunately there are also those who do feel concerned and angered that this brutal regime has been able to because it has received 1 billion dollars in the last 3 years alone from our tax money; there are even those of us who feel disgusted when the administration attempts to justify its policy in Central America as promoting our national interests.

The conservative morons, with their self-confident stupidity, however, do not realize that when in the streets of Salvadoran cities every morning there are dead bodies of those who for the simple guilt of opposing a brutal regime, have been kidnapped, tortured, castrated, raped, mutilated, and killed by the government's security forces (to all this even our ex-ambassador Robert White could testify), when the Salvadoran air force uses American and Israeli fighter bombers to drop napalm over the villages of its own countryside, then this is not a struggle between East and West, it is not preserving any nation's security, it is not a "noble cause," and it is certainly not humanitarian. It is a crime against humanity pure and simple.

When the U.S. Ambassador Jeanne Kirkpatrick expounds upon our "moral" duties in supporting a regime made up of a group of gangsters and pathological killers one wonders about her morality. Isn't this the same morality which imposed (through a CIA inspired coup d'etat in 1973) the rule of murder, torture, and barbarism upon Chile (to save U.S. corporate interests)?

I bring these gruesome facts to light lest we forget that 'friendly' Latin American dictatorships (such as Chile, Uruguay, El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, Paraguay, etc.) are virtually armed to the teeth with U.S. aid, with the use of torture techniques such as the castration of men, the raping of women with hot metal rods, and electric shock for interrogation purposes. We must not forget the existence of impoverished slums is widespread, famine rampant, and basic freedoms non-existent; we must not forget that U.S. corporations have made 4 billion dollars (reported) net profit in Chile from 1910 to 1970 and that the Panamanian regime receives only 5 percent of the income of a canal on its own territory; we must not forget that there are definite causal links among all these facts, links whose perception will be possible only if we have the courage to use our common sense.

Shakespeare for Everyman

TAMING OF THE SHREW
October 27, 28, 29
Kirby Theater, Amherst College

By LORENA NOZZOLILLO
Collegian Correspondent

If you think you have to be either pretentious or an extreme intellect to appreciate Shakespeare, you may be in for a pleasant surprise. The Dramatic Arts Department at Amherst College has put together a production of The Taming of the Shrew that is a vibrant, entertaining comedy. Best of all, you don't have to be a student of Shakespeare to enjoy it.

Professor William Boughton of the Dramatic Arts Department at Amherst directed this latest production and in his own words describes it as being "a boisterous, bawdy, robust play." Boughton takes advantage of this "boisterous" appeal and produces an uproarious version of one of Shakespeare's finest comedies.

Unlike other directors who can sometimes make even the funniest of Shakespeare's comedies seem dry and tedious. Boughton and his cast give us a production that is genuinely and wholeheartedly fun to watch.

The "shrew" in the title refers to a character named Kate, daughter of Baptista Minola, a rich Italian merchant. Baptista has another daughter, Bianca, who has three suitors. However, Bianca cannot wed until her older sister finds a husband. Finding a husband for Kate is not an easy task, for she has acquired a reputation as being somewhat unpleasant (to say the least).

Petruchio, a roving fortune hunter, hears of Kate, and more importantly her impressive dowry, and volunteers to take on the shrew.

The following episodes with Kate and Petruchio contain some of the best comic warfare ever written for the stage. After marrying her, Petruchio tries to tame the fiesty Kate by killing her with kindness. In other words, given her a taste of her own medicine. The final result is that Kate is won over by Petruchio without completely sacrificing her independence.

The cast makes use of slapstick and schtick throughout the play. Every performer on stage uses an over abundance of camp and flourish. Chief among them were the two lead actors, Michael Higgens as Petruchio, and Moira Driscoll as Kate.

Higgens' performance is without a doubt the highlight of the show. He plays Petruchio with boundless amounts of energy, vibrance, and charisma. He takes a very untraditional approach to his role for at times it's like watching Robin Williams perform Shakespeare. Higgens makes the play all the more lively and enjoyable.

Driscoll is hysterical as the ill-tempered Kate. She could convincingly fly into a red-faced rage whenever necessary. She is also gifted with the voice of a drill sergeant, which enhanced her performance of the incorrigible shrew.

These two fine performers had ample support from a talented cast. Mark Lainer, who played Petruchio's servant Grumio, made an amusing sidekick. Also, Gremio played by Ezra Barnes convincingly played an elderly suitor of Bianca's.

Quality was also prevelent in the lavish sets and costumes. Jim Moran, a professor of Scenic Art at Northeastern University, designed the authentic looking set. The set had a definite Medieval look to it. The costumes were bright, colorful and well-tailored.

Boughton has put together a warm and funny version of a classic play by adding some modern flourish and making his show completely unique and refreshing.

Jim Roche: is the New Right really wrong?

By CHARLES FRANCIS CARROLL
Collegian Correspondent

The opening exhibit of Jim Roche's recent works, on view at the University Gallery is controversial, but according to a gallery spokesperson, not for the reasons one would expect. The controversy is not the use of swastikas, crosses, and explicitly anti-homosexual, anti-abortion slogans, but that there has not been more of a public outcry and only a few complaints. Why is it not taken seriously?

In it's first showing, What's Right is Right: What's Left is Wrong, is a series of works completed over the past two years which refer to the crucifixion of Christ between the two thieves. Created specifically for the University Gallery, the works are in two distinct forms: a series of reliefs representing southern roadside crosses with fundamentalist slogans painted on them and a sculpture group of hinged wooden crosses, spread open like sawhorses and painted on the inside with the primary colors and black representing Heaven and Hell.

The theme of these new works is the sense of right and wrong and the moral choice between them. The artist describes them as a "temporal interpretation of the New Right and the fundamentalist religious slogans that have appeared during these troubled times." The trouble, is that instead of offering us a choice, the New Right has already made our choice.

Roche follows with tribute to the artists who inspired the forms, such as Jesse Howard's dense sign calligraphy, W.C. Rice' crosses and slogans, and the fall from Grace in Dinsmore's cincrete sculptures. However, he separates himself from William Christenberry.

Unlike Christenberry, who atempts to exorcise the South of such cultural demons as the Ku Klux Klan, Roche's work tends to typify and esentialize certain Southern motifs to show a national trend. Each is concerned with documentation, but what they are actually documenting are their own responses. While Christenberry acknowledges the existence of the Klan within his own experience and environment, he presents them publicly in such a way that he exposes their secret, complex subculture as the cruel menace it is; Roche, however, is not implicating the hidden motives of the Moral Majority, but presenting them as genre, if not heralding them.

Roche's work can make us all the more determined against the forces of fascism and fundamentalism. Or it may reinforce them. Certianly it raises some other very important questions. How far can an artist go without falling over the edge of sensibility into poor taste, as was the case in The Nigger Show in New York several years ago. Afterall, these are public works being displayed at a university. Doesn't the artist have some responsibility for his images? What is the artist's role and stake in presenting such art?

In her essay, "Jim Roche's Days of Reckoning," Betty Rogers Rubenstein concludes that Roche has pushed the contemporary aesthetic to a place where it can illuminate as well as decorate; where it addresses an objective reality of society, and where the life of the spirit is recognized through the very telling of its death.

To the extent that Jim Roche is a complex man and a sophisticated artist, I concur with Rubenstein, but that he has leaned on the contemporary aesthetic may not be his achievement, but his artistic downfall, despite his critical success.

It may well be that Roche is solely an opportunist. Producing such work is politically expedient and right relative to the rise of the New Right.

It may be that Jim Roche is speaking for an element of white rural poor who behold the New Right as a solution to their poverty. Although he has succeeded in his career, he speaks as if there were no distinction between his values and the values he chooses to represent. But the artworks speak best for themselves. They might not express your values or mine but they should not be ignored.

Students, professor speak about Grenada

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Students at the University of Massachusetts met twice this week to protest U.S. military intervention in Grenada. But the rallies did more than arouse the concern of many students who have not heard of the island before the problem emerged. The Grenadian situation have also frightened and enraged students from the Caribbean and other Third World countries.

George McKenzie, a senior social thought and political science major from Jamaica said "the situation (U.S. intervenence) suggest the paranoia existing in Washington, primarily in the Reagan Administration."

"America has always been aware of Reagan's potential to resort to barbarism. He chose Granada as a point of action" he said.

McKenzie said there's enough evidence to suggest that from the incept of the Grenadan Revolution in March 13 of 1979 the State Department and the Carter Administration adopted a certain posture against Grenada.

The scattered gunfire that broke out in Grenada on October 21 was merely the climax of this he said.

Carter's posture began with the creation of a task force McKenzie said. The sole intention of such task force was to strengthen the ties of what the New York Times calls the 'radical minds of the Caribbean', he said.

McKenzie said he believes the island of Belize, who gained its independence less than five years ago will be the next Caribbean nation to suffer from an U.S. invasion.

Its geographic location and its commitment to social change will lure the U.S. to invade, he said. "Belize's present location of military forces is so positive as to intimidate Belizian people," he said.

Speaking about his native country, McKenzie said that extending from the socio-political ramification of the situation, the same policies applied in Jamaica in the overthrow of Michael Gerry "brought in the downplow in Grenada."

"(The United States) blantly disrespected the sovereignty of an independent nation" Robert Teixeira, a Senior Afro-am/Economics major said.

Texteira, a member of the Student Senate and the Third World caucus said the Cuscus condemned U.S. invasion in Grenada and demanded an immediate troop withdrawal, he said.

"The invasion's purpose was an attempt to destroy one social system-Marxist to one friendlier to the U.S.'s" he said.

Texteira claims the U.S. violated a charter of the Organization of American States (OAS) which states that a non-member nation may not intervene onto member nation.

The U.S. is not a member of the OAS, he said. "The invasion supposedly legitimized future invasions all over the world," he said. Teixeira said by invading the Caribbean nation, the U.S. is setting itself for severe criticism and isolation.

Jane Rausch, history professor at UMass said the U.S. intervention was a "predictable response" Rausch also said the invaion was historicly conceivable.

"If we are going to pick on someone why don't we pick on somebody our size," she said.

McKenzie proposed the Caribbean nations should join voices and denounce the presence of Americans and their immediate removal from the Caribbean.

"Let the local population allowed to decide the future of their society. (They should) join their voices with forcing and advancing the slogan used in the Grenadan revolution 'Forward forever backwards never,'" he said.

Zoo Disc, Zulu in tournament in SW

By TIM RIVIERE
Collegian Staff

Zoo Disc, the University of Massachusetts ultimate frisbee team, successfully defended their Western New England Sectional title last weekend and qualified for this weekend's New England Intersectional tournament being held Saturday and Sunday at the Southwest playing fields. Zulu, the UMass women's team also qualified for the women's intersectionals.

The intersectionals are the second leg of three leading to the National Championship in New Orleans. The top four teams will qualify for regional championships at SUNY-Purchase and a shot at the National Championships.

This weekend's field will be a competitve one that will feature some of the finest teams in the nation. The Spinsters, a Boston based women's team will head the field of women's teams anxious to take over the top spot in the Northeast, currently occupied by Zulu, the defending national champions.

The Rude Boys, also from Boston - defending national men's champion and The Hostages, ranked fourth in the country will be Zoo Disc's main competition.

Last weekend, Zoo Disc went undefeated as they topped Clark, Westfield State, UConn, and McGill (Montreal) handily on Saturday. On Sunday, the Disc Demons from Central Connecticut fell 15-3 in the quarter-finals. Zoo Disc topped Vermont 15-5 in the semi's to set up a repeat of the last three sectional finals.

The Dukes, an aging club from Greenwich, Conn. were the opposition for the third straight year. Although the Dukes ran out to an early 5-2 lead, Zoo Disc called time out and regrouped to take a 9-6 lead at halftime.

In the second half, 'the boys from the Zoo' walked way and had won their fourth consecutive Western Sectional title.

Action will begin at 9 a.m. on both Saturday and Sunday.

UM travels to UConn for Big game

Offense and defense to be tested, Contest vital to YC playoff hopes

By KEVIN DELUCA
Collegian Staff

When a team in the Yankee Conference opens up conference play with a loss, it usually must win the remainder of its conference games for any chance at the title and subsequent Division 1-AA playoff berth.

Such is the case with the University of Massachusetts Minutemen, who opened their Yankee Conference schedule with a 13-3 loss to Rhode Island but have since rebounded to defeat Maine and Boston University and set up Saturday's 1 p.m. "must win" show down at the nearby University of Connecticut against the first-place Huskies. and a rejuvenated offense and both will be tested by UConn (2-0 in YC, 3-4 overall.)

The UConn offenses is led by running back Billy Parks, who averages 4.5 yards a run and was named YC Offensive Player-of-the-Week for his 205-yard effort against Maine last week.

Whether or not the Minuteman defense can stop Parks could be the key to the game as the highly-ranked Umass pass defense should be able to handle Husky quarterback Larry Corn. Corn has only a .470 completion percentage and has thrown only two touchdowns while being intercepted six times.

On defense, UConn is led by the much-heralded linebacking duo of Vernon Hargreaves and John Dorsey. Together they have 205 tackles. Mike Latham is also a standout at free safety with seven interceptions.

The UConn defense will have to be at its best, however to stop the overhauled, diversified, suddenly productive UMass offense, which has helped produce two straight victories.

Minuteman quarterback Barrett McGrath, who started the season as the third string quarterback, cemented his position as the starting quarterback with an 18 of 33, 230 yard passing day against Boston University.

The other big reason for the spark now present in the Minuteman offense is tailback/split end George Barnwell, who started playing tailback the same time McGrath became quarter back the second half of the Maine game. Barnwell averages 8.6 yards every time he touches the ball.

Saturday's contest should be an emotional, hard-fought battle. The defensive prowess and the excellent linebackers of both teams (do not forget the Minuteman's fine pair of linebackers: Craig Lesinski and Mike Favreau, YC Defensive Player-of-the-Week) should make this clash a low-scoring affair.

"Historically, this has been a great football rivalry. It's Homecoming for us and there'll be a big crowd," observed UConn first-year coach Tom Jackson.

PURSUIT - Duckworth Grange tries to avoid the pursuit of this Terrier last week and UMass hopes to do the same as they take on Connecticut tomorrow at 1:30 p.m. in Storrs.

In recent history, UMass has won five of the teams past six meetings, as well as holding a 30-21 series lead. However, as UMass coach Bob Pickett commented, "This is probably the best UConn football team in the past four or five years."

The game can be heard on WTTT 1430 AM or WMUA 91.1 FM.

UMass defensive unit has possible prospects

By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Staff

The Yankee Conference football season has passed the midway point and is heading down the home stretch. One thing that has kept the University of Massachusetts, who faces UConn in a crucial game tomorrow, in the race has been their defense.

The UMass defense has been nothing short of outstanding this season. They have played six strong games in a row. The 45-13 loss opening day blowout loss to Toledo is the only bad performance for defensive coach Jim Reid's unit. Toledo is a I-A team while UMass is I-AA. The Hens possess one of the most explosive offenses in the nation. It is ranked in the top 10 in a few categories.

The Minuteman pass defense, which was ranked fourth in I-AA before the BU game, has allowed an average of just 110 yards a game through the air.

Cornerstones in this tremendous defensive effort are several UMass players, who may have emerged as pro prospects.

Grady Fuller, a tri-captain, is a two time All-American who has great size (6' 2, 190) and great football instincts. He is the leader on the Minuteman defense. If he can manage to run the 40 in 4.6, he could get drafted by the NFL. He should be playing on some level of pro ball after graduation. (After all, there are four leagues to choose from - the NFL, CFL, USFL, and IFL are in business.)

Middle guard Peter Tracy is only a junior but has already shown what it takes to play pro ball. He is a dominating player against any offensive line he has faced thus far. Tracy is small for a pro middle guard, but he is doing just fine for UMass.

Linebacker Mike Favereau was named the Yankee Conference Defensive player of the week with his two sacks of Jin English and his part in a UMass interception. Favereau returned to football this year after a two year hiatus.

Perhaps the strongest player on the team, Favereau uses his tremendous strength to his advantage with incredible tenacity. He is similiar to former Minuteman Joe McLaughlin, now a member of the NFL Giants. And Favereau is only a junior.

Another top player in the defensive backfield is John Shay who received the Golden Helmet award for his outstanding performance earlier in the fall after the Havard game.

It will be up to these men and the rest of the UMass D to stop the Huskies tomorrow.

Busy weekend for UMass sports at home and on the road

UMass takes on BC

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

The third ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team faces a must win situation if they are to get a bye in the upcoming NCAA playoffs, as they travel cross-state to face the fifth ranked and always tough Boston College Eagles tonight, at 7 p.m.

"They are one of the fiercest competitors. Both teams look forward to this game, there are no motivation problems. It is going to be physical, but we're going to go for it," said UMass coach Kalekeni Banda.

"We knew why we lost to Harvard. It wasn't a big letdown. We knew they were good, despite their record, and we couldn't take it lightly. In our minds, we have to go to BC and play aggressive and competitive soccer for 90 minutes," said Banda.

The women booters are relatively healthy going into their last game of the season (Jamie Watson's knee being the only quesiton mark). The three goals scored against them by Harvard are two more than any other team had managed to put on the scoreboard against them all season.

UMass is led in scoring by senior tri-captain Stacey Flionis, who now has eight goals and 18 points on the season. She is followed by Ellen Taggart who has compiled five goals and 12 points, and Nadia Komarowski who has five goals and 11 points.

BC, who has the natural home field advantage, will also benefit with the use of their astroturf field which they are used to and UMass is not. It will make the game faster because the balls will be livelier and bounce higher.

"We know we have to play good to win it. We have to beat them to the ball. BC will be more offensive minded. We still have to go out and think defense, and then counterattack and hopefully they will make a mistake and we will catch them off balance. We will have to take chances this time. The offensive attack will have to produce goals and the defensive players must have their best game," added Banda.

"When you play them, you have to play with 90 percent from your heart and with 10 percent skill. Whoever wants it more and gets a little luck, will win. It will be a difficult game for both teams," commented Banda.

Win or lose, UMass, with a 9-2-3 record will be in the playoffs. A win would insure a good chance for a bye, but a loss certainly would put a damper on those chances. Either way, the Minutewomen have had a productive season.

Stickers host WRams

By GERRY DESIMAS
Collegian Staff

There will be two things on the minds of the University of Massachusetts field hockey team when they take the field against Rhode Island tomorrow at 1 p.m. at NOPE.

First, according to co-captain Carol Pregulske, the fifth ranked Minutewomen will be looking for a win over the unranked Rams. Secondly, they will be looking to score and score big.

"We dropped out of the Top 4 and we would like to crank up the scores to show them (rankings commitee) that we have a lot of scoring power," Pregulske said.

Now no one likes to turn the score up on anybody, but UMass will be trying to edge past fourth ranked New Hampshire and try to get one of those automatic byes into the NCAA's.

"We would love to move up into the top four, "UMass head coach Pam Hixon said after the Dartmouth game. "We are looking to finish as strong as possible." Whether that be in fifth or fourth place.

Rhode Island is a little weaker than in past years and has a new head coach, according to Pregulske. But the Minutewomen will have to play just as hard to improve on their 12-2-1 slate.

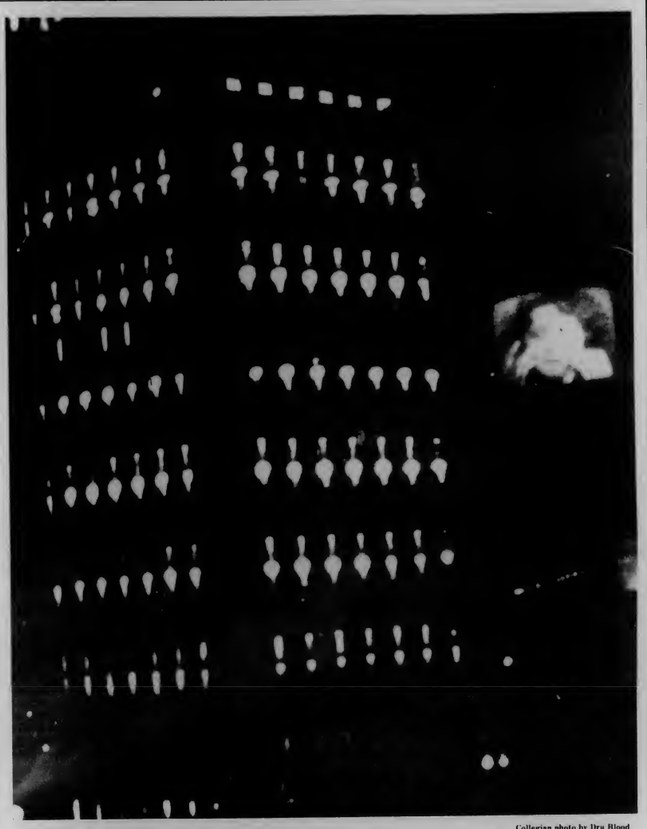
Men's soccer hosts Boston

By MIKE LEVINE
Collegian Correspondent

It's got to happen sooner or later. Nobody knows when, but you can feel that the floodgates are going to open eventually.

The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team (2-8-5) has felt the frustration of a season-long scoring drought (just seven goals in fifteen games), and with only five games left in the season, one hopes that the floodgates will open soon.

Minuteman coach Jeff Gettler attributed the lack of scoring punch to a lack of composure near the goal following his team's 1-0 victory over Westfield State, last Wednesday.



Although the Minutemen did a fine job defensively, they had several breakaways that were either nullified by offside calls or resulted in off-target shots.

The UMass offfense will have a chance to get untracked tomorrow afternoon at 1 p.m. at Boyden Field when they face their cross-state rivals from Boston College. Will this be the game that the Minutemen have been waiting for all season long?

Duffey takes hostages in tower

By MITCH PSORIASIS
Collision Chaff

Apparently upset that the Senate Government Association has not responded to his threat to cut all funds to the organization if they do not rewrite their Constitution, Chancellor Joseph Duffey has taken a dramatic stand.

Barricaded on the 26th floor of the Tower Library with a heavily armed band of renegade administrators, Duffey has taken dozen innocent students hostage.

"If I don't get a copy of a new Student Government Association Constitution by Oct. 28, bodies will be falling like rain," he said.

Members of the UMass Security SWAT Team moved quickly to cordon off the tower area. A Spokesman for the SWAT Team said the operation to close off the library area ran into little opposition, and went smoothly.

He did express confusion when some students asked if the SWAT Team was going to build a rope bridge over the campus pond. "Who'd do a dumb thing like that" he said.

Members of the library staff were treated for shock at the Infirmary.

"It was a nightmare," said librarian Lulu Labomba. "The guerillas just overpowered the staff on the main floor. You could see the blood-lust in their eyes through their horned-rim glasses. I mean, they didn't even show us their faculty-staff I.D. cards." She gasped, before swooning onto an infirmary cot.

The only relief from the incredible pressure came in the afternoon, when hostage Dawn O'Day was allowed to leave. "Chancellor Duffey said he didn't believe I was a student." said the newly-declared astronomy major.

"I was, like, you know, studying for an exam. I always study on the 26th floor because I like to be close to the sky? Really! You know? Well, anyway, like there I was, looking at these neat pictures of galaxies and stuff when these guys wearing grey pin-stripe suits ran into the room waving machetes and machine-guns and stuff. They were, like totally rude, you know? They kept yelling things like eat carpet, sucker! Hey! Grody to the MAX! I'm bummed, totally. Do you think my prof will let me take a Make-up? O'Day said.

Thomas Ahern, co-President of the SGA, expressed surprise, shock, irritation, frustration, defiance, and chagrin at the belligerent Chancellor's action.

"I'm pissed," he said.

Senate Speaker Chris Sullivan, chairman of the task force on constitutional revisions, was also incensed. "The SGA refuses to be intimidated by the Chancellor into fulfilling our responsibilities. Just because our Constitution is thirty years out of date doesn't mean anything's wrong with it. Look, seeing as I have the only copy left that hasn't turned to dust you can take my word for it," he said.

Students to fight overseas

WASHINGTON (PU) — In a surprise announcement Sunday, President Reagan announced the immediate draft into military service of all college-aged students, male and female.

The action was "a direct response to the aggressions of the Soviet Union and Cuba in Grenada, Beirut, and other areas worldwide," Reagan said.

"It's a good thing we've got the Solomon Amendment and the draft registration working smoothly- everybody is already classified and ready to go," Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinburger said in a press conference following Reagan's radio address. "And with the Solomon Amendment (requiring all students receiving financial aid to register), our nation's finest- our college students, will be the first to go," Weinburger added.

The new draft encompasses all U.S. citizens between the ages of 17 and 26 who are not physically handicapped or otherwise judged unfit for military service. Draftees will be given further instructions on what military base to report Tuesday.

"This is the first time since I can remember when we're giving our draftees a choice of where to do their military service- the tropical beauty of Grenada or the Mediterranean climate of Beirut," Reagan said.
"A select few will even be sent to Nicaragua, El Salvador and Guatemala, to squelch Communist aggression and warmongering in our own backyard," he said.

"Our armed forces are not just a job, they're an adventure," first lady Nancy Reagan said during an interview with a Collegian reporter Sunday night.

"Each soldier will receive a bag of jellybeans, a bottle of ketchup (Ronnie's favorite vegetable), and one of those cute little machine guns I see on TV detective shows," the first lady added.

As a result of the President's shocking announcement, an expected 30 million young adults will be expected to engage in anti-guerilla "seek-and-destroy" missions by early next week, after two days of intensive training and conditioning.

While women will be expected to participate in the military exercises, an unreleased percentage will be expected to stand on the sidelines, and cheer "USA all the way," and "Kill those Commies-kill those Reds- none alive-kill them dead."

The first lady has volunteered the services of herself and her friend Betsy Bloomingdale to supervise the cheerleader training sessions.

The President himself has said he will help teach "swaggering masculinity and lusty patriotism" to the male draftees.

GOSSIP / VICIOUS RUMORS

Policy Editor

We the Editors of the Collegian rarely express our consensus opinion in policy editorials such as these, but several things have come to our attention lately that have been upsetting us, and merit our comment.

Like, we realize that a lot of people have been getting killed, and like, you know, we should all be nice to each other, and stop fighting over things. It's just not the way to do things right. Peace is totally the way to go, and so we think that we should let whomever wants to govern those little countries with big, complicated names that keep fighting do just that, and govern themselves. And we want everyone in the country to drive expensive cars and eat processed foods while watching Spotlight on TV, and all those other things the American Dream is made of. And we want everyone, especially UMass alumnae to be whatever they want to be when they grow up.

And as for school, we should let everyone that wants to go to UMass go, and live in whatever dorm they want and get lots of financial aid with no strings attached, and eat really good, nutritious food at the D.C.'s and everything. And then we'd like to see students get really interesting but easy professors so they can learn a lot while still being able to go out and have a lot of fun and engage in socially-rewarding extracurricular activities and make lots of spending money working part-time at fascinating, federally-funded work study jobs. And everyone should be able to go out on dates and have meaningful yet non-restrictive relationships with the person or persons of their choice. And then everything will be fine.

Drivel

I just can't believe it!

To the Editor,

I never believed the stories I read in the Collegian's Op/Ed section, until last week, I was in the Tower Library elevator, going to study for my Turf Management 101 exam. All of a sudden these three coed triplets get on and I'm telling you they're hot. So the blonde one stops the thing between floors and turns to me. Eying my "sta-prest" Dad'n'Lad Designer jeans and worn yet still black Def Leppard tee shirt, she smiles knowingly. The elevator gets steamy and starts to quiver, and she ever so slowly reaches for my...

And just then the elevator door opened and I ran away.

Oppression rages at UMass

To the Editor,

Once again, the Collegian has ignored an important sector of the University community. The emergence of our sorority for grandmothers, Gramma Gramma Gramma, has gone completely unreported in this persnickety newspaper.

Have you young whippersnappers no compassion? Who showered Barbie dolls and Tonka trucks on you in the materialistic days of your childhood? Who wasn't the least bit resentful when you rebuffed her offer of dancing lessons? And who, now that you're in college, sends you lemon meringue pies and encourages you to call...collect? Granma, that's who.

And nevertheless, you mentioned not a word of our recent boo-boo-kiss-athon, or the Lawrence Welk appearance which we sponsored. You ungrateful hooligans had best shape up, or we're going to speak to Santa about this...

Most sincerely,

Elizabeth Windsor, president
Gramma Gramma Gramma sorority

Letters Policy — Nobody ever really pays attention to this, but we'll continue to accept chicken scratch writing in crayon on beer-soaked Blue Wall cocktail napkins as long as they keep us howling with laughter as they have in the past. In keeping with Collegian policy (the official newspaper of the 1984 Olympics) no matters pertaining to religion, politics, academics, or sex will be accepted. But keep those letters coming! It saves us the trouble of coming up with good ones ourselves.

Halloween is oppressive

Every year Halloween comes around: big deal. You get hundreds of little rug rats running around yelling "Trick or Treat". You get tons of bozo college students making idiots of themselves by partying down and wearing ridiculous costumes as they throw up all over the place, and attempt to bag some babe or guy if they can get their words out without slurring or passing out.

Lake Province

But what is Halloween, really? It is a giant capitalist rip off, designed to pacify people and make them forget about real problems and oppression that they face, like the price of nuked whale meat at the super marker,etc. Candy manufacturers push their workers to the breaking point, causing hundreds to drown in chocolate vats, and many more to be maimed for life. Lets think about that the next time we bite into a Mounds or Snickers Bar. There's a lot more Musketeers in those bars than three.

Costume retailers "pimp off" the masses desires to be able to dress up, for once in the whole year, and through fantasy escape, if only for a moment the miserable conditions of their existence. Did you ever notice how prices for costumes rise dramatically as Halloween approaches, then ence built into all those gorilla masks. They fall apart after two days, so if you bought yours three days before Halloween you're out of luck and about twenty dollars.

Then there's all that bull about the great pumpkin rising out of the pumpkin patch. Clearly this is nothing but a feeble attempt at reimposing religion and superstition on people, especially with the bogus competition for the most sincere pumpkin patch.

But people are throwing off the centuries of oppression stemming from this idiotic excuse for a celebration. People United for a Socialist Halloween, (PUSH) is holding an alternative Halloween. They will be selling Albanian and Cuban candies, made under non-exploitative conditions, and with pure Havana sugar. Russian sales advisers will also be there, as will Vietnamese boat people costumes, from the Republic, for cheap. Augusto Sandino masks will be handed out at the Nicaraguan booth for free. Join PUSH, remember you have nothing to lose but your rotting teeth.

POWER BACK — Lights shine in Southwest residential college after power was restored Saturday night. A ruptured cable put much of the area in darkness.

Power cable darkens dorms in Southwest

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

A ruptured electrical transmission cable left most of the Southwest Residential Area without power for an hour and a half Saturday night.

Physical Plant technical specialist Donald Sturtevant said power went out around 10:15 Saturday night in most of Southwest and in Tobin Hall and Boyden gym. Power in Cance, Moore and Pierpont dormitories went out for about 20 minutes, according to Pierpont head of residence Gay Douglas.

Sturtevant said an eletric cable blew up, and a contractor was called in Sunday to repair the damage. Power to most dorms was restored through an alternate cable after an hour and a half, he said, and emergency hall and exit lights remained on through the blackout.

Douglas said Pierpont, Moore and Cance dormitories were not affected by the original power failure, but experienced a 20-minute blackout after power was restored to the rest of Southwest.

Official damage estimates were not available Sunday, but residents reported the area remained calm during the blackout.

"Things were actually pretty quiet," departmental assistant Bruce Frauman of Washington dormitory said. He said there were no reports of students throwing objects out of windows or damaging property.

"We had a residential assistant outside looking for that, but he said it was pretty calm," Frauman said. "I think part of the advantage was that a good number of students went home for the weekend."

Frauman said emergency lights stayed on during the blackout and elevators went down to the bottom floors and stayed there until a physical plant worker came and fixed one.

Draft bill no surprise to staff

By STEVE HOWE
Collegian Correspondent

The Massachusetts Senate's passage of a bill Wednesday linking state financial aid funds to draft registration came as no surprise to him said Director of Financial Aid Arthur Jackson.

Jackson said University officials thought the bill, a state-level version of the federal Solomon Amendment would be passed as soon as it was introduced last March.

Jackson said almost all students on campus have complied with the statute, though they are divided on the ethics of mandatory registration compliance.

Jackson said his office took measures to meet the requirements of the bill when the federal statute became law over the summer, which included mailing letters to all male aid recipients to remind them of the law's provisions.

The bill now goes to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis for approval.

Blue Wall age barrier abolished

By JEFF BAKER
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts students under the age of 20 will be allowed into the Blue Wall beginning next week, the Campus Center Board of Governors (BOG) decided last week.

The campus bar will issue wrist bands to patrons of the legal drinking age, enabling them to purchase alcohol, said BOG chair Mike Reilly.

The BOG also said it will emphasize an "all ages show" at the Blue Wall with David Johansen Friday night. Tickets will go on sale this week at all UPC Data Tix locations and at the Fine Arts Center.

Tickets will also be available at the door.

In other business, the board discussed the installation of automatic bank teller machines in the Campus Center. Three banks, Bay Bank, Bank of Boston, and Shawmut are being considered. If everything runs smoothly, the first of these tellers should be seen in the spring.

The Board voted 1-8-6 against letting Divida Gordon sell her jewelry in the Campus Center. Board member Scott Cohen argued that Gordon's work is unique and on that merit, she should be allowed to sell the Indian crafted jewelry. While the Board had recently established a ceiling on the number of jewelry vendors on the concourse, Cohen felt "we had an obligation to hear her."

The campus bar will issue wrist bands to patrons of the legal drinking age, enabling them to purchase alcohol, said BOG chair Mike Reilly.

The Campus Center Music and Reading Room will soon be getting an $800 selection of new tapes. Building Operations Director Sandy Forbes compiled a list of tapes ranging from George Benson to The Police, and passed out a survey to 50 students and received an "accurate sample of their liking."

Regents will vote on plan

By TAMI BORTON
Collegian Staff

When the Massachusetts Board of Regents of Higher Education meet Nov. 7 on campus, they will be voting to approve the latest revision of the Long Range Plan.

The document establishes a five-year outline addressing the planning process for education, public services and the Physical Plant on the UMass campus. The plan is part of a larger set of guidelines entitled "Opportunities for Quality" which also serves the UMass/Boston campus, the Worcester campus and the University as a whole.

This is the third such plan from the university to appear before the Regents, who request a similar planning analysis from public institutes of higher education across the state.

The major difference between this plan and the other two is the appointment of a Planning Council which will assess "the goals and objectives for the campus as an ongoing process," said Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey.

The plan is divided into two major parts, campus priorities and management strategies.

The top priority is the maintenance of the UMass reputation of excellence in graduate education and research.

"This represents the area of greatest opportunity for campus," Duffey said.

Undergraduate education, the second priority, will be "enhanced and built on the fact that the campus has been a center of distinction (for graduate studies)," Duffey said.

The goal of the undergraduate programs is to provide comprehensive and balanced offerings for as many students as resources permit.

Other priorities on campus include maintenance and renovation through the Physical Plant and an increase in the scope and efficiency of the university as a visible public service to the commonwealth.

The plan also provides provision for management strategies including graduate and undergraduate enrollment, faculty, professional and classified staff and University development and relations.

Jackson enters race

NEW YORK AP — The Rev. Jesse Jackson announced Sunday he will seek the 1984 Democratic presidential nomination and said he would try to choose a female running mate.

The civil rights leader, in an interview recorded for the CBS-TV program "60 Minutes," said he would formally announce his candidacy Thursday in Washington. He is seeking to become the first black presidential candidate nominated by a major party.

Although many black political leaders have said they will not support him, fearing such a campaign would be divisive, Jackson said, "No candidate can expect to have unanimous support from any given community."

On the subject of a running mate, Jackson was asked by CBS correspondent Mike Wallace, "Are you now saying that you will choose, if you can, a woman, be she white or black?"

"There's no doubt about it," Jackson replied.

Jackson said he will try to win votes from younger Americans.

"Twenty-five percent of all the eligible black voters are between the ages of 18 and 24," Jackson said. "The group had been voting at about a 10 percent level. It's obvious it would move above 50 percent now."

Jackson said of 18 million eligible black voters, only 10 million are registered.

"If we move to get another 3 million on the books by next November, we will have changed Democratic options in the primaries," he said.

The 42-year-old Jackson heads Operation PUSH, a Chicago-based community-service organization that concentrates on registering voters.

Jackson said he wants to be president because "I'm concerned about our measure for greatness."

"I want to help again measure greatness by how we treat children in the dawn of life, how we treat poor people in the pit of life and how we treat old folk in the sunset of life," he said.

Economist predicts 1985 recession

WASHINGTON (AP) — The United States, basking in economic recovery, could suffer a new recession by 1985 - with Americans facing a big tax increase to boot - unless longshot efforts succeed in slashing the federal deficit, a leading private economist says.

Similar predictions, once dismissed as coming merely from isolated "doomsayers," suddenly are appearing from several quarters - from Congress, mainstream economists and even a top Reagan administration official.

The problem faced by these analysts is that they're sounding the alarm at a time when the economy is reviving strongly after the 1981-82 recession.

But Lawrence Chimerine, chairman of Chase Econometrics, a forecasting firm in Bala Cynwyd, Pa., said deficits are likely to persist around $200 billion a year for years, barring unexpectedly aggressive action to cut the federal budget.

Senate debates gay legislation

BOSTON (AP) — The state Senate Ways and Means Committee is expected to recommend this week the defeat of emotionally charged legislation to ban discrimination against homosexuals.

The powerful committee apparently has split over the legislation backed by gay rights groups, with the majority voting to recommend the bill be killed.

Name-calling in the usually staid Senate charged a fiery debate earlier this month over the proposed mandate, and the committee's report is expected to fuel another emotional exchange on the floor this week.

Proponents of the bill, which narrowly passed the House in late September, said the tougher battle in the Senate where initial votes early this month were one vote apart.

It would have taken a miracle to come out with a favorable report," Arline Isaacson, lobbyist for the Massachusetts Gay Political Caucus, said. She noted the committee included some of the bill's most vocal opponents.

Next week, proponents led by Sen. Royall Bolling Sr., D-Boston, will try to substitute the bill for the adverse report, and Ms. Isaacson was cautious about predicting the outcome.

"We have a decent shot at it," she said. "I honestly don't know. I'm still polling people."

Sen. Philip Shea, D-Lowell, said Ways and Means held an executive session where Chairman Sen. Chester Atkins urged the bill be brought out for consideration. Atkins voted for the bill during initial debate.

"There were more members on the committee that were against the bill than for the bill so I expect it will come out adverse," Shea said.

Shea was one of several senators who argued against the bill a month ago before it was sent to the committee.

Propaganda — alive and well

To the Editor,

Last year, in a history class, the professor lectured to us about the use of propaganda. He presented to us an actual Nazi propaganda film, filmed in the mid 1930s in Germany, in which the Nazi movement was praised for strengthening Germany, and diminishing that nation's economic woes. At the end of the film the announcer closed with these words to the public "That's all you need to know."

Lately, it seems President Reagan is following closely in the footsteps of Joseph Goebbels (Hitler's propagandist) when it comes to the public's right to information.

Not only did Reagan not allow members of the press on Grenada during the initial invasion, on the excuse the press would be in danger and the element of surprise would be lost, even now, three days after the event, according to the New York Times, he is only allowing 25 members of the press to be shuttled in and out of Grenada by the US armed forces.

So far, the only film coverage of the war in Grenada was filmed and edited by the army, and is strangely reminiscent of the Nazi propaganda films in its lack of opposing viewpoints.

I am not saying that our society in any way resembles that of Nazi Germany. However, when a president on the one hand claims the United States is the world's center of democracy and morality, and uses the armed forces as world policeman, he cannot with the other hand precipitate propagandist tactics that were once the stronghold of a vile, murderous, fascist society.

If ever the facts come out about what happened and is happening in Grenada, it will not be from mouth of our highest elected official; elected to lead we, the people, not rule over us and deny us information that is vital to our well-being.

Write now or we pay later

To the Editor,

It is with great sadness that I write to you. In the wake of the 149 plus deaths and the 69 plus injuries to the American Marines in Lebanon, what further reason can there be for keeping American men in a war torn country as sitting ducks? Enough blood and tears have been shed.

Let us find a graceful way to bow out of our political/strategic obligations; we have a far greater obligation to the American people not to shed the blood of any more American men unnecessarily.

Please take the time today to write our elected officials. A thirteen cent postcard stating "Bring the Boys Home from Lebanon" (and elsewhere) will only take moment. Many American men's lives depend on the love and support of the American people here at home. Please write today. Don't allow another Vietnam.

P.S. Don't forget to write to President Reagan! And to mention the POW's and MIA's that still need help to come home.

Bring the boys back home

To the Editor,

What has happened this week in Lebanon is a tragedy. As Americans, we naturally grieve first for the more than 230 U.S. soldiers who died in Sunday's attack. In our mourning, however, we must not forget that the tragedy began, not on Sunday, but with the Israeli invasion of Lebanon last June and the dispatch of U.S. forces last September. When we remember the dead, we must also remember the other six Americans, the more than five hundred Israelis, and the tens of thousands of Lebanese and Palestinians killed since June 1982, including those slaughtered at the Sabra and Shatila refugee camps. Merely mourning these deaths is not enough. In respect of the dead, but for the sake of the living, we must ask: why did they die? What are U.S. troops doing in Lebanon at all?

Clearly, the role of the Marines has changed. When Reagan sent them to Beirut, following the massacre of Palestinians by the right-wing Phalange militia to which Israel turned a blind eye, they were described as peacekeeping forces. By their sheer physical presence, they separated the warring factions. This fall, though, U.S. troops started returning fire "in self-defense." They went on to provide artillery and air cover for Phalange battles with Druse and Moslem armies. Now, the U.S. Marines are unabashedly fighting alongside the Phalange. The Reagan administration has moved from peacekeeping to warmaking in Lebanon.

And for what? The so-called government of Amin Gemayel represents a minority of a minority, a fraction of the Maronite Christian population in a predominantly Moslem and Druse nation. Gemayel's Phalange party came to power through intimidation and rigged election; in a country where only Christians can be President, the Phalange have spent the last seven years wiping out all rival Christian groupings. They are self-confessed rascists — the name "Phalange" is taken from Franco's party in Spain. Far from restoring peace to the country, their continued claim to govern promises only more death and destruction, and threatens Lebanon's survival as an independent nation.

The U.S. plays no useful part to play in Lebanon, and what we have been doing has cost lives for no good purpose. As in Central America, we should stop trying to dictate our policies to other countries. It is up to us, the citizens of the U.S., to stop the killings. Let's tell Reagan, "U.S. out of Lebanon and Central America. Bring the boys home!"

Trailers by Andy Gordon

Robby Benson and Claudia Cron beam after the 1964 Olympics in the forthcoming film Running Brave.

Yes, it's Monday. Looks like there wasn't enough room in the paper for TRAILERS on Friday. We know who rates around here. My apologies to both people who read this column, and to the team of censors who scour it for offensive profanity. Now the news.

Once again life copies art. Just as with 1981's The China Syndrome, a film has inadvertantly predicated political occurances. Deal of the Century, William Friedkin's satirical look at the arms race, more closely parallels this country's arms situation than had been intended. One of the more humorous (?) coincidences concerns one of the film's machines of destruction, dubbed the "peacemaker." Three weeks after shooting began, one year ago, President Reagan officially nicknamed the MX missile the "peacekeeper." The film, a change of pace for director Friedkin, stars Chevy Chase as a small-time arms dealer recruited by a weapons corporation to sell the "peacemaker" to a Latin American dictator. Aided by sidekick Gregory Hines and widow Sigourney Weaver (Wallace Shawn appears in a cameo as Weaver's late husband and Chase's predecessor), Chase sets out as a travelling missile salesman. The screenplay was written by Paul Brickman, whose Risky Business was a big hit of the summer.

It looks like Columbia Pictures may have another winner on their hands (that's all they've been coming out with lately). Educating Rita, which is currently on screen at the Hampshire 4, has all the makings of a nice, light comedy. The press kit describes it as such: Educating Rita is the charming comedy of a lively young working-class woman on the path to self discovery and the man who acts as her guide to intellectual enlightenment." Sort of a My Fair Lady. Based on the long running London stage play, the film stars Michael Caine as a disillusioned English professor and Julie Walters, who originated the role of Rita on the stage. The picture was directed by Lewis Gilbert, who directed Caine years ago in Alfie, which made him a star. Gilbert is also responsible for three of the James Bond films one of the best (You Only Live Twice) and two of the worst (The Spy who Loved Me and Moonraker). Look for Jane Buchbinder's review in Friday's Collegian.

Last semester I reported that three of our foremost horror directors would be adapting novels by Stephen King. David Cronenberg's The Dead Zone has been released but the other two may never. The Stand, directed by George Romero, has been cancelled, or at least postponed. Romero is working on Day of the Dead, the final act of the trilogy, and another King feature, Creepshow II. Firestarter, meanwhile, has been completely seuttled. Ironically, John Carpenter, who was to have directed the picture, will instead be making a different King feature, Christine. The title character is actually a car, a 1958 Plymouth Fury with supernatural powers. The excellent production crew and cast, including Keith Gordon, indicates that the film won't be a goofy, convoluted tale along the lines of The Car. Release of the film has been pushed up from next summer to this December.

Old news: Here are some additions to recently reported film news. The Book of David, the biblical epic to star Richard Gere, will be directed by Australian director Bruce Beresford (braeker Morant, Tender Mercies)...Johnny Dangerously, Amy Heckerling's spoof of gangster films with Michael Keaton, has added Joe Piscopo, Peter Boyle and Danny DeVito to it's cast...Claudia Cron, so good as Mickey Rourke's girlfriend in Diner, will play Robby Benson's wife in Running Brave... Color scenes have been added to Francis Ford Coppolla's black and white film Rumble Fish. The fish of the title are seen in a pet shop in lavish technicolor.

Local Best Bets: Not that any of us have time to see movies during the week, but good films are everywhere. One can walk into any theater this week and see something good. Of particular note: Jacques Tati double feature at the Amherst Cinema and The Twelve Chairs at the Pleasant Street Theatre.

TRAILERS Trivia: Lots of answers to last week's question- who directed the music videos of Lionel Richie and Billy Idol's latest songs?- none were right, however. The closest answer was Michael Nesmith, who produced the Richie video. Bob Rafelson (Five Easy Pieces, The Postman Always Rings Twice) was the director, and Tobe Hooper (Texas Chainsaw Massacre, Poltergeist) was behind the camera for Idol. This week's question: a similar one, recently publicized so think hard. A very well known young director will direct a ten minute film version of Michael Jackson's song Thriller for intended theatrical distribution as a short. Who is the director? Incidentally, Jackson is personally laying out the $600,000 budget for the film. The first correct answer will receive a pair of Richard Pryor Here and Now movie passes.

UConn eliminates UMass, 16-6

STORRS,CONN. — On a cold, blustery Saturday afternoon, the University of Massachusetts Minutemen had their two game winning streak and playoff hopes ended by the University of Connecticut in a 16-6 defeat.

It was a game in which the players on both sides seemed helpless to affect the outcome as the wind dominated the strategy and action. And in the end, it was perhaps a coach's decision more than anything else which decided the victor and the loser.

Connecticut won the coin toss and elected to kickoff so as to have the wind at their backs. This strategy paid off on UConn's second possession as they got the ball on their own 43 after UMass punter Chris Wood's second of ten punts on the day traveled only 26 yards.

The Huskies mounted a modest drive which stalled on the UMass 26 yard line. In came Domingos Carlos, who proceeded to boot a wind-aided 42 yard field goal which gave UConn a 3-0 lead.

The UMass defense held UConn scoreless the remainder of the first quarter and as the teams switched sides for the start of the second quarter, it was the Minutemen's turn to play offense.

On their second possession with the wind behind them, UMass quarterback Barrett McGrath hit fullback Richard Jenkins for 26 yards and a first down at the UConn 25. There the drive sputtered, however, and George Papoutsidis knotted the score at three with a 39-yard field goal.

After a UConn punt, Umass once again drove into field goal range, this time a 23-yard pass to tight end Gary Freker was the big play. Papoutsidis, though, was wide right from 41 yards out.

After still another UConn punt, UMass started their third drive of the quarter. With two passes to split end Bob Simeone accounting for the bulk of the yardage, the Minutemen reached the UConn eight before a quarterback sack forced them to call in Papoutsidis. He was good on the 33-yard attempt and the Minutemen headed into the locker room with a 6-3 lead.

The third quarter developed into a punting contest and with three minutes left in the quarter Minuteman Wood was back at his goal line facing the wind to punt once again. His kick rolled dead at the fifty but an offsides call against UConn gave the Minutemen the option of kicking again. UMass head coach Bob Pickett had Wood kick again but this time his punt was fair caught at the UMass 40 and UMass was assessed a personal foul for running into the returner, which gave UConn the ball at the UMass 25 yard line. Two plays later, Husky tailback Billy Parks rambled into the end zone and UConn was up, 10-6.

"It was stupid on my part! I wouldn't do it again. It gave them the momentum to win the football game," lamented Pickett on his decision to punt over.

UConn's Carlos added two field goals to account for the final score and to give him 33 career field goals, which is a new New England record.

Women's soccer tops Boston College

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

CHESTNUT HILL, MASS — The third ranked University of Massachusetts women's soccer team concluded a successful season on Friday as they scored an emotional 1-0 victory over fifth ranked Boston College.

"It was not a strong offensive game, but we had better chances of scoring. We controlled the game 90 percent of the time, and the defense set the tempo. We didn't pass as well as we wanted to, but we denied them the chance to advance the ball, by beating them to it," said coach Kalekeni Banda.

The only goal of the contest came at the 33:30 mark of the first half as Debbie Harackiewicz converted on a direct kick from about 25 yards out after a BC foul. It was all UMass needed as the shot seemed to put out the fire in BC.

Goalie Jeanne Paul recorded her fifth win, without a loss and only one tie, as well as posting her fourth shutout of the season. She played very well, despite only having to face three shots all game.

The Minutewomen with a final season record of 10-2-3 and a number three ranking will most likely receive a bye in the first round of the NCAA playoffs. UMass will host one of the surviving teams of the playoff tournament.

UMass still has a couple of nagging injuries. Nadia Komarowski only played ten minutes of the BC game, because of illness, Harackiewicz is still not at her full playing potential and Jamie Watson is making progress recovering from her knee injury.

"The team defense has been great this season. Everyone sacrifices and the whole team plays well. This is the highest ranking we've received since being a varsity sport. It's anybody's game in the playoffs, we just have to play with intensity and with a good hard nosed defense," said Banda.

Mens

The hard luck continued for the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team as they dropped another overtime decision to Boston College, Saturday, 2-1.

The Eagles, 8-8-1, scored on a controversial go 54 seconds into overtime. Simon Ostrov scored the lone UMass goal off a corner kick. UM is now 2-9-4. Complete results in tomorrow's Collegian.

5th ranked Minutewomen walk all over Rhode Island 4-0

By JILL LANG
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts goalie Patti Shea did not need to make a save to preserve Saturday's 4-0 shutout of unranked University of Rhode Island. What she did need, however, was a blanket to keep her warm.

"It was cold out there," Shea said after the game.

Shea was the only Minutewoman who was cold Saturday at Nope, through no fault of her own. The only shot URI got off went wide of the net.

The rest of the team was hot, despite a bitting wind that blew throughout the game.

UMass, ranked fifth, hit the scoreboard right away, with only two minutes gone as forward Pam Moryl found the net from the right side, with the assist coming from back Carol Progulske.

Less than ten minutes later, the UMass offense began applying pressure to URI. First, back Megan Donnelly took a shot on goal from a corner play, and found the back of the net, only to be called back because her drive was undercut, and went above the knees of the URI defense.

Next, forward Diane Kobel took a shot on an empty net, but had her shot deflected by a URI defenswoman. Donnelly took the initial shot, and forward Maura Coughlin took the rebound, and put it past URI goalie Deb Robson for a 2-0 lead.

For the first time this season, UMass coach Pam Hixon kept track of possession time. The result: in the first half, the Minutewomen had possession of the ball within URI's 25 yard line for 21 of 35 minutes of play.

"We were definitely controlling the game at that point," Hixon said. "That was all we wanted to do."

Hixon said her team did not have control of the ball as much in the second half as in the first.

UMass made good use of their time in the second half, tallying two more goals. With a little over four minutes left, scored off a Sue Packard assist for a 3-0 lead.

With less than two minutes left in the games, Packard took a pass from Kobel at the fifty yard line, and broke for the goal. She beat the entire URI defense, and squared off against goalie Robson. Packard dodged Robson and found the opposite side of the net for the final 4-0 margin.

This win marked goalie Shea's 12th shutout of the season, and set the sticker's record at 13-2-1. URI fell to 3-12-2.

Blake Edwards' The Man Who Loved Women, a remake of the Truffaut classic, will be released in December and The Music Box, his Laurel and Hardy remake, shortly thereafter. In keeping with this practice of updating old masterpieces, Edwards will begin production on More Gone With the Wind, with Burt Reynolds as Rhett Butler and Dudley Moore in drag as Scarlett. Edwards said his version will be "much funnier than the original." In other remake news, two old classics will be updated by contemporary directors; Hal Needham's The Caine Mutiny, with Barry Bostwick as Captain Queeg, will now take place on a huge nuclear bus, and Sam Peckinpah's Wizard of Oz, to be filmed in Detroit. Produced by Menachem Riklis, the picture stars Pia Zadora in the Dorothy role. One interesting twist, instead of throwing water on the wicked witch in the film's climactic scene, Dorothy blows her head off with a bazooka.

Opening locally this week is the first annual Avant-Garde Film Festival. The festival features an infinite number of hours of recent avant-garde classics, including An Object, Another Object and Some Things. The films are overexposed, randomly edited and completely pointless. Said Bob "Groovy" Gilbert, program director, "the films spectacularly undercut the bourgois middle class conventions of cinematic continuity, you know?" Admission is free with a canned good for Project Hunger.

Soon to local theaters is the national release of Lance Slaughter's I Think I'll Kill You 3-D, the final installment of his "Gore as Beauty" trilogy. Once again the protagonist is the omnipotent Mr. Willie, now working his way through a local nursery school. Advance word on the film indicates that the 3-D effects thoroughly enhance the experience of the picture, particularly in one scene where Mr. Willie loads some schoolgirls into a makeshift batting machine and stands opposite them wielding a razor sharp scythe. Shots of screaming decapitated heads flying out of the screen are both clever and original. Boston actress Anne Rentaham appears in a clever cameo as an English secretary impaled by a chair leg and Crissy Schasta as a nun horribly mangled by a lawnmower. There's also a soon-to-be-classic iron scene that's a real scorcher.

Richard Gere as Senator Bill Carlington

A young lad is scorched beyond recognition in one of I Think I'll Kill You 3-D's clever moments.

Richard Gere will go through an amazing role change when he plays Senator Bill "Billy" Carlington in Universal's upcoming Bill the Senator. Carlington, who talked a lot but never actually voted for anything, appears briefly in the film as a nightclub owner. The film will include one flashback scene of Carlington as a young man, to allow Gere a chance to take his shirt off. Francis Ford Coppolla will direct the film from a fully operative communications van parked two states away. It should be on screens by Arbor day.

Local Best Bets: Lots of good films around this week. Curse of the Muted Lamb, with Jack Nicholson as a dentist pushed to the brink, starts today at the Hampster 4 theatres, as does The Fez and I'll Sing If I Want To. The Mutton Farms 4 has You and What Army?, Dials and The Fez and The Amherst Cinema is featuring a Fez double feature: The Fez and Fez Goes Hawaiian.

WINNEBAGOS Trivia: No one answered last week's question — Why didn't Pandemonium win Best Picture of 1982? This week's question: Who was the second unit gaffer on Wallace Cromwell's 1927 film The Baladeers of Diablo (Hint: it wasn't Victor Sternhagen). The first correct answer will receive all the popcorn in Western Mass.

David Cassidy: still rockin'

By JACKIE COLLINS
(Joan's sister)

Go back to General Hospital, Rick Springfield! Get a haircut, Simon le Bon! The boys are back in town, and you can bet your Tiger Beat subscription that Reunion the long-awaited comeback album of 70's pre-teen idols Bobby Sherman and David Cassidy, will be topping the charts all over the land.

Reunion is the outcome of two and a half weeks of intense work by two of the musical giants of the century. Their talents are apparent on every cut. "I've always had a lot of respect for Bobby as an artist and as a human being," Cassidy comments on the sleeve of Reunion. "When my agent suggested this project, well, residual checks (from the Partridge Family) being what they are, I just couldn't resist."

I for one am glad that David gave in, and after you hear Reunion, I bet you'll be happy, too. The album begins with a medley of old Partridge Family smashes, like "I Can Hear Your Heartbeat" and "Point Me in the Direction of Albequerque." These durable classics have been spiced up with synthesizers and energized by the singer's vocal harmonies.

Why buy New Music when Stale Old Music sounds this good? Case closed.

Don't think that every song on Reunion is an update of the stars' old standbys. There are some remakes of other people's songs, too. "We are both against the idea of singers writing their own material," Cassidy explains on "Reunion". "It's like a monopoly, you know?" Bobby thinks it's un-American, and "I just plain don't like it."

At last somebody's standing up for his principles in today's decadent recording industry. I say Bravo! And as if the great music wasn't enough to get you to buy Reunion, an 8" X 10" glossy of David and Bobby has been included. A few pounds or a wrinkle or two can't spoil the appeal of those two fresh faces! Time has only made them, and their music, better. College hockey to return to UMass

Changes to be made in proposed Cage renovations

PINNED — College hockey will return to UMass and Buffalo's Tom Barasso doesn't want Pittsburgh's Rich Sutler to block his view

By GOE HARTFORD
Connecticut Staff

In a startling turnaround, the University of Massachusetts athletic department made a sensible decision yesterday as they announced changes in the planned Cage renovations, due to start this March at the completion of the basketball season.

Instead of funding a basketball team that occupies that dungeon which is supposed to be a basketball court, the administration is tearing down the Cage to build a hockey rink.

The former varsity basketball program will be turned into a club sport. In it's place, UMass will build a 10,000 seat two story hockey facility and bring back the hockey team that has been missing since 1979.

"I got sick and tired to listening to all those hockey fans yelling and screaming why Massachusetts - the state that walloped Minnesota (in the series of high school games last March) doesn't have a team for the state university," a tired Frank McInerney, UMass athletic director said.

"All those Bruins fans are yelling for good college hockey at UMass/Amherst," said McInerney. "And all those new hockey fans from the Whalers want to see some top-notch college hockey in this area."

The team will start play this November and will play on the Campus Pond until they can find a place to play. Until it snows, the team will practice on roller-skates in the reflecting pools at the Fine Arts Center.

The men's basketball team will have their schedule redone, as they will be a club sport now. Men's coach Ron Gerfluson had no comment but was heard to be mumbling something about how to coach guys on skates.

"I don't understand it," said a dejected Scott Hood, the team's manager. "It's a disaster," said John Hempel who was reported to have already transferred to Syracuse.

The women's team will not be affected just yet. There is no demand for a women's hockey team. The women will play at Amherst High School.

Destruction of the Cage will begin tomorrow and the rink is expected to be finished by next July. New locker rooms and a trophy case (I don't know what they will fill it with) will still be built.

"A new winning hockey team will restore pride into the University," said UMass women's soccer coach Kalkeni Banda, whose new team would benefit from the rink by having a place to play indoor soccer.

Needless to say, it's tough to play indoor soccer on a basketball court.

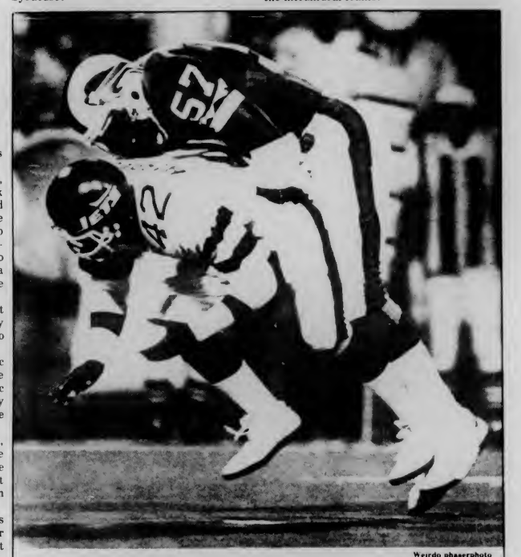
"Besides," one student who refused to be identified said, "who wants to root for a team that has lost 20 games for the last who knows how many years."

McInerney will announce who will be the head coach on Wednesday. The athletic director also put out an order recalling all those former UMass uniforms given out to the intramural teams.

Marcus Dupree transfers out, hates Southern Miss.

By BOB PICKETT
H.P.O.C. (Happiest person on campus)

After the Minuteman football team once again failed to make the Division 1-AA playoffs, University of Massachusetts athletic director, Frank McInerny, announced, in a stunning development, that spectacular but disenchanted Oklahoma Sooner tailback Marcus Dupree had secretly transferred to UMass over the weekend and was expected to start classes whenever he wanted to.



The reaction on the UMass campus was, for the most part, enthusiastic. "We think Marcus will improve our running game and make us one of the favorites in the Yankee Conference.," said football coach Bob Pickett. "Heck, why am I being so conservative? I think Marcus will lead us into Division 1 football, a victory over Nebraska in the Orange Bowl, and the number one ranking in the country!"

The players themselves were as jubilant as Pickett though they were all too busy dousing each other with orange juice to comment.

When asked about Dupree's academic qualifications and whether or not big-time football would tarnish the school's academic reputation, Chancellor Joseph Duffy's only remark was, "How much money does Notre Dame get from TV contracts?"

Howard Cosell, on his daily radio show, commented, "Marcus has chosen a fine institution of higher learning to matriculate at. A valued friend of mine and great human being, Julius Erving, better known as Dr. J, participated in basketball there."

Dupree, a Heisman trophy candidate, was unavailable for comment, but his mother had this to say, "Marcus decided going East would provide a needed change of scenerey. Just so he doesn't get homesick, I'll be going with him. Joe (Duffy) has told us to feel right at home in his mansion."

The Tupperware Bowl
By RED TUPPERWITCZ
Plastic Stiff

A bowl game is being planned for Alumni Stadium on New Years Day. Organizers Jim Floyd and Elliot Kalb have come up with the name The Tupperware Bowl for this future classic.

The game will coincide with the Tupperware sellers convention at the Hotel Charles in Springfield. Floyd says they expect to sellout the 18,000 seat stadium with no problem.

The game will match Bethune-Cookman College (Daytona, Florida) against the University of Puget Sound (Washington State).

These schools qualified because the sale of tupperware at their schools was the greatest.

"We hope to sign a television contract with Channel 40 in Springfield in the next few weeks," says Kalb.

Kalb hopes to get Channel 40's own Don Earle to do the play by play.

Changes to be made on next year's soccer team

By DAVE SCORING
Minuteman Benchwarmer

There will be some changes made in the men's soccer program next year, UMass head coach Jeff Gettler commented this week in an exclusive interview with the Collegian.

"I've been working with a lot of people in the engineering department and we've come up with some helpful ideas for the '84 season." It's no secret that the Minutemen's dismal record this year stemmed from their inability to put the ball in the net and coach Gettler has decided to apply a little science to the game.

The engineering department has modified the goal posts with a hydraulic system capable of expanding the goal diameter.

"It's pretty simple, really," Gettler said. "The top or crossbar as we call it, has been cut in half in the middle and a hydraulic sliding bar has been welded to it on the inside, powered by a small, noiseless hydraulic pump. The slide bar is designed exactly like the crossbar so you really don't notice any difference in the shape of the crossbar when it's expanding."

Coach Gettler explained that the bottom of the goal posts are each equipped with a small, 3-inch metal wheel that rides on a pully rail which is located a few inches under the surface of the dirt, obscuring it from sight. As the top of the bar widens, the bottom of the side posts slide along on the underground rail bar, and "bingo, you've got an extra 18 or 24 inches to shoot at on either side of the goal." The hydraulic motor is operated by remote control from the sidelines, and can be used at any time.

"When we are on offense, our opponents defense have their backs to the net, and they'll never notice what's going on when I 'tack on' a foot or two to their goal."

The athletic department has recently ordered two new goal nets from Addida Corporation, which are made of a special dacron polymer. These new nets will stretch nicely when the goal expands, and then return to their normal size and shape as the goal diameter is returned to normal. Coach Gettler also noted the hydraulic pump can push the goalposts in as well as out, and therefore would prove useful on defense also.

"It'll sure help our goalie considerably on corner kicks, direct kicks, and penalty kicks when I shorten our goal up a couple feet from the sidelines," Gettler said. At this point, Gettler introduced his new assistant coach for the 1984 season, Boring Gearhead, a graduate student in mechanical engineering from Yugoslavia. "Boring will be handling the 'technical aspects' of our game," laughed Gettler. "Those Europeans sure do add a whole new dimension to the game, don't they?" Looks like 1984 could be the year of the Minutemen.

UMass receives $ 10m in public, private grants

By LARRY BOUCHIE
Collegian Correspondent

The National Science Foundation (NSF) and The Department of Defense have granted over $10 million to the University of Massachusetts at Amherst for research during the fiscal year 1983.

According to information recently released by the UMass Office of Grant and Contract Administration, federal agencies granted a total of $19 million to the University. The NSF contributed $6.2 million, or 33 percent of that amount and the Defense Department gave $4.4 million, or 23 percent. Additionally, the Department of Energy has commissioned research regarding efficient use of waste energy produced by large chemical plants.

Federal government agency grants accounted for almost $19 million of the total amount contributed. An additional $5 million came from private businesses, foundations and agencies. The remaining $1 million was awarded by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts along with other local and state governments.

The School of Natural Science and Mathematics received the bulk of the grant money, $12.5 million. The second highest recipient was the School of Engineering, which received $3 million.

One of the larger projects being researched at the School of Natural Science and Mathematics concerns the chemical and biological nature of periodontic bacteria. This along with a study of eye disease, was commissioned by the National Institute of Health.

UMass received grants of $19 million this year; the National Science Foundation contributed $6.2 million, the Department of Defense, $4.4 million.

The School of Engineering is conducting extensive research on polymers, funded by a variety of sponsors.

"All UMass schools submit proposals for research they wish to do," said Lee Beatty, director of the Office of Grant and Contract Administration. "Individual agencies will then choose proposed research they wish to be done and fund them.

"The money awarded goes directly to the professors and graduate students doing research," Beatty said. "Those who do research then report their results to their sponsors."

"The reason that the NSF and the Defense Dept. grant the largest amounts is because they do not have their own in-house capability to carry out all their own research. Other federal agencies may have larger budgets for research, but they can do it within their agency," Beatty said.

All researchers are unrestricted in sharing their information, except for that from research that yields patentable results.

"Most businesses secure patent rights to any research done," Beatty said, "and retain a six month period of nondisclosure to begin their patent process before public release."

Although, UMass schools requested over $56 million for research, and received about 44 percent of that amount.

Amherst may become nuke-free

By LAURA YEE
Collegian Staff

Preparations are underway for Amherst to follow the example of Leverett, a small town north of Amherst, which recently became the second nuclear-free zone in Massachusetts.

UMass student, Amherst resident and SGA Senator, Dan Burgess said he believes that what Leverett did was "a great incentive for the town of Amherst to take similar actions" and "to know that it can be done."

If Amherst becomes a nuclear-free zone, UMass will either be forced to limit defense research or be prohibited from conducting nuclear research, he said.

"It was more of a philosophical type of action for Leverett, whereas with Amherst, taking the population of UMass into consideration, it will have greater impact," Burgess said.

With the passing of Leverett's resolution, design, production, transportation, storage, disposal and deployment of nuclear weapons and power are now prohibited in the town. The resolution, which has prompted signs to be posted announcing the town's nuclear-free state, also rejects nuclear civil defense and crisis relocation planning, states that the town chooses not to be defended by nuclear weapons and wishes to be removed from the target lists of nuclear power, said UMass Legal Services Attorney Michele Leaf, who wrote and presented the Leverett resolution.

"Like the freeze, nuclear-free zones are grassroot initiatives, an effective way of making a statement to the community. It's also a way to take direct action in not having to depend on government leaders for (effectiveness)," Leaf said.

Leaf stated crisis relocation planning is "a hoax" to convince people that in the case of nuclear war there is safety, "when the truth is, if such a crisis occurred, no one is safe."

Burgess said there is a good chance the city of Cambridge will also pass a resolution similar to Leverett's.

"In that case, nuclear research and development at M.I.T. (the Massachusetts Institute of Technology) will have to move," he said.

"We understand that our actions will not in itself prevent war between the U.S. and Russia, but it lets the world know that even mice can roar," said Leverett Selectman Robert Biagi.

Proposals for Amherst to become a nuclear-free zone will be presented at next Spring's Town Meeting. Meanwhile, Burgess and other Amherst citizens will be making plans for student and community outreach through the Student Government Association's President's Office.

Purchase policy under review

Administration may use SCB's

By STEPHEN HOWE
Collegian Correspondent

A four year-old policy prohibiting University of Massachusetts administrative departments from doing business with Student Controlled Businesses (SCB's) is under review at the present time according to Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance John L. DeNyse.

The review was prompted by a letter sent to DeNyse's office by the Student Economic Development Board. The letter stated that the policy is "in contradiction with a spirit of cooperation between students and administration" and asked that the policy be "reviewed with an eye toward abolishing it."

I don't think it's useful to have this type of policy.

Robert Ragland
Student Note Services

The letter cited six reasons for the inappropriateness of the policy including; the relatively small dollar volume of business between University departments and SCB's, the desire of the SCB system "to have a cooperative relationship with the entire community," and the value of experiential education which students gain through SCB's.

The policy was created in 1979 by the Vice Chancellor of Administration and Finance George Beatty. He stated in a memo that, "the practice of several University departments to purchase goods and services from student operated co-ops....is not appropriate to maintaining good relations with surrounding communities."

The Board's letter maintains that "the downtown business community is far more concerned with competition from the University Store than from any SCB."

Vice Chancellor DeNyse said, "(he has) people researching to see whatever the reasons were for the policy being implemented and to see if they are still valid."

Robert Ragland, production manager of the Student Note Services said although the SNS does only one percent of its total business with University departments he opposes the policy.

"I don't think it's useful to have this type of policy...It's annoying to us and it's annoying to some of our customers," Ragland said.

DeNyse said in his review of the policy he will consider all aspects of the situation and "look at what's best for the campus."

WOUNDED WARRIORS — Casualties from the invasion of Grenada appear at a news conference in Washington Monday. The members of the 82nd Airborne unit answered questions on the invasion of that country.

Certain Marines will leave Peirut

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — All "non-essential" staff from the Marine contingent in Beirut will move to U.S. warships off shore because of the Oct. 23 terrorist bombing at the airport, Maj. Robert Jordan said Monday.

In announcing the new security measure, the Marine spokesman also said the latest casualty toll from the truckbomb that destroyed a Marine installation at the airport is "over 230 dead, over 70 wounded." He said search operations were nearly complete.

"We're fairly confident we've got just about everybody," Jordan said. One or two bodies may still be in the rubble of what had been the four-story headquarters of the Marine Battalion Landing Team, he said, "but indications are we've found everybody we're going to find."

A simultaneous bombing at the headquarters of French forces killed at least 58 soldiers. The French and Americans are part of a multinational force deployed in Beirut for more than a year at the government's request to help keep the peace in Lebanon, wracked by years of civil war.

The Reagan administratio has accused Iranian-backed terrorists o engineering the double blast and has vowed unspecified retaliation. Iran denies involvement. Lebanese police say they have no clues about the identity of the terrorists and have made no arrests.

In Geneva, leaders of Lebanon's warring Christian and Moslem sects finally began a long-awaited reconciliation conference Monday in attempts to settle old feuds and agree on changes to give the Moslem majority more political power. President Amin Gemayel, a Christian, presided over the meeting.

Jordan said "non-essential personnel" — such as clerks and maintenance crews — with the 1,600-man Marine contingent at the airport will withdraw to American 6th Fleet warships stationed off the coast. He did not disclose how many people were involved.

Since the bombing, several U.S. congressmen have demanded that the entire American force retreat to the ships, saying security at their airport base made them highly vulnerable to terrorists.

Quake survivors plagued by cold

ERZURUM, Turkey (AP) — The earthquake that killed at least 1,126 people in eastern Turkey left 25,000 people homeless in the windswept mountain ranges bordering the Soviet Union. Freezing temperatures and snow delayed rescue efforts in the remotest villages and endangered the survivors.

An announcement by the martial law command said at least 534 people were seriously injured.

Officials feared the death toll would rise.

The quake, which struck at 7:12 Sunday morning destroyed 50 villages and left 44 of them without a building standing, authorities said.

Villagers quickly buried their dead and rescuers hoping to find survivors dug through the mud-brick rubble of devastated settlements.

The heaviest damage and loss of life occurred in the townships and surrounding villages of Horasan, Narman and Pasinler in the eastern province of Erzurum and in Sarikamis in the province of Kars. But the quake was felt in six other eastern provinces.

Horasan had at least 756 dead; in Narman 147 were killed, in Pasinler 23 died, and in Sarikamis 54 were killed, authorities said.

The governor of Horasan, Azmi Yesil, said no word had been heard yet from seven villages in his district.

Erzurum is headquarters for Turkey's 3rd Army, which guards the 360-mile border with the Soviet Union, and lies at an altitude of 6,500 feet surrounded by snow-capped mountains.

Rescue teams said people without shelter after nightfall could freeze to death and special winter tents were required urgently.

The Turkish air force flew in relief supplies from the Red Crescent organization — Turkey's Red Cross. Officials said they sent in 3,100 tents, over 6,000 blankets and 800 bottles of blood plasma so far.

Turks responding to repeated radio broadcasts lined up in front of Red Crescent centers in major cities to donate blood.

When the quake hit the village of Koyunorun, most adults were out tending to their fields and cattle. The victims caught in the collapsing houses were children still asleep in their beds, villagers told reporters.

Congressmen try to reverse 'failure'

WASHINGTON (AP) — A six-month delay in deploying Pershing and cruise missiles in Europe would increase the chances for the United States and the Soviet Union to negotiate an arms limitation treaty, three congressmen said Monday.

The three, Democrats Martin O. Sabo of Minnesota and William Ratchford of Connecticut and Connecticut Republican Stewart B. McKinney, said at a news conference they will offer an amendment this week to the defense appropriations bill that would require a six-month delay.

The proposal also is supported by Rep. Edward Markey, D-Mass.

"Our deployment of the Pershing and cruise missiles in December represents a failure of diplomacy," Sabo said.

Ratchford said the vote may be the last chance Congress gets to delay deployment since the missiles are scheduled to be installed in Europe next month.

"With the clock running, this becomes a crucial vote," he said.

Ratchford and Sabo offered a similar amendment when the defense budget was being considered by the Appropriations Committee, but it failed there 24-14.

Both men admitted there is only a longshot chance that the House will pass the plan.

"In spite of the tough odds, it's an effort we have to make because of the high stakes," Ratchford said.

Ratchford disputed arguments that the deployment of the Pershing gives the United States a bargaining chip in its negotiations in Geneva with the Soviets.

"Once a bargaining chip is deployed, it's no longer a bargaining chip, it's a weapon," he said.

Five acre used tire heap ignites causing tri-state mushroom cloud

WINCHESTER, Va. (AP) — A mound of 7 million used tires covering five acres caught fire Monday, sending up a mushroom-shaped cloud of oily black smoke that drifted over three states. Officials said it could burn into 1984.

The cloud climbed almost one mile high and spread 35 miles over a corner of Virgina and the panhandles of West Virginia and Maryland.

"It could be out of control for several days and may even burn to the first of the year," said Tyree Cather, an assistant fire chief in Frederick County.

No injuries were reported and no one had to be evacuated, Cather said.

"As far as the people downwind right now, we don't believe they're in any danger," said Cory Gabrielsen, an official with the state Office of Emergency and Energy Services.

But the elderly and people with chronic health problems were warned to avoid the smoke if possible.

William Brabson, a biology professor at a local community college, said burning tires can give off hydrocarbons that are harmful to plants and animals. People who inhale the fumes can suffer coughing, throat irritation and chest pains.

But state officials said the fumes presented little immediate problem because they were staying in the upper atmosphere. Roger Koontz, chairman of the county Board of Supervisors, said first tests by the Environmental Protection Agency showed no cancer-causing materials being emitted.

Death row killer allowed to live

WASHINGTON (AP) — Texas authorities failed Monday to gain the Supreme Court's permission to kill anytime soon condemned murderer James David Autry, who came within minutes of being executed 27 days ago.

The nation's highest court, without comment left intact the stay of execution that was ordered by Justice Byron R. White only minutes before Autry was to die by lethal injection Oct. 5.

"We are chagrined by the court's decision because it effectively prevents the state from carrying out its necessary duties in death penalty cases," Texas Attorney General Jim Mattox said.

There are more than 160 death row inmates in Texas, and Mattox said he was not sure now whether the state may execute any of them.

Drunk drivers may be forced to serve seven-day sentence

BOSTON (AP) — Last year's crackdown on drunken driving in Massachusetts could be strengthened by forcing repeat offenders to serve seven consecutive days in jail, instead of allowing them to serve time over split weekends, a legislator said Monday.

Sen. Louis Bertonazzi, who helped draft the tougher penalties for drinking and driving, offered the sentencing change as part of a package of proposals he said would improve the 13-month-old law.

"None of the proposed modifications fundamentally change the thrust of the existng law," said Bertonazzi, D-Milford, chairman of the Senate Post Audit and Oversight Committee which has been tracking the effectiveness of the drunken driving law.

"Some clarify and strengthen the Legislature's original intent; others address problems noted by the judiciary and county sheriffs," he said.

Southern church hid unholy pit

ROBBINSVILLE, N.C. (AP) — One hundred and fifty people were arrested as police closed in on a dogfighting arena that had been disguised as a country church, and fleeing spectators trampled a child, authorities said.

An unsuccessful 1982 candidate for sheriff, George Long, and Leonard Colvin of Robbinsville were charged with promoting dogfights after the raid late Saturday and early Sunday, said Graham County Sheriff A.J. Peterson.

Among the spectators and participants clustered around the 16-by-16-foot pit containing the fighting dogs were 15 children under the age of 16, Peterson said. Spectators fleeing the raid left behind guns, brass knuckles, clubs, assorted narcotics, money, liquor and beer, he said.

The trampled child was treated Sunday in District Memorial Hospital in Andrews for cuts, bruises and a hand-piercing nail wound.

Berkshire D.C. to double as evening study space

By CAMDEN PIERCE
Collegian Correspondent

Berkshire Dining Commons might open soon on a trial basis for evening study space, student and administration officials said yesterday.

Southwest Area Government co-president Michael Bean said Dean of Students Elllima Field and Director of Food Services Marie Cappadona have agreed to open the D.C. in what he termed the "final materialization" of a long process.

"Dean Field gave us the okay with two stipulations," Bean said. "The first is that we check on lighting in the room we plan to use...the other thing he wants is a trial period of three or four weeks while we get figures on how many people use the study area."

Bean said he hopes the D.C. will be open for study a week from next Sunday.

Bean said the lighting in Berkshire D.C. is fine, and all that remains is the hiring of qualified security personnel for evening study hours.

Dave McCarthy, SWAG co-president, said he was optimistic the usage of Berkshire commons will warrant extended financing over the term.

"Study space is priority one in Southwest this semester," he said, though he noted the quantity of study space in Southwest has been cut in the recent past. But, McCarthy said he thought the administration has now recognized its responsibility to provide adequate study space.

"The administration and Food Services have been in sync with us on this issue. They've bent over backward to help us," McCarthy said.

But while they seemed satisfied with the administration's response, the co-presidents expressed dissatisfaction with what they perceive as the Student Government Association's failure to address the problems of the Southwest area.

"Study space is a problem in Southwest. The situation in East is unknown to us. We in Southwest are working hard on this issue, and we wish Thomas Ahern (SGA co-president) would quit shooting from the hip, and find out what's going on before he speaks for all students," McCarthy said.

At the SGA Senate meeting Wednesday night, Ahern said he had not thought study space was a major problem, but said he is "taking it up right away."

Ahern attributed the SWAG co-presidents' criticism to a "lack of communication," and said he hoped the misunderstanding would work itself out.

"There's a definite trend toward positive working conditions with all student agencies and groups," he said. "In the long run everyone's pulling for student interests."

Fair offers information concerning foreign study

By VIRGINIA WARFIELD
Collegian Correspondent

Somehow, "Fielding's Guide to Europe on $8 Dollars a Day" does not seem to help college students much when they are looking for a way for see Europe cheaply and easily. Travel magazines and brochures can provide the details, but when it comes to actually booking the flight and accommodations, the real questions arise: where will I stay and for how long? Who will support me?

The International Program Offices' second annual Study Aboard Fair provides the brochures, the details, and the practical details, according to organizers, who are holding the fair from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m p.m.

Maryelise Lamet, overseas study coordinator, said the fair will be staffed mostly by students, and booths will be set up with information and literature on more than 30 international programs offered by the University.

"Essentially we're trying to reach the student who may have thought this was something that cannot be done," she said.

Former participants in the program and international exchange students will be on hand to relate their experiences abroad, and slides will be shown throughout the day.

"We also want to encourage younger students to plan ahead if they are interested," Lamet said, "so they can work a program into their schedule."

She emphasized that full-year studies abroad may be the most beneficial, but a wide diversity of one-semester and summer programs are also available.

Language need not be a barrier, she said. Beginning language courses are offered in some countries, while other places such as Shanghai, China and Dijon, France have opportunities for more advanced studies in language and culture.

"We try to make sure the programs are affordable," Lamet said. "The fees run close to the cost of UMass in-state tuition. Financial aid is available, and some of the programs offer their own awards."

Interested students are also encouraged to attend one of the Study Abroad meetings later in the semester. Schedules and literature will be available at the fair, and anyone who misses the fair or who would like further information may stop by the International Programs Office in room 239 Whitmore.

Bulimics face serious hazards

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Staff

Although the symptoms of bulimia can lead to serious health risks as well as severe psychological distress, there is help for victims of the eating disorder.

The reported health risks include severe tooth decay from destruction of tooth enamel, said Dr. Carolyn Hicks of Amherst Medical Associates.

Other risks are constant sore throat, esophageal inflammation, liver and kidney damage, nutrient deficiencies and in those who use laxatives, rectal bleeding. Ruptured stomachs, electrolyte imbalances and dehydration can lead to cardiac irregularity and heart failure, she said.

Hicks said bulimia is similar to drug addiction or alcoholism.

"Like drug addiction, ritualized bingeing and purging can have the effect of temporarily removing a woman from the responsibility of self-care, but in the long run it further erodes feelings of self-esteem and competence," she said.

In extreme cases, bulimics binge and purge more than 20 times a day, although the average is about eleven times a week. Reports of caloric intake range from 1000 calories to 55,000 calories per binge. An average binge is about 4800 calories.

Self-induced vomiting may function to relieve the physical discomfort of overeating, thus permitting continued eating.

Treatment of bulimia is a slow and difficult process. Hicks said because of the shame felt by bulimics many seek help only after reaching a point of despair and frustration, usually 5½ years after the onset symptomatic behavior. In addition Hicks said many women come to her ostensibly to gather information on the health hazards of bulimia.

"They have no conscious interest in changing their behavior but have read enough to become alarmed," said Hicks.

Hicks' method of treatment is to form a relationship with the bulimic in which the client feels free to make mistakes. Because of problems many bulimics have with authority figures, Hicks feels the therapist should not be an authority.

"These women have grown up in a family of experts where they must perform and achieve. I try to allow them to fumble and to find their own answers," Hicks said.

Hicks said roommates and friends of women believed to be bulimic should try to talk to the afflicted woman and show concern about her life.

"People can be supportive by offering to go along to a therapist for the first visit," Hicks said.

Women doctors in demand

By SHERYL JEAN
Collegian Correspondent

Despite comprising only one-third of the entire staff, women doctors are well accepted at the University of Massachusetts Health Services (UHS) and are often preferred over their male colleagues, said several men and women who work there.

"Women bring to UHS a little more patience in dealing with problems. Most women have a special feeling for gynecology that is useful and helpful," said Dr. Thomas McBride, medical director for UHS.

"There are more women physicians now, because there is more of a demand for them," he said.

Dr. Rochelle Weber, a family practitioner who has worked at the Health Services for two and a half years, said certain kinds of people would rather have women doctors.

"Many women prefer to see women doctors, especially in gynecology. A large part of the homosexual population prefer women doctors because they feel uncomfortable with men," Weber said.

"I'm not 50, like some of the doctors. I'm only 30 years old, so some younger women find it easier to talk to me," she said.

Women are sometimes more understanding and can deal with many issues relating to an illness, Weber added.

The Health Services first began accepting women doctors in 1966. Now, in 1983 there are six women doctors on a staff of 16.

Dr. Weber and another family practitioner at UHS, Dr. Suzan Smith, both said there was sexism and discrimination during training at medical school, but not at UMass.

"University people tend to be a little more liberal," said Dr. Smith.

Dr. Weber, by choice, is on a first name basis with people with whom she works.

"My colleagues respect me quite a bit — now they're asking me medical questions," she said.

Both Dr. Weber and Dr. Smith "prefer working with younger, more intelligent people interested in solving problems, than working with a population who are less willing."

The amount of people waiting to see men and women physicians are about equal and the workloads and hours are equal. The set hours are from 8:30 a.m. until 5 p.m. and all doctors take turns being on call for nights and weekends, Weber said.

The number of women in medical schools nationwide continues to rise, she said. Women constituted 32 percent of medical students entering the 1982-83 school year, which is a 12 percent increase from last year.

But Weber added, "I'll be very happy the day when the medical profession hits 50/50."

Police report thefts and vandalism

Amherst police arrested two 21-year-old men at Brittany Manor Apartments Saturday night and charged them with possession of a dangerous weapon and theft of a moped.

The men were apprehended outside 142 Brittany Manor with a $500 moped they allegedly stole. Police said one of the men had a switchblade.

Police reported a total of 9 arrests since Friday, including 3 for driving while intoxicated (DWI.) Two of those charged with DWI were UMass students.

A 19-year-old Amherst man was arrested at 5:45 p.m. Saturday and charged with breaking and entering in the daytime with intent to commit a felony and larceny under $100. The man allegedly stole a small box of speakers valued at $45 from The Sound Company on North Pleasant Street, and was chased and apprehended by the store's manager. The store was closed at the time of the incident.

A theft of $400 in camera equipment from a Town House apartment was reported at 6:30 Friday night. Missing were a $320 Pentax camera and a $80 Pentax autowinder.

At Puffton Village, a victim reported his 1980 Pontiac Phoenix, originally blue, had been painted red by vandals sometime Saturday night. Police said the dumpster near the car had also been spray painted.

Police reported an assault and battery at Puffton Village Saturday around 6:30 p.m. The victim was reported to have a black eye, and the left side of his face severely "altered." Police said he also had a broken cheekbone.

Absentee ballot registration offered

Registered Boston voters at the University of Massachusetts will have a chance to vote in the Nov. 15 mayoral and city elections, if they mail in absentee ballot application forms soon.

The Public Policy Committee and Third World Caucus of the Undergraduate Student Senate will have application forms available at a table in the Campus Center concourse beginning today.

The move is "part of our campaign to increase student voter turnout," said Paul Gosselin, Public Policy Committee chair. "(The election) is important because it's the first time in 16 years that there's been an actual race for mayor."

"We're going to keep it as non-partisan as possible," he said.

Robert Teixeira of the Senate Third World Caucus said that group has "unanimously decided to support Mel King and work on his campaign at the University."

The Office of Third World Affairs is contributing advertising money to the campaign, Teixeira said.

Gosselin said "about 200" Boston residents attend the University, and right now the committee only has application forms for Boston ballots. Students must mail the forms into Boston City Hall, receive the ballot in the mail, fill that out in front of a notary public, and mail the ballot back by election day, Gesselin said.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Of politics and Attorney Generals

I have no great sadness in resigning my position as Acting Attorney General in the Student Government Association. I do so knowing that my commitment to a better judicial system on campus is undaunted and that there are other avenues to approach this goal. At the same time, it would be improper for me to resign without letting the student body who pays for the services of this office know that my resignation is in protest to five years of abuse this office has seen at the hands of the SGA Presidents.

In theory, the Attorney General's Office is to serve the critical function of examining the various judicial policies across campus, trying to remove illegalities, irregularities and common injustice served by the whims of UMass administrators. It is supposed to advocate on behalf of students as well as work on resolving inter-SGA disputes. It is the last function which has been mercilessly subjected to presidential power politics.

Dakin N. Ferris

The crux of the issue is the appointment process of the A.G. which has been bastardized beyond comprehension. It is beyond comprehension because it would take a weeks worth of articles this length to explain what a shambles the judicial systems on campus are in. (I need not point out that the majority of persons affected here live in the residence areas.) Some of the judicial policies have not been examined in over five years. Others were just recently undermined by the administrations advantage of the incompetence that flowed from this office.

To explain how this travesty has occured, a historical analysis is needed. The Attorney General has always been a presidential appointment. This made sense. The president at that time was the presiding officer of the Student Senate, or Speaker as we know it now. Five or six years ago, however, the presidents office became an independent branch of the SGA. Not foreseeing the imminent danger of this, the appointment power of the A.G. stayed with them. This was also the start of a long power struggle between the presidents and the Senate.

The presidents' point of contention is that as president, they are entitled to representation from the A.G. and have first dibs on his/her services.....especially if the presidents were to come into conflict with the Senate. The problem is that it says nothing of the sort in the SGA Constitution. In cases where the Senate is a party, the A.G.'s responsibility is to the Senate — period.

The result of this dispute has been the presidents constantly ignoring the recommendations of selection committees. The recommendations usually consist of people who would read the Constitution and recognize their obligations around this issue. Instead the favored candidate has become that individual which is willing to make a backroom deal of allegiance to the presidents. I have refused to make such a deal. In exchange I have received absolutely no support from them, and have actually been the subject of their attack when other concerned students tried to speak to them on this issue. If this is any indication of what I have encountered, they let me wander around for seven days after being appointed just trying to physically get into my office. I was forced to set up work in the Hatch.

This is an OUTRAGE to all SATF paying students. It reflects the paranoid self interest of past and present presidents....for they have given you no less than 11 E-L-E-V-E-N A.G.'s in the past five years. The twelfth may take office Wednesday night, and the thirteenth shortly (or not so shortly) after the new presidential elections in a month. Almost half of the last five years have gone by with the misnomered Acting A.G.'s.

But for the tale I wish to tell, all of this is just the prelude in which I was a pawn. The account of interest is a first hand reproduction of some of the more insidious trappings of this year's and last year's presidents. On that subject I will continue, tomorrow.

To dissent is American

In Grenada, Lebanon, Central America, and in other critical areas of foreign policy, the Reagan Administration is counting on US citizens to place complete trust in its actions. He's the President, we elected him, he must know what he's doing and have good reason for doing it, right?

We've heard that before. Americans have on many occasions displayed a penchant for swallowing government policies "hook, line and sinker." This is particularly true when they are reassured by a charismatic leader.

Much of the dreadfulness of Reagan's latest foreign policy escapades has less to do with what the Administration is actually doing around the world than with the fact that these actions have been questioned remarkably little. The President has very successfully portrayed those who express skepticism as "misguided", if not anti-American. Having doubts about the government means, to many people, showing a lack of national pride.

Ian Polumbaum

What such people forget is that the highest principle of democracy is citizens' ability to dissent. This country was born out of questioning authority. It is necessary to question authority if we are to avoid events, such as the Vietnam war, which do very little to make one feel proud to be an American.

This is a difficult task when vociferous dissent is no longer the "in thing." The pre-Vietnam image of the campus activist as an idiot on a soap box has returned. The other image is that of a mixed-up rabble-rouser bummed out over missing the Sixties.

It is a difficult task when virtually the only newspaper and TV accounts reaching us about Lebanon and Grenada come from Pentagon or White House sources.

It is a difficult task in light of a recent remark by Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. The House Speaker, who not too long ago stood up to President Reagan over the budget until his bulbous nose was mastered by every political cartoonist in the nation, last week said, "now, when our Marines are in action, is not the time to be critical."

When is the time to be critical? After the crisis gets worse and more soldiers get killed? O'Neill did "demand that the President spell out in a more detailed way what he envisions as the long-term mission of the Marines" abroad. (NY Times, 10/26) But he clearly wanted to refrain from rocking the boat, in order to let the President "stay the course."

As much as it was a foreign policy disaster, Vietnam was a prime example of the government deceiving a population who trusted it. History has proven that we must have only limited faith in the motives and honesty of our elected and appointed public servants, in the hope that, as the song goes, "we don't get fooled again."

SGA attacks are unwarranted

To the Editor,

I am writing this letter in response to the culminating attacks upon the (SGA) and its leadership. These attacks propose the theory that the SGA neglects the vital interests of students, wastes money on such issues as anti-militarism, anti-racism, and anti-sexism campaigns; and is lead by a group of radicals whom are responsible for such problems. I believe this argument "stinks."

First, Mr. Bill Collins in his recent editorial complains about a recent senate allocation to Students Against Militarism, on the grounds that this organization does not affect students directly. I would argue that militarism does affect students directly; especially in the face of current draft legislation. Militarism is an ideological belief structure partially responsible for such social ills as violence and war. When would Mr. Collins have the SGA address this issue? When the Lebanese crisis escalates into a full scale war? Perhaps when American troops violated the national sovereignty of Grenada? Would Mr. Collins have us wait until Western Europe becomes an American nuclear arsenal? Shall the students of this University sit on their hands until it is too late to engage in effective action?

Secondly, Mr. Collins attributes all the Senate ills to one "radical" group. This argument stinks of monocausation, usually a sign of simplistic analysis. It has been my experience that when an individual attacks the cause of a set of problems to one factor he/she is usually ill-informed or lacks complete understanding. I suggest Mr. Collins take advantage of the Senate Resource Center to research the history of student activism before he attacks the Senate.

Thirdly, Mr. Collin's refusal to see the significance of Senate actions in combating social oppression reaks of anti-intellectualism. What he and his "associates" fail to see is that social oppression not only limits the opportunities of vast segments of our society, but also limits the experiential and intellectual development of the individual holding such biases. When the mind is limited in its understanding by stereotypes and cultural biases, it is unable to attain intellectual freedom. I do not need to remind Mr. Collins of the past where such mental constructs were utilized to support totalitarianism, militaristic and facist governments.

Finally, the SGA leadership has been accused of engaging in "post-sixties nostalgia." I submit that Mr. Collins and his "associates" are guilty of post-fifties nostalgia; far more dangerous in todays world. Their attitudes reflect the unquestioning acceptance of authority. The personal adherence to self-gratifying and self-centered idealism, and the political apathy of the so called "Happy Days." Perhaps these attitudes were appropriate in a time when we had Harry Truman, James Forrestal and Senator Joe McCarthy to think for us. Perhaps they were appropriate for American involvement in Korea and Vietnam. However, for the eighties, these ideals can become a dangerous force in a challenging decade. I would hope the sixties taught us something about social injustice and intellectual freedom. Also, I hope that the sacrifices of John F. Kennedy and Dr. Martin Luther King were not wasted on all of us.

Art bred from inner turmoil

SIX EMIGRE ARTISTS
Oct. 18 - Nov. 2
Herter Gallery

By CHRISTINE MARINI
Collegian Staff

Appearing until November 2 in the Herter Art Gallery is a show entitled Six Emigre Artists. This exhibit consists of representative works by six well-known artists, all of whom were born in the Soviet Union and have since emigrated to the west. The works on display are taken from the collection of the Eduard Nahamkin Gallery in Manhattan.

The diversity of this exhibit, both in terms of style and of media used, is alleviated by the shared theme of the fantastical and surrealistic. Spiritual autobiography is etched deep in all of these works; the dark and troubling undertones of despair evident in the works reflect the inner turmoil of artists driven, by untenable conditions, from their native culture.

Mihail Chemiakin's twisted personifications, some in gouache and some lithographs, share a grotesque and unnatural incompleteness, like puzzles with critical pieces missing. Chemiakin's mild colors contrast sharply with the distorted figures that characterize his work.

Igor Tulipanov is represented in Six Emigre Artists by works in watercolor, oils, and pen and ink. His pieces are marked by their excruciating details and coyly half-hidden symbols. Like Chemiakin, Tulipanov fills his art with intricate riddles. Tulipanov's painted panels "Arm through a Mirror" and "Man in a Bottle" are clearly influenced by the Boschian school; in these paintings the artist seems to be looking for a new Eden.

Ancient fertility goddesses are brought to the 20th century in Yuri Krasny's bloated bronze sculptures. The women Krasny portrays have melted and lost their individuality to the forces of time. Though Oleg Tselkov's paintings of bland, dehumanized masks in neon colors share this sense of human erosion and displacement, his work lacks the sly humor that Krasny's women personify.

Ernst Neizvestny, an artist best known for his sculpture on Krushchev's tomb, displays lithographs as well as examples of his sculpture in "Six Emigre Artists". His art is dark and strong--almost smelted-- and the force behind it puts it in limbo between suspended animation and perpetual motion.

Shimon Okshteyn, who had an individual show at Herter Gallery last year, has some of his most recent paintings in this exhibit. "Covergirls" and "The Stranger", among others, convey the artist's vision of post-apocalyptic darkness. The feral gleam that emanates from the brittle figures in Okshteyn's work propositions the viewer with an invitation to Hell.

The density of so much provocative art in such a small gallery is a bit overwhelming; Six Emigre Artists deserves to be viewed more than once. In any case, this exhibit, an illustration of sorts of spiritual oddessy, is an outstanding show that should not be missed.

The "Six Emigre Artists" exhibition on display at Herter Gallery, Herter Hall ends tommorrow, November 2.

Grant tight yet indulgent

EDDY GRANT
Thursday, October 27
Fine Arts Center

By GERARD COSLOY
Collegian Staff

The way I figure, Eddy Grant is best taken in small doses--stay in the hall for his shimmering live version of "Walking On Sunshine" (recently bettered by Arthur Baker and Rockers Revenge)...hit the rest room with reading material during the 10-minute live version of "Electric Avenue" (complete with de riguer audience sing-along...10 points to the kid who forgot the words once Eddy shoved the mike in his face).

Pro Number 1. Eddy Grant is a master pop craftsman. Nah, not like Billy Joel, but more along the lines of a Marvin Gaye in terms of consistency, personal integrity and social consciousness. Deftly carved hooks and tight segues from song to song pinpoint Grantspvrofessionalism, but not at the expense of creative verve (the two new songs played tonight sounded tighter than anything on Killer On The Rampage).

But with a Number 1 US 45 (the beforementioned "Electric Avenue") comes the pressure to MOVE UNITS. Con Number 2: Eddy Grant is as clumsy as a salesman as Elvis was during his Las Vegas years. Listless readings of most all of Killer were unnecessary, expecially considering the vast repitiore Grant surely has at his disposal (least polished and best moment of the nightant doing the Equals' "Baby Come Back").

So many "thank-u" 's, I guess Eddy was hoping someone would give him a new pair of leather trousers (evening's low point: Grant's confusing bump'n'grind routine. While it might've produced loud shrieks from many audience members, Grant seemed to have all the grace of Tom Jones on ludes). And I can't forget the massive light-up sign over the stage which read: "EDDY GRANT;" just in case you forgot who you paid $7 to see.

Fox deals with Jewish dilemma

SALLY FOX
October 30
Campus Center Auditorium

By RONDA APPLEBAUM
Collegian Correspondent

"Thought provoking, original, unique, emotional...," these are some comments from members of the audience who saw the one-woman show by Sally Fox in the Campus Center on Thursday evening. Sally Fox's performance dealt with modern-day dilemmas that face American Jews.

However, Sally Fox does more than just perform, she involves the audience. First, she had the members of the audience divide into groups of five and each group of five had to form a circle. Then, she told the audience that they should all think of themselves as counselors. She would be soon introducing them to people whose problems they must try to solve. Fox quickly went behind a curtain, changed her costume and came out as the President of a synogogue. She really became this character; not because of the way she was dressed but because of the way she acted. Now, the president's dilemma was that he had to hire a new Rabbi for the synogogue. He (or she, in this instance) found a Rabbi that seemed perfectly qualified for the job, however he discovered that the Rabbi was fired from his pervious job because he had commited adultery. The question that Fox raised through this character was whether he should inform the other board members about the Rabbi's past, which would make him the transmitter of gossip, or should he not inform the board members and allow him to be hired and given a second chance. Well, it was up to the audience to come up with some answers.

Then, Sally Fox came out with a different character... and that was how the evening progressed. Fox would come out with characters ranging from a suicidal young woman, to a grandfather who felt it was his son's duty to come and live in Israel with him.

But the most exciting part of this program was in the last half hour. During this period Fox brought back the different characters and the audience had the opportunity to speak to them. For example, the audience members tried to help the suicidal girl with her problems. Of course, Fox was just portraying the suicidal girl. Nevertheless, the audience members seemed to forget that they were talking with Fox and seemed to believe that they were really talking to a suicidal young woman. That is how convincing Fox's performances were.

When I had the opportunity to talk with Fox after the perfomance, she told me how she began this unusual way of making a living. She explained to me that when she was in college, she was very confused and became involved in many different cults. After graduating from Ohio State in 1974 with a BA in Japanese studies, she was still looking for something and gave the Maharajis a try. However, all the different groups that she was experimenting with wanted her to accept their particular god, but she couldn't.

Finally she tried to give the Hillel group at Ohio State a try. She wrote a play for the group called, "Court Case 3309: Murder of a Jew." In the play she portrayed all of the people who tried to take her away from Judaism. During that performance she raised questions about Jewish identity to her audience. You see, back then she was really in need of some answers. That is how it all began, and since then she has gotten her masters degree in a program that she designed by herself that encompassed Judaic studies, psychology and theater.

Well, there is no easy way to explain an evening with Sally Fox other than to say that the program sponsored by Hillel, was deep, intricate, emotional and probably the most stimulating, intellectual experience I ever had.

R.E.M. for the Byrds

R.E.M.
October 20
Metro, Boston

By JIM FEIN
Collegian Staff

The large crowd moved towards the stage and to the key vantage points in the Metro as the lights dimmed and R.E.M. appeared on stage. Wasting no time, they began immediately. A few steady beats of a drum were soon joined instantaneously by clear, bright quitar, a quick bass, and raspy, barely decipherable vocals. The song was R.E.M.'s first hit single, "Radio Free Europe."

R.E.M. (an acronym for Rapid Eye Movement), are a rapidly emerging pop band hailing from Athens, Georgia (home of the B-52's), who play a type of music best described as unique. Having been compared to everyone from the Byrds to the Velvet Underground, to the Psychedelic Furs, the R.E.M. sound has effectively avoided categorization. I would describe it as rock having definite country influences; a quitar sound similar that of the Byrds, with equally clear bass and drums, all of which provide the perfect foil for Michael Stipe's membled, deep vocals.

Their recent Boston appearance was at first uneventful. After the opening song ("Radio Free Europe"), the band proceeded to play an even mix of new material and selections from their LP. Murmur ("Catapult," "Pilgrimmage," "Talk about the Passion"). The sound was good and a pleasure to listen to, but the band seemed to be somewhat distant. Then, about 45 minutes into the concert, things changed.

R.E.M. was now a flurry of activity as the music's pace quickened, and band members Peter Buck (guitar), Mike Mills (bass), and Michael Stipe bounded freely about the stage. Drummer Bill Berry, enceased by his drum set, played with an equal fervor. R.E.M. tore through songs from both Murmur ("West of the Fields" and "Moral Kiosk") and their EP, Chronic Town ("Wolves, Lower" and "Gardening at Night") to end the regular portion of the show on a high note. Then came the encore portion.

All in all, one hour and forty minutes of great music.

Now, if only a place in the Valley had....

Pickett still wickett

WILSON PICKETT
October 21
Rusty Nail

By ALISON MALOON
Collegian Staff

When a friend said "C'mon and see Wilson Pickett at the Rusty Nail on Friday night," I was at first a little wary. I'd never gone to a funk/soul type concert. But deciding to be musically open-minded, I went. And after seeing this old master of funk perfom, I'd go again. To steal the title of a Pickett album, the concert was a "funky situation."

From the moment the band came on, following the Steamers (who incidently were just ok), to the time Wilson Pickett came down off the stage and bopped around in the audience, the atmosphere was one of pure energy. Pickett's theme song "In the Midnight Hour" was constantly blarring and the crowd loved it. The band was always dancing in the background in synchronized motion (a la the Pips-lotta soul), and they were always grinning. The concert wasn't very crowded, so most people got down to some serious dancing. Besides original favorites (i.e. "Midnight Hour," "Funky Broadway"), the band also played some covers of Top 40 hits including "Fascination," "Reggae Dancing," and "You are the Sun" which got folks who weren't all that familiar with Pickett's music dancing as well.

The crowd was really enthusiastic, but it was difficult not to be because Wilson Pickett makes the audience a major part of his show. You're not just there watching baby, you're in it. Pickett brought people from the audience up on stage to dance and groove with him, or sometimes just to hang out. And Wilson Pickett not only sings, but he dances. And he really dances. For a 45 year old guy, he sure can move. They don't call him Wilson "the Wickett" for nothing. During a break, someone mentioned to the band that they all were so full of life up on stage and seemed to be having major fun - not like it was just another job, to which the guitar player replied "Yeah, it's a true story!!"

When the trumpet player said, "it's not what you do, it's how you do it," he was right. And they sure know how to do it. He also said, after Wilson Pickett took his last bows, "Tonight, you've seen a legend" and although this legend has been around for a long time, borrowing one of today's superlatives, Wilson Pickett still rules.

Sooner Or Later You'll Get Responsibility Like This. In The Navy It's Sooner.

You're maneuvering 445 feet of guided missile frigate through the navigational hazards and non-stop traffic of one of the world's busiest ports.

But you'll dock safely. Because you know your equipment. You know your men. And even when the responsibility weighs in at 3,600 tons... you're ready.

After 4 years of college, you're ready for more responsibility than most civilian jobs offer. Navy officers get the kind of job and responsibility they want, and they get it sooner.

Navy officers are part of the management team after 16 weeks. Instead of boot camp, officer candidates receive four months of leadership training. It's professional schooling designed to sharpen their technical and management skills.

Then, in their first assignment, Navy officers get management experience that could take years in private industry. And they earn the decision-making authority it takes to make that responsibility pay off.

As their management abilities grow, Navy officers can take advantage of advanced education and training in fields as varied as operations management, electronics, and systems analysis. In graduate school it would cost you thousands; in the Navy we pay you.

And the Navy pays well. The starting salary is $17,000 (more than most companies pay). And that's on top of a comprehensive benefits program that can include special duty pay. After four years, with regular promotions and pay increases, the salary is up to as much as $31,000.

If you qualify to be an officer in the Navy, chances are you have what it takes to succeed. The Navy just makes it happen faster.

UMass sports have disappointing weekend

Volleyball fourth in Hofstra tourney

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

LONG ISLAND, N.Y. — The University of Massachusetts volleyball team returned home from the Hofstra University Tournament with a fourth-place finish and a season record of 28-14. The eight team tournament proved to be somewhat of a dissappointment for the spikers.

"We wanted to come in second with a 3-2 record but we ended up 2-3," commented head coach Elaine Sortino.

These predictions may not seem overly confident, but UMass was the only division two team invited to this tournament. The competition was top flight division one volleyball programs. UMass faced these foes from the onset, last Friday.

Fairleigh Dickinson was the first team UMass faced. UMass started off flat, a carry-over from last Wednesday's match versus Smith. The spikers were only able to salvage one game in the first three out of five match of the tourney.

UMass faced Seton Hall in the next Friday night contest. The spikers were still a bit flat, but were starting to play more aggressively. UMass fought Seton Hall through all five games of the match and came away victorious, winning the fifth and deciding game 15-9.

Saturday, UMass faced the host team Hofstra University. UMass played evenly with Hofstra in game one for about 20 minutes. The teams were even at 5-5 when Hofstra finally exploded. The final tally was 15-5 in favor of Hofstra. Hofstra won the ensuing games 15-10, 15-10.

"We gave them the best match of the tournament, it was very exciting," stated Sortino. Hofstra eventually won the tournament.

ATTEMPTED STEAL: The University of Massachusetts Steve Berlin tries to stop an unidentified player in an earlier match from controlling the ball. Berlin was involved with a controversial call in last weekends 2-1 loss to Boston College.

UMass continued their typical gutsy play in their next match versus James Madison. This time the roles were reversed and UMass was victorious in four games.

Princeton was the next UMass foe. This match would be the difference between a 3-2 weekend or a 2-3 weekend. Unfortunately UMass lost to a strong Princeton team in three straight games. Princeton held UMass to single digits in each game, but Sortino was pleased.

"The scores don't indicate the way we played. We did all right, we just have to do a little bit better," commented Sortino.

Sortino cited setters Patty and Susie Grant as well as Joanne Siler and Sally Maher for some outstanding play this weekend. The team will be looking for an impressive victory over Southern Connecticut this Wednesday night at NOPE.

Men lose 2-1 on disputed goal

By MIKE LEVINE
Collegian Staff

Anyone who believes that horrible nightmares only take place on Halloween should take a look at the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team to have that theory soundly rejected.

Their collective nightmare, which began September 13th with their first game, continued Saturday when they lost a 2-1 heartbreaker to Boston College on a controversial goal 54 seconds into overtime. The loss drops the Minutemen to 2-9-5, while B.C. ups its record to 8-8-1.

The Eagles got on the scoreboard first when Todd Toensing made a nice run down left wing, then fired a pass to Roberto Guidi, who put the ball just inside the right post to give B.C. a 1-0 lead at the 28:51 mark of the first half.

The score remained that way until 24:28 of the second half when a Simon Ostrov corner kick found its way into the net as a result of a very strong wind that blew throughout the game and a nice job by Kevin Flynn of screening goalkeeper Mike Wood to tie the score at 1-1.

Then in the first overtime period, B.C.'s Tony Gomes came down left wing and passed to Erik Brown who headed home what turned out to be the wining goal. However, UMass claimed that Brown jumped on the back of Minuteman midfielder Steve Berlin to head the ball. The non-call got a mild protest from UMass coach Jeff Gettler, but it was to no avail.

According to captain Kevin Flynn, "There's no question that he (Brown) was on Steve (Berlin)'s back. The referee just missed it."

But that's been the story of the 'Nightmare of 1983' for the Minutemen. Instead of nightmares of ghosts and goblins, the UMass soccer team's nightmares will probably be of missed scoring opportunities, uncalled fouls, and assorted other 'ones that got away'.

NBA Outlook: Philadelphia tops league, Boston wins strong second in division

By SCOTT HOOD
Collegian Staff

You can always count on the National Basketball Association for the ludicrous. First came the skyrocketing salaries and near-financial disaster for many clubs. Then there was the falling attendence and the TV ratings that were so low CBS pulled out of televising regular season games, save for rare occasions. regular season games, save for rare occasions.

Well, folks, they've done it again. Another attack of mass stupidity. Thinking that sports fans in modern America just can't get enough of playoff basketball, the owners, in NHL-like fashion (which is no compliment), raised the number of teams eligible for the playoffs from 12, which was already over half the league, to 16. Now there is the escalating problem of the NBA referee's strike and if the first weekend is any indication, it could be a long season for the substitute refs.

So, now that the regular season has been downgraded into nothing more than a six-month exhibition season, even a pro basketball fanatic like myself can forgive those less faithful to the cause if they desire to catch a few Z's before the playoffs commence next April 17. Those hearty partons who survive the season without once suffering a sense of indifference, will win free tickets to the "Farewell Ted Stepien, how will we ever survive without You" banquet. Anyway, here is the outlook for the 1983-84 season:

ATLANTIC DIVISION The most competitive top to bottom in the league, this division should see all its members qualify for the post-season frolics. PHILADELPHIA remains the class of the NBA and should repeat as division and league champion. Moses Malone and Julius Erving are two of the three top players in the league and are supported by Maurice Cheeks, who has quietly emerged as one of the best point guards in the NBA, Andrew Toney and Bobby Jones, the best sixth man in the universe. The top rookie is hotshot scorer Sedale Threatt.

BOSTON should remain a competitive second with the strongest front court in the business and an improved backcourt. You know any club that has Larry Bird will be good. Kevin McHale, Robert Parish, Cedric Maxwell, and Scott Wedman aid in the battle for the franchise's 15th championship, although questions of Parish's attitude after his contract hassle remain to be answered. The backcourt features off-season acquistion Dennis Johnson, Danny Ainge, Gerald Henderson, and a slimmed-down Quinn Buckner. NEW YORK has the league's stingiest defense and Bernard King on offense.

CENTRAL DIVISION MILWAUKEE should win the division, but expect a tough fight from ATLANTA and DETROIT. The Bucks have Sidney Moncrief and Marques Johnson around with Junior Bridgeman, Harvey Catchings, and Alton Lister lending support. The most interesting new addition is Nate Archibald, who signed as a free agent. The Pistons have talent in Isiah Thomas and Kelly Tripucka. Bill Laimbeer made the All-Star game and was a surprise. The Hawks have the second most exciting player in the league in Dominique Wilkins, able Dan Roundfield, and maneater Tree Rollins up front. Johnny Davis is the point guard. What about Chicago, Indiana, and Cleveland? Forget 'um. They won't even make the playoffs.

MIDWEST DIVISION Ralph Sampson has arrived. The world is saved, not to mention the Rockets. But the class of the division remains SAN ANTONIO, who have a solid first five in George Gervin, Johnny Moore, Atris Gilmore, Mike Mitchell, and Gene Banks. The bench is weak run-and-gun. DENVER features the league's top two scorers in Alex English and Kiki Vandewaghe. DALLAS is coming, but still lacks a big center. Mark Aguirre and Jay Vincent make a fine forward tandem and guards Brad Davis, Rolando Blackman, and rookie Dale Ellis, are above average. HOUSTON may have Sampson, but he will need help if the Rockets expect to make the playoffs. Lewis Lloyd, who stole the show Saturday with 28 points in Sampson's debut, is a find. UTAH is jump-to-the-moon guard Darrell Griffith.

PACIFIC DIVISION LOS ANGELES could feel the pressure from PHOENIX and SAN DIEGO this season. The Lakers have Magic Johnson and Kareem Abdoul-Jabbar. Jamaal Wilkes gets his quiet 20 every night, while Kurt Rambis bangs the boards. If Byron Scott, acquired from San Diego in the Norm Nixon deal, and James Worthy come through, the Lakers will win the conference.

The Suns have beefed up in recent years and in the off-season continued, acquiring Rick Robey from Boston to go along with Maurice Lucas, James Donaldson, budding superstar Larry Nance, and Alvin Adams. The backcourt of Walter Davis and Kyle Macy is backed up by old friend Paul Westphal, who returns after treks to Seattle and New York.

AP Laserphoto

I GOT IT — Houston Rockets rookie center Ralph Sampson jumps up to block the shot of 12-year veteran Artis Gilmore of the San Antonio Spurs during an NBA exhibition game.

PORTLAND has the best coach in the NBA in Jack Ramsay, good talent in Jim Paxson, Mychal Thompson, Calvin Natt, and Darnell Valentine, an the most loyal fans in the league.

SEATTLE could slip to fifth this season. Gus Williams is one of the quickest guards in the business and teams with Fred Brown in the backcourt. Center is set with Jack Sikma, but forward is the wead spot.

GOLDEN STATE will be one of the special seven this year. Joe Barry Carroll is decent in the pivot, and Larry Smith and Purvis Short are adequate at forward, but that's about it for new coach John Bach.

Senate Ratifies King Holiday

by Tracey Bryant
Nummo Staff

On October 19, 1983 the U.S. Senate voted overwhelmingly in favor of a King holiday. President Reagan agreed to sign the bill, despite his reservations.

Former Governor Meldrim Thomson Jr. of New Hampshire wrote President Reagan a letter asking hims to veto the bill. Thomson wrote that Dr. King was immoral and associated with Communist agents. President Reagan answered by writing that he had the same reservations, but that people saw the image of Dr. King, not the reality.

Reagan called Coretta Scott King, Dr. King's widow, to explain a remark he made at a news conference after the Wednesday night Senate meeting. When asked whether he thought Dr. King had been a Communist sympathizer, Reagan responded by saying, in reference to the FBI court-sealed documents on Dr. King, "We'll know in about 35 years, won't we?"

Former Vice President Walter Mondale, Senator Edward M. Kennedy, D-Masssachusetts and former President Jimmy Carter were among those critical of President Reagan's comments.

At an Atlanta gathering of prominent Southern Democrats, Mondale said that he had examined classified documents dealing with Dr. King while chairing a Senate subcommittee investigating domestic intelligence operations.

"I spent over a year intensely and personally studying all the documents because I was chairman of a highly classified subcommittee," the New York Times quotes Mondale as saying, "and I see no conceivable way that a person could make a charge that would suggest that a person whose whole public life and private life was committed to democracy and to the service of his faith was somehow capable of being a Communist."

U.S. Invades Grenada

SPECIAL TO NUMMO NEWS

The following is the text of the United Nations Security Council Resolution on the Invasion of Grenada that was vetoed by the United States on Friday, October 28, as reported in the New York Times:

THE SECURITY COUNCIL,

HAVING HEARD the statements made in connection with the situation in Grenada,

RECALLING the Declaration on Principles of International Law concerning Friendly Relations and Cooperation among states,

RECALLING also the principles concerning the inadmissibility of intervention and interference in the internal affairs of States,

REAFFIRMING the sovereign and inalienable right of Grenada freely to determine its own political, economic and social system and to develop its international relations without outside intervention, interference, subversion, coercion or threat in any form whatsoever,

BEARING IN MIND that, in accordance with Article 2, (4), of the Charter of the United Nations, all member states are obliged to refrain in their international realtions from the threat or use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state or to act in any other manner inconsistent with the principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

GRAVELY CONCERNED at the military intervention taking place and determioned to insure a speedy return to normalcy in Grenada.

CONSCIOUS of the need for states to show consistent respect for the principles of the Charter of the United Nations,

1. DEEPLY DEPLORES the armed intervention in Grenada, which constitutes a flagrant violation of international law and of the independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity of that state,

2. DEPLORES the deaths of innocent civilians resulting from the armed intervention;

As the death toll of American marines and sailors climbs from the tragedy in Lebanon and as more young American men are asked to die and kill in Grenada, I am deeply saddened.

The other night I was at a party dancing and checking out the people. Now as I prepare myself for school, I see young kids or half-grown men, eyes hollow with shock or faces twisted in pain, splashed across my television screen.

Then there are the dead, once living young men, gung-ho and full of a half-understood, misguided patriotism. That is the nature of young men in the military. Their young hearts and minds are full of a brutal kind of idealistic loyalty that is woefully inadequate to explain why they are thousands of miles away from home, dying and killing.

I was in the army, and though I was spared the cruelty and psychological trauma of war, I can empathize with those guys. There is a rush, a kind of clarity that comes from being in the military, from being directed by forces so much larger than yourself, they can scarcely be understood.

I have nothing but profound respect for those young soldiers, sailors and marines who, in their ignorance and unsophistication, are willing to risk their lives for their buddies, their country and the causes of freedom and justice.

But, I ask, are we serving the causes of freedom and justice by playing World Police Officer? For what are U.S. servicemen dying? I saw the young, drained faces of Black, White, Asian and Hispanic American soldiers staring out at me from my television screen as they lay in hospital beds. This is nothing new; military personnel of every stripe, every color, every creed and every ethnic background have been fighting for this country in its wars since the American Revolution.

Ronald Reagan says America's interests are being served by the U.S. military presence in Lebanon, but, as yet, he has not explained how. In Lebanon, a country torn by civil strife and factional fighting for more than ten years, how is the United States to bring peace through strength of arms? How is the death of someone's son, husband, father or brother in Lebanon insuring the vital interests of the United States?

Now the United States is invading Grenada, a small Black nation, and we have the prospect of Black soldiers from this country killing Black soldiers from another. Moreover, we have human beings from this country killing human beings from another.

Technically, we were invited by the other nations of the East Carribean. How would the United States react if Mexico and Canada invited a foreign military invasion of our country? How can we decry the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan (the Soviets say that they were invited by the Afghan government) or the Vietnamese invasion of Cambodia when we do the same in our hemisphere?

I'm sure that the Reagan administration has all kinds of excuses for its actions, but I can only ask the same tired question: Why are we butting into other country's affairs when we have so many problems at home? Have we learned absolutely nothing from Vietnam and the anguish and pain our actions brought to that tiny country and our own? Why are we funding insurgent attacks against Nicaragua and supporting the brutal, racist regime in South Africa? What is the moral direction of this country?

Do President Reagan and his administration have any morality? We see cuts in nutrition programs for children along side a massive arms build-up. We see cuts in jobs programs and relaxed tax measures for big business.

In the final analysis I can only conclude that Ronald Reagan has no morality, and that he is sacrificing young men for reasons the American people would not accept if they knew them.

Those brave young men are being pimped, prostituted. Their idealism and love of country is being perverted and twisted to the desired ends of powerful interest groups in this country; and none of the groups gives a damn about these young men, their families or, ultimately, the ideals for which this country is supposed to stand.

These young servicemen are, in the long run, the most tragic victims of the power-mad and manipulative policies of the Reagan administration.

DICK GREGORY: Social satirist, human rights activist; actor, artist, lecturer and author; philosopher and political activist. A man who has turned his life into a mechanism for social change and human liberation.

Dick Gregory is not simply a concerned human being; he is a spiritual institution. He is a human being reaching for the truth and sharing it with all.

His life and work are indictments against American and world society. This is why he has been "virtually barred from the entertainment business...was jailed numerous times for his part in demonstrations," and has cost over one million dollars "in cancelled bookings, travel costs and legal fees."

Since his existence has become a tool for social justice, some would rather that Gregory not exist, lest their own deprecating structures and self-lies fall under the weight of true humanitarianism.

One would think that having a massive structure before him, he would desist. But Dick Gregory continues to struggle for human dignity.

In 1974 he ran from Chicago to Washington, D.C. to call attention to world hunger. In 1980 he journeyed to Iran where he took "only liquids for 145 days as he prayed for the release of American hostages" and for the end of world hostility. "While in Iran, Gregory met with the Ayatollah Khomeini, the last Westerner to do so."

Dick Gregory's fasts to symbolize the suffering of oppressed people everywhere "have become legendary." He visited IRA hunger strikers in England, but arrived too late to help. The experience was the catalyst for his medically supervised fast in New Orleans in 1978. "There he proved fasting to be not only effective but could be done without risk to life." In 1982 Gregory instructed ERA hunger strikers in Illinois on proper fasting methods.

Gregory is a self-taught authority on nutrition and has written nine books in addition to his acclaimed autobiography.

Let us take example from Dick Gregory. Let us borrow some of his courage and find our own. When we go to hear him speak, and I know we will, let us listen with unity of purpose. Let us go out to act on what we affirm.

A People's Experience Remembered

by Brenda Ling
Nummo Staff

The Third World Theater's second Fall 1983 offering opened Thursday night with a stirring performance of Do Lord Remember Me. The play stages the real life experiences of Blacks under slavery and through to emancipation.

The actors play no set roles throughout the work, but instead assume the character of the narrative they recite at the time. The actors' convincing portrayals demonstrate their versatility and keen understanding of the socio-historical setting of the play's material. Playgoers are entranced by the play's dynamics, responding aloud to the actors and joining in song, even at the first performance which Director Roberta Uno Thelwell describes as more of a "dress rehearsal" after the slim 4½ weeks of preparation.

All the words of Do Lord's text are those of ex-slaves who were interviewed in the 1930's under the Federal Writers Project; it is De Jongh's creativity that juxtaposes scene with scene to weave a smoothly flowing description of Blacks' lives in the 1850's and 60's.

The tales recount daily hardships of life, physical work, beatings, escapes from plantations, fear of being blamed for every little thing. The characters speak of religion as a support system, of the Black church as a true community. Song is also a shared outlet for relief. In spirituals, religion, song and human energy bond to make music.

And music is made on stage. The actors' strong voices carry well the tone and the emotional content of such spirituals as "Rock My Soul," "Couldn't Hear Nobody Pray," "Ride On, King Jesus," and the joyous finale, "Do Lord Remember Me." Composed specifically for this production by UMass Music professor Horace Boyer, the original piano score accompanies the lyrics beautifully, often with a spirited boogie to move the audience to sing along.

That is the success of the production. These reminisces of a past life arouse in audience members a feeling for what it is to live under the repressive institution of slavery. Some Jamaican farmworkers in the audience expressed this after the performance by congratulating the actors for telling the story of more than the few people whose words were chosen from the original interviews. As Director Thelwell says, "That was, to me, the best compliment. They saw it in terms of talking about the spirit and courage of all Black people."

Actors Richard Ammons, Gloria Bankston, Leroy Blair, Felicia Thomas and Mangold Aashington perform with a sensttive energy and make Thelwell "proud of themn in terms of their craft. The actors have come a long way in capturing the essence of the characters."

And that is a prime reason the see Do Lord. As two actors say at the close of the performance, "It's hard to believe them things really happened, but they did, 'cause I lived 'em...Lord bless these promoters here to write this history about us slaves."

Go see the play, take an evening to sit down to visit with some people who want to talk with you.

Combining Talent for Social Change

by Brenda Ling
Nummo Staff

The Wallflower Order and Grupo Raiz appeared together Tuesday in a concert at the UMass Fine Arts Center. Sponsored by the Commuter Area Government, the women's dance collective and the New Latin American Song ensemble performed a variety of works that express peoples' oppression across the globe. Their art affirms cultural diversity in response both to historical and continuing political repression and to cultural whitewashing.

To open the evening, members of both groups entered the stage, pointed to the crisis in Central America, dedicated their performance and its proceeds to the people of El Salvador and "express(ed) outrage at the U.S. invasion of Grenada" of that morning.

After this introduction Grupo Raiz played a rhythmic, vivacious set of songs. Grupo Raiz formed three and a half years ago as a six-member ensemble to perform music of the New Song Movement. The New Latin American Song Movement is derived from the New Chilean Song Movement, incepted by Violeta Parra to reinforce political ideas through popular culture.

Forced along by a lively percussion, Grupo Raiz demanded openly "the simple right to live" and set in motion the human potential, both on the stage and in the audience, for social change.

The group reaffirmed music of Latin American culture; in their vivacity the songs were an assertion of the capacity to move forward. The lyrics urged oppressed peoples from Nicaragua to Beirut or "wherever the Eagle tries to sink its claws," to stand strong in solidarity. The songs declared that all Latin American countries are moving, "very slowly," but they are moving.

The rhythms, lyrics, guitars and percusssion instruments reflected this with a warmly persistent beat underlying each song's melodic vocals. The guitarists' endless and tireless strumming was a rejoicing in melding sounds and perhaps also a hint of the need for discipline in striving toward "self-determination for the Americas," as the group described the goals of Latin American political movements. Through musical expression, the multi-talented Grupo Raiz instilled confidence in the small, enthusiastic audience that those struggles will succeed.

The Wallflower Order entered and began warm-up exercises on the stage toward the end of intermission. The flowing elasticity of the members' movements began to warm up the audience to the open dialog that Wallflower then initiated with the statement, "It's about time that we reckon with the centuries-old ghosts in the corner." The ghosts of Native Americans' extinction, of Africans' enslavement, of Russian immigrants' grueling factory labor, and the effects of these many acts of U.S. agreeslon were brought to the stage one by one and exposed as the heritage that supports this country and the U.S.' present terrorist actions worldwide.

Wallflowers' blending of traditional and more loose, innovative dance steps created a comfortable medium for the intimate audience. Response to the high-spirited celebration cound be nothing but positive, especially with the finale of "Vamos a Andar" and the chorus, "va a llegar" (we are moving, we're going to succeed).

Wallflower's and Grupo Raiz' performance delighted the audience that returned raucous applause. The performers responded with thanks for sharing political support and in hopes that audience members use their energy to further the demands for U.S. OUT OF CENTRAL AMERICA!

Trustees will ponder $50 tuition hike

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees will decide today whether to accept or reject Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey's proposal to raise tuition by $50 for next semester.

SGA Co-President and Student Trustee Charlene Allen said "it looks positive," that the Trustees will reject the proposal, "but I'm really reluctant to be overly optimistic."

"From most of the Trustees who would give a definite answer it looks like we have enough votes, (to defeat the increase)," Allen said.

A special meeting of the Board was called to vote on the proposal so the Board of Regents of Higher Education can vote on it in time for next semester's bills to be printed, Trustee Chair Robert H. Quinn said.

Duffey presented the proposal to the Trustees at their Oct. 5 meeting. Quinn said at that time he would not vote for it, but he said last week he could be persuaded if Duffey can put together a more detailed plan.

The Trustees must approve the spending plan for the tuition increase because this increase is part of an offer by the state legislature this year which allows state colleges and universities to raise tuition up to 15 percent and keep the funds on campus for specific projects. Usually all tuition monies go into the state higher education budget process, where the individual schools can make recommendations for spending, but have little final control.

Duffey has said that the approximately $800,000 raised by the increase could create up to 80) new class sections in high-demand areas, "to accomodate more than 2,500 students who are not now able to fill their schedules out."

Neither Duffey nor Quinn were available for comment yesterday, but University President David C. Knapp is supporting the plan now, according to Joyce Hosie, director of public information for the University.

"He says the public colleges and universities deserve greater spending flexibility," Hosie said. Knapp also believes "the tuition retention program would solve course access problems," and was swayed by Duffey's decision to grant waivers on the increase to students in basic financial aid programs.

The Board of Directors of the UMass Alumni Association voted two weeks ago to oppose all tuition increases through the end of the 1984-85 school year.

Brittany Manor deposit returns are questioned

By ANNE McCRORY
Collegian Staff

Legal action may soon result from allegations that an Amherst apartment complex has violated security deposit laws, case advisors in the offices of Off-Campus Housing and Legal Services at the University of Massachusetts said yesterday.

Director of Off-Campus Housing Joanne Levenson said the investigation involves about 20 students whose leases expired either last June or Aug. 31 at Brittany Manor Apartments. The former residents claim their security deposits were not returned, were returned late, or had unexplained deductions taken from them, she said.

Under Massachusetts landlord/tenant laws, security deposits must be returned to tenants within 30 days of the date of lease expiration. If that deadline is not met, no deductions can be made.
--Michele Leaf

Under Massachusetts landlord/tenant laws, security deposits must be returned to tenants within 30 days of the date of lease expiration. If that deadline is not met, no deductions can be made, said Michele Leaf, LSO attorney working on the case. Violations of these statutes can result in the tenant receiving triple damages in court, she said.

Leaf said LSO has not yet contacted the Brittany management, but is "looking into" the situation and will "then decide what's appropriate."

"We've received several complaints regarding practices, specifically deductions from security deposits," Leaf said.

The Brittany Manor manager, who refused to give his name, said he had received no complaints over security deposits.

"We haven't had any problems," he said.

Levenson said most of the complainants had contacted the department management at least once, "many more than twice."

Leaf said one "very strange" aspect of the case involves former tenants whose leases expired Aug. 31. These tenants received their deposits this past week, though the envelopes were meter-stamped Sept. 30, she said.

A related case now in litigation involves a class action suit against Colonial Village, where routine deductions were allegedly made for cleaning and repairs, Leaf said, noting such incidents could be called "definitely a big problem around here.

"Students often leave the area and don't pursue claims which are valid. It's their inability to pursue it (when they move or graduate)," Leaf said.

Levenson said the investigation for which her office is seeking additional complainants, is a result of a joint task force begun about five years ago. Compiling complaints, the two offices can "see a pattern" and "start looking for some answers," she said.

Trustees, administrators approve of Long Range Plan

By TAMI BORTON AND JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

While Chancellors from the Amherst and Worcester campuses of the University of Massachusetts highly approve of the latest Long Range Plan, student Trustee Charlene Allen has her doubts.

The Long Range Plan is a five year projection for the planning process concerning all aspects of the University, including the UMass-Amherst, Boston and Worcester campuses. It must be approved by both the Regents and the University Board of Trustees. The latest document was approved by the Trustees on Oct. 5.

"I think it's good that all three campuses are included in the plan," Allen said at an Oct. 4 interview. "The more intercampus coordination we have, the better chance we have of securing funds."

But a lot of the plan is "fluff," she said, "the two pages devoted for the huge issue of general curriculum say nothing."

"I think it's good that all three campuses are included in the plan. The more intercampus coordination we have, the better chance we have of securing funds."
--Charlene Allen

"There is nothing new pertaining to student activities," she said, "it was taken from last year's plan."

Last spring, Student government co-presidents Allen and Tom Ahern, as well as student senate members, met with Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey and two of his associates to discuss the role of the SGA and the Student Activities Trust Fund. No agreement was reached as Duffey felt he and the students were coming from different angles.

Duffey places the emphasis of his plan on graduate education and research.

According to the document, the Amherst campus is the only public institution in the commonwealth which is a major comprehensive center for graduate study and research.

"It seemed very appropriate to raise this as primary," Duffey said at the Oct. 5 Trustees' meeting, "I don't think it puts the undergraduate in second place."

Another major revision for Amherst is the establishment of a Planning Council which will serve to assess goals and objectives for campus.

John Tranquada, chancellor of the UMass Medical School in Worcester, called the system-wide Long Range Plan "a very important step for the University of Massachusetts."

Last spring former Provost Loren Baritz submitted a plan which the Regents deemed too general asking that "some parts of it be clarified and revised," Duffey said.

The first Long Range plan was developed under former Chancellor Henry Koffler in 1982, calling for the "phasing out" and combining of various academic departments on campus.

House votes to pull troops out of Grenada

WASHINGTON–The House called on President Reagan Tuesday to withdraw troops from Grenada within 60 days as provided in the war powers act which Congress passed during the Vietnam era to prevent lengthy, undeclared wars.

The vote was 403-23.

The measure now goes to the Senate, where a spokesman for the Senate Foreign Relations Committee said it is expected to be acted upon quickly.

The Senate passed an identical resolution last Friday as an amendment to a bill extending the national debt limit so that the government could borrow more money.

But on Monday, senators defeated the debt limit measure, even though it could be reconsidered and passed with or without a war powers provision.

Reagan regards the 1973 War Powers Act as an encroachment on his constitutional powers as commander-in-chief, but it is not certain whether he would veto or sign the bill if it reached his desk. A White House spokesman said last week a decision would be made depending on the situation at the time.

Dukakis reviewing state Solomon bill

BOSTON — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis is reviewing a bill that would deny state scholarship aid to men who don't register for the draft, his top spokesman said Tuesday.

"We're going to take a long look at it with the possibility of amendments to make it more equitable," James Dorsey, Dukakis' press secretary, said after the House and Senate completed action on the bill Monday and sent it to the governor's desk.

"I would think we'd take a full 10 days. There are a number of issues that need to be resolved," he said. "A veto would not be ruled out."

Dukakis questioned "whether the business of education ought to be just that, and not to enforce the Selective Service registration laws," Dorsey said.

"He is also concerned with the issue of fairness. The bill seems to apply only to those young men whose parents can't afford to pay for tuition on their own," he said.

Invasion raises questions of US credibility

AP — The Grenada invasion leaves dozens of unanswered questions, uncertainties, inconsistencies bobbing in its wake.

Confusion stems from strict U.S. military controls on the news media. Some stems from poor communications, hasty conclusions, or the failure of U.S. authorities thus far to release documentary evidence to support contentions of a Cuban buildup on the Caribbean island.

Some confusion apparently is the result of deliberate mis-statements.

The "credibility" problem has prompted one White House press officer to quit his job, and congressional leaders to organize a fact-finding visit to Grenada.

Here, are some question marks on the invasion:

WAS THE INVASION 'LEGAL'?

The U.N. and Organization of American States charters forbid such a violation of a nation's territory.

Secretary of State George P. Shultz, asked about this, cited the two-year-old treaty that formed the Organization of Eastern States as justification for the military operation.

But that treaty, to which the United States is not a party, stipulates that collective military action can be taken against "external aggression," and then only by a unanimous vote of the eight member states. Only five members voted to take action on Grenada.

WERE AMERICANS IN SERIOUS DANGER?

U.S. officials said the invasion was necessary because Americans, most of them medical school students, were threatened by a reign of terror on Grenada. "The nightmare of our hostages in Iran must never be repeated," Reagan declared.

WHAT WAS THE NON-AMERICAN CASUALTY TOLL?

Although an uncensored news film showed U.S. soldiers lining up Cuban bodies, U.S. officers said the non-American dead were not being counted.

Finally, on Friday, the operation commander, Vice Adm. Joseph Metcalf III, said there were 36 dead and 56 wounded among the defenders. A day later, although no new combat had occurred, he said he had "heard" as many as 69 Cubans were killed.

On the invasion's first day, U.S. warplanes mistakenly bombed a Grenada mental hospital, killing perhaps 20 patients. It was not until six days later, after a Canadian magazine journalist reported the bombing, that U.S. officials acknowledged it.

Minority students tour university

By DANIEL SOBEL
Collegian Correspondent

About 80 students from four Boston high schools received a tour and recruiting offers from the University of Massachusetts Tuesday, in the first of the University's College Awareness Days.

College Awareness Day was set up four years ago to attract minority and low-income students to the University by giving them information on social and academic programs and financial aid at the University, according to Dean of Academic Support Services Larry Benedict.

The students, from Boston English, Madison Park, Fanueil and Jamaica Plain high schools, ate lunch and toured the Campus Center, University Tower library, Fine Arts Center and residential areas.

Associate Director of Admissions Rudolph Jones, who also helped coordinate the event, said "most college students are middle class, and minorities haven't been climatized to universities."

The day is used as "a recruiting tool," Jones said. "The most effective way to interest them is to show them the campus and the beauty of it."

Deans from the colleges of Arts and Sciences, Management and Engineering spoke on their respective fields of study and encouraged the group to get "turned on" to learning and education. The deans stressed that the potential to succeed is within everyone and that students just have to attack their goals with full force.

Benedict explained that social interaction can be just as important as intellectual development in the college experience.

College Awareness Day was set up four years ago to attract minority and low-income students to the University by giving them information on social and academic programs and financial aid at the University.

Benedict also pointed out that minority enrollment at UMass has increased from five percent to seven percent in the past year.

The Board of Regents of Higher Education are proposing a set of standard admissions criteria for state universities, colleges and community colleges, Benedict said. But a waiver policy has been developed after protests that a strict policy could be discriminatory, he said.

The board will exempt students with special needs or special skills, and the policy has been loosened up to include other criteria, such as competitiveness of the high school, along with Scholastic Aptitude Tests and high school rank in the admissions criteria, Benedict said.

Women play important role in Japan

By MARY-SHEILA LOUGHLIN
Collegian Staff

Since World War II women in Japan have won many freedoms and now represent the dominating force in family life, said visiting Japanese lecturer Sumiko Iwaophd; who spoke at Smith College last night.

Speaking on the role women play in Japanese society, Iwaophd said the old notion of Japanese women as being submissive and subservient in their roles as housewives is not true.

"In the home the Japanese woman is the most powerful. The husband's only responsibility is to bring in the pay check and in most cases it is delivered over to the wife who manages it accordingly," she said.

Iwaophd said housewives control the children, the family budget and are responsible for the physical and mental well-being of their husbands and children.

"In Japan today, being a housewife does not carry the derogatory meaning as it may in the United States. Motherhood is highly valued by Japanese women," she said.

Iwaophd is a working mother and professor in Tokyo who conducts research comparing women before and after World War II.

Prior to World War II, Iwaophd said women in Japan mostly stayed home and worked on the farm but after the war and industrialization women began going out into the work force and great changes occured.

But unlike the United States, where women are now expected to work, Japanese women can still remain at home and many women have part-time jobs and continue to be devoted to their children.

Women often devote their whole lives to their children and Iwaophd said some women between the ages of 35 and 40 whose children have grown up are suffering from identity crises because they don't know what their real purpose in life is.

An increasing number of women want to be single in Japan now because it is acceptable and many women join cultural groups, said Iwaophd. In the past, Japanese women had to get married.

She also said that Japanese women now have a higher voting percentage than men because they are more concerned about their right to vote but they are not voting for other women, so men remain the more dominant force in government.

"Japanese women vote because they feel it is their duty and otherwise they are not involved in politics," she said.

An estimated $500 in damage was sustained by Moss' 1979 Honda and an estimated $300 in damage was sustained by Schal's moped, the complainants said. Schal suffered minor injuries but was not hospitalized, police said.

In other police action:

Amateurs radio across nation from UMass

By LYNN PERKINS
Collegian Correspondent

Yes--there is something almost as fun and just as convenient as forgetting about COINS homework and tapping into the University's "talk" frequency on the University computer system.

It is a free message service, popular among people who have aversions to writing letters or paying large telephone bills and it is available to faculty, students, and staff at the University of Massachusetts.

Sound like an advertisement for FTD? Well, almost. Only this time the deliver is a message, not flowers, and it's free.

Members can use the airwaves to send messages anywhere in the U.S. . . . including Alaska and Hawaii.

Peter McBride, president of the UMass Amateur Radio Association, says the club can send an unlimited number of messages, simply and quickly.

Members can use the airwaves to send messages anywhere in the United States (including Alaska and Hawaii) and some overseas countries.

The club, established in 1947 and presently located in the Engineering Lab building, can provide communication for University events and for emergencies. Last weekend, the club provided communication for the UMass Horse Trials by setting up portable stations at various locations where the trials took place. The positions of the horses and other information was radioed to a centrally-located station where the information was accessible to officials. The Radio Association has provided communication for this event for the past two years.

The club also allows licensed radio amateurs to use the station's radio equipment. For people who are interested in becoming a licensed radio amateur, the club offers classes during the academic year for amateur radio.

McBride said the club consists of 20 members, all of whom are licensed radio amateurs. Licensing involves passing a Federal Communications Commission (FCC) exam, a knowledge of basic electronics and morse code.

The club is funded through members dues but were helped out recently when they received a grant from the Student Government Association capital equipment for $1200 last year in order to replace stolen equipment.

DOIN' IT ALL FER YOU--The 'SYL staff gathers in the sound booth.

'SYL plays it like it is, oh yeah

By DAVID MUNIZ
Collegian Staff

Inside a booth in a corner of the Cash'n dormitory basement Debbie Mannis spins records. The Beach Boys. The Sex Pistols. Everything the listeners want to hear from one of their favorite DJs, "Exton Lear," as she is commonly known on the air.

Mannis works a shift a week on WSYL, a University of Massachusetts student-run radio station, which has returned to the airwaves from its summer hiatis and a delayed opening.

This semester's debut was stalled a little, as the phrase goes, by circumstances beyond their control--the station only recently began operation--but now the 89.9 FM frequency turns out punk, new wave, funk and the basics: R & B and 'oldies'.

"We had some problems getting our new transmitter installed," station manager Wayne Casney said. Even with minimal funding from Sylvan Area Government, Casney says the station is improving.

"We work with what we have," he said.

The station, plays no commercials, which Casney said gives freedom to play different kinds of music.

"We don't have to worry about pleasing advertisers," he said.

WSYL's new neighbor is WMUA, located down the hall until construction on the new home in the Campus Center is completed. MUA also plays alternative rock but, Casney said is not quite as progressive as SYL.

"They have to please a bigger audience than we do. It could restrict their freedom to play what they want."

At WMUA, deejay Mary Kelley characterizes the station's music as "alternative."

"We play lots of new music, it's impossible to categorize it," she said.

Both radio stations play music that represents the interests that are as diverse as the audiences that listen to them.

Got that, Wolfman?

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Letters

Innuendo versus evidence

To the Editor,

Why did Dakin Ferris resign? I don't know. He told the Collegian that he quit for academic reasons. He told the Student Senate that it was for academic reasons, but that he was frustrated too. Yesterday he claimed in an editorial that it was all out of political frustration. It seems that Dakin has changed his story a few times; and with each version has gotten increasingly nasty to SGA President, Tom Ahern, at a time when Tom may be forced to run for re-election--what a coincidence!

I don't really mind people speaking out when they feel something is wrong. However, when speaking out involves the use of lies and innuendo in an effort to manipulate people, it's time to draw the line.

1. Mr. Ferris, using an "historical" analysis, says that there have been E-L-E-V-E-N Attorneys General in the last five years. That's pretty good research for someone who has been in student government for all of five months. I've been in it for four years now, and I've only seen five of them, counting Dakin, himself. The other six must have been in office the year before I was around.

2. Dakin writes of refusing to make a back-room deal and being persecuted for it. Baloney. The fact of the matter is that Dakin and his "other concerned students" tried to force Tom Ahern to appoint him after a search process in which half of the applicants withdrew. After Tom refused to be bullied into a decision for the second time, Dakin filed a motion to take the authority to appoint the Attorney General away from the President, and resigned.

3. As for being locked out of his office, Dakin knows perfectly well that the President has no control over keys (The Board of Governors is in charge of them). If I didn't know better, I might come to the conclusion that Mr. Ferris is trying to...shall we say, manipulate the truth at election time?

Dakin's second article will run soon - maybe alongside of this. In it, he will probably attack me as well. That's O.K., though. I don't have anything to lose, and a pretty good record upon which to stand. But let's get one thing straight: We are dealing with someone who is upset because he didn't get his way - nothing more - and I think that the Collegian has better things to do than print people's temper-tantrums. Let's get with it, folks.

Jim Murphy
Former SGA President

Yes folks, he's the real thing

To the Editor,

Let me introduce myself. I am a real living person, and although you might find it hard to imagine a conservative columnist writing for the Collegian, nevertheless here I am. I also intend to continue writing for the Collegian, and I am definitely certain my fine colleague Katherine Curda will do the same.

Mr. Gannon, I am too familiar with your record at the Collegian, but I don't doubt either your existence nor your experience as a former editorial staff member of this paper. I do, however, doubt your better judgement as a result of the content of your recent ad hominem attack upon myself and Ms. Curda. Surely, you could've written a more gentlemanly barrage upon the ideas we have espoused--but why go the ad hominem route?

When I began writing columns and letters-to-the-editor a couple of years ago, I was also tempted to strike out at the messengers of bad tidings. But experience does have a positive way of mellowing out a writer, and it does help a writer to discover ways of attacking the unpleasant ideas expressed by others without denigrating the quality and credibility of what you have to say by resorting to cheap shots against the person whom you disagree with.

If you don't like my ideas about Central America, KAL 007, criminal justice reform, or Grenada, then why don't you just say so? What's the purpose of attacking me and Ms. Curda in a highly unprofessional and crude fashion? What do you have to gain from this kind of vitriolic and childish display of antipathy towards my views and those of other conservative writers?

But don't worry Mr. Gannon. These questions aren't necessarily directed towards you in a personal way, albeit they appear to do so. Actually, I'm hoping to direct this message for all Collegian readers, and for those inclined towards writing a letter-to-the-editor or columns. Avoid the ad hominem approach. Rather than building your case up--you only wind up looking whiney and tearing down whatever credibility your argument had in the first place.

It's perfectly alright to refer to another person, and criticize his remarks and ideas in the same column. But calling a person whom you simply disagree with "an unashamed fool" only cheapens your image in the public. In the long run, who'll ever take the bombastic cheap-shot artist in a serious vein?

Even though I have decided to break one of my rules of avoiding a reply to whatever replies have been written about my columns; you sir, have given me the chance of replying without appearing unnecessarily trite.

Admittedly, my writings, and those of Ms. Curda's, are, and will continue to be controversial. But this is the beauty of the op-ed page of the Collegian and/or any other newspaper in this nation. I can clearly remember just how hard it was for conservatives to express themselves in the Collegian. I have also been a resident of the Amherst area for over ten years, and I can also remember just how much a stranglehold the liberals had not only on the Collegian, but other publications as well. The Collegian used to have a reputation of being a mediocre--yet obtusely radical paper a few years ago. This is not the case anymore.

In fact, the Collegian, thanks to the more responsible kind of editorial leadership has dramatically improved its editorial content. I am not saying this because conservatives like myself and Kathy Curda have become regular columnists. The new directions undertaken by the present editorial staff reflect a growing sense of maturity, and journalistic responsibility--which was sorely lacking in the past.

Ms. Curda and I disagree with the liberal viewpoint. But although I cannot speak for her personally, it is beneath my dignity to attack another columnist or reporter in the same vein you have attacked us.

I have no personal animosity against you Mr. Gannon, but I resent what you have done. Nevertheless, anytime you care to meet a "real" conservative columnist like myself, please feel free to contact me through the Collegian. You might find I'm not an "unashamed fool...who is obsessed with his aggressive naivite." Rather, you might find me to be an eager conversationalist who's willing to give another person a benefit of the doubt without the unnecessary desire to resort to ad hominem attacks. Care to join?

Give blood and save a life

To the Editor,

The Red Cross Blood Program is extremely concerned about its first day of the three-day Bloodmobile at the Student Union Ballroom at UMass. The first days collection was almost 100 pints short of its 180 pint goal. It is crucial that they collect over this amount on each of the next two days of the Bloodmobile (today and tomorrow).

Donating blood is a simple procedure--the total experience takes about 45 minutes. Please stop by the Student Union between 9:30 and 3:30, and help save someone's life.

The Bloodmobile Staff

Are politics the problem?

Last year Jim Murphy was the singular holder of the office of the SGA President. He appointed an Actiag Attorney General, Liz Hill, who stayed in office for a whole year. How could he leave an Acting Attorney General in the position for a whole year, the length of a normal term? Well, he did hold a second selection process in the Fall. The problem came when the group charged with selecting an A.G., he had the audacity to find someone that was highly qualified! Not to be undercut, Jim chose to focus on the fact that the applicant pool was too small, thus he was under no obligation to accept this qualified individual. He made no other attempt to fill the position legitimately.

Dakin N. Ferris

Why should he? He could keep the person that was presently in office by doing nothing. So what if this person felt that the A.G. should represent the interests of the presidents office above all, as I mentioned yesterday. So what if that same person was found Unqualified by the same selection committee for the position.

So then we changed presidents, and, if one placed any creedence in campaign slogans (HA!) then we might have believed Ahern and Allen when they said one of their priorities was to get a permanent A.G. into office without a scandal. (Ha!) As with Jim, Ahern failed in his constitutional obligation. He did have a selection which was approved and endorsed by the Affirmative Action Officer. The reasons the selection was invalidated comes down to whichever reason you decide to believe. Liz Hill told me it was for affirmative action reasons and that the presidents were going to appoint her as, you guessed, Acting A.G. So what if Liz Hill chaired the selection process. So what if she was still only a student by virtue of an incomplete and wouldn't be here in the fall.

And then there is Tom's perpetually evolving position. First he agreed that there was an affirmative action violation.....until I pointed out that he was under no such obligation for a selection, and that even then it was legitimate. So then he broke down and told me how bad it would look for him to appoint a white male and that in the end he was accountable to Co-President Charlene Allen. Still, he urged me to go overboard in working on Third World issues so that he might be able to make a case for me later. Finally, he told the Senate that the Student Activities Mission and Goals Statement demanded he work to eradicate racism and human oppression. For this reason he had the authority to override the mandate of the SGA constitution demanding appointment of an A.G. within four weeks of taking office.

So, I was appointed Acting A.G. early this summer. Tom never asked me if that was O.K. with me, and in fact, as I started to show yesterday, did nothing to help me. Tom told me of his intentions to have a swift and legitimate selection this fall. What he did was then set up the most extensive advertisement process ever used for this position.

The selection began, and the deadline has now been extended two times. The first time an application that had not one question about student judiciaries or jucicial policies was used on it (in fact it was a presidential assistant's application).

Still, the coup de grace came later when Co-President Allen announced her intention to resign. This was rumored up to a month ago, but I placed no value in it. Surely the presidents would talk to their fellow officers in advance of such a decision, expecially since my already tentative position is placed in greater limbo by such a move. New presidents would mean the potential for a new selection for an Attorney General.

This was the last straw. Their politics have kept me from my job and you have been taken for a ride.

Contact your senator and have them vote for the proposed changes in the by-laws concerning the appointment of the A.G. Take this long-abused power away from the Presidents. This should be a non-political appointment and should rest in the hands of the SGA Senate.

Dakin N. Ferris is a UMass student.

Gregory speaks for Black Homecoming Week

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Dick Gregory, world renowned comedian and social activist appeared at the University of Massachusetts last night in honor of the Black Homecoming week.

Addressing a full house of students, faculty and community members at Bowker Auditorium, Gregory spoke of several problems facing America today using sarcasm to get his point across.

Gregory addressed the Grenadian situation questioning the presence of the American medical students in the small black Caribbean island, and what kind of research they are conducting there. "It almost makes Hitler look like God," he said in a press conference prior to his talk.

There's something wrong with America," Gregory said throught his talk backing up his arguments with real facts.

Speaking about the first black astronaut to be sent to space, Gregory thought the idea of sending a woman first gave the impression "niggers were chasing white ladies." "Whites would see a change if blacks were in charge," Gregory said. Gregory questioned how white people would react if blacks in power would exhaust the social security funds, turn white children into drug addicts, build nuclear plants or make a movie such as Octopussy.

"I wonder how long would it be until we treat the handicap with dignity and respect," said Gregory, who said he once believed the handicap parking lot signs were meant for blacks. Gregory said the nation is more mature since the 60s. The United States can now handle Jesus Christ as being black or a woman but it can't handle him/her as a cripple, he said.

Dick Gregory makes his audience laugh and think in his talk last night at Bowker Auditorium as part of Black Homecoming week.

"And this is the greatest nation in the world," he said after mentioning the problems of alcohol, drug addiction and suicide. "Most Americans don't'tolerate sober, what they tolerate under the influence." he said.

Gregory said the story of ET the extra terrestrial was a representation of the story of Jesus Christ. "Today we don't have stables," he said to justify the idea that because ET came from out of space, appeared in a garage, healed people and promised to return he was symbolizing Jesus.

He also saw the role of Eddy Murphy in Trading Places as Job in the Bible. "As long as ET doesn't look like a Jew, White, Black, Chicano or a nun people love it because they have learned to hate each other," he said.

Gregory wondered how America can keep going to the poll to choose between the lesser of the two evils and end up with the evilest.

Gregory spoke on the reactions of blacks toward their counterparts. He said if it would have been up to blacks a black Miss America and her runner up wouldn't have been chosen. He also said King's birthday bill would not have passed if it had been up to blacks.

Gregory, an expert on dietary health and author of many dietary books said caffeine is "a drug okayed by the people in power." "They give you half for those who want to be legal and half for those who want to get high," he said.

"As long as its white its okay," he said while speaking about Jackson's President candidacy decision successfully questioned by blacks.

What's old is what's new
A stunning surprise from Ronstadt

What's New (Asylum)
Linda Ronstadt & The Nelson Riddle Orchestra

By DON NAREY
Collegian Staff

What's New is actually what's old and what's old is what's new with Linda Ronstadt. With her most stunning surprise to date the first lady of rock tackles the standards of Gershwin and Berlin recreating a mood once set by the likes of Frank Sinatra, Billie Holiday and Ella Fitzgerald. What's most surprising is that Ronstadt has abandoned her lucrative formula for revising oldies and teamed up with the Nelson Riddle Orchestra creating an authentic background for the traditional arrangements. Rather than mold the songs to fit her own style she raises her vocal capacity to new heights realizing the music's timeless beauty.

From the opening track she pushes her voice to new heights. "What's new," she wails over a classic steady bassline, "how's the world treating you?" Riddle's orchestra is flawless, but Ronstadt is never overshadowed. The music comes to a halt for the song's climatic closing line, "of course you couldn't know, I haven't changed, I still love you so." She sways through Gershwin's "I've Got A Crush On You" and "What'll I Do" with the kind of style lost someplace with white kid gloves and big bands.

Her rendition of Sinatra's hit "Guess I'll Hang My Tears Out To Dry" is brilliant making it hard to believe that this is the same voice that belted out numbers like "When Will I Be Loved" in that lower register that's been put away for this album. She's also set aside her country twang that added sweetness to her little girl image to shape her full-bodied soprano into more confident, jazzy sound, especially on "Crazy He Calls Me."

Ronstadt's most shining moment, perhaps of her entire career, is her version of George and Ira Gershwin's classic, "Someone To Watch Over Me." She uses her voice as a finely tuned and controlled instrument coasting through the musical scale and heading for an extraordinary climax. When she reaches it, "won't you tell him please to put on some speed, follow my lead, oh how I need, someone to watch over me," you know she's got you and she does too.

What's New shows that there is something to learn from an era gone by. It's a fun and unique lesson in style, long lost, but available to be discovered again. And that's what's new.

WARSAW PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA
October 30
Fine Arts Center

By TONY SCILIPOTI
Collegian Correspondent

It took the whole first movement of Beethoven's "Emperor" concerto for Maestro Kord to pull his forces together Sunday night. Having done so, he proceeded to entertain a large FAC audience for an hour and a half with first-class, highly romantic interperetations of Beethoven and Rachmaninoff.

The initial movement of Beethoven's Piano Concerto No.5 is marked allegro, and the Warsaw Philharmonic's heavy and dyspeptic rendition of it was due in great part to the conductor's failure to adopt the spirit of that tempo indication. Mr. Dichter's performance, also, was disappointing here, even crediting the acoustics of the hall and my less-than-perfect seat with what sometimes seemed muddy articulation on his part. One would have hoped that he would have made the most of Kord's relatively slow tempo by taking the time during his softer, more reflective solo passages to imbue the music with the sort of leisurely tenderness and luminosity that can be so effective in this piece--witness the old Wilhelm Backhaus recordings with the Vienna Philharmonic. Instead, he seemed to be going for a classical sparity and reserve, but this works to no positive effect without the sympathetic interperetation on the conductor's part that we hear in, for instance, the Solti/Ashkenazy "Emperor."

To an even greater degree than in the Allegro, Kord's pace in the Adagio was slower than most of us are used to. But this was only evidence of his finally finding his element. Conductor and soloist were in complete accord of mood, and the mood was: Romantic. They elected to strive for the gorgeous sound, for lyricality; to rid their interpretation of any remnant eighteenth-century emotional restraint. They were successful: Everyone in the audience could be felt melting into his seat.

The third movement was more conventional than the second. Unlike the first, however, it was a spiritedly propelled, crisp, and affecting performance, even if not really outstanding in any particular way.

It has been said often enough already that it doesn't much credit a composer to have his audiences always be reminded of film scores (with Rachmaninoff, we hardly need the program notes to prompt us to this association) and teen-age pop tunes. If, however, we were watching a movie for which the score was the piece--Rachmaninoff's Symphony No.2--which the Warsaw Philharmonic played Sunday, we'd think: "This film has great music." And if, after the first two bars of the third movement, we realize that once again Eric Carmen has pilfered from good old Sergei R., and so hear the next fifteen minutes of music as just so much elaboration of "Never Gonna Fall in Love Again," maybe that's okay. It's fun, and "Never Gonna Fall in Love Again" isn't such a bad tune.

During the presentation of this piece, the audience had the additional pleasure of watching an orchestra and a conductor enjoying themselves immensely--smiles on their faces and animation in their respective bowing and batoning. In a purely visual sense, Kazimierz Kord is a very winning conductor, looking like a cross between Beethoven and Dudley Moore.

The crowd showed its appreciation of all this by calling the Maestro back several times for bows, and obliging him with a standing ovation. He responded with a rousing encore which appears to be something of a mystery piece on campus. Only graduate student Miriam Moebius managed to learn this much through the Polish of one of the orchestra's cellists: It was "a Polish national dance." Perhaps more descriptive, though, is an Anthropology professor's quip that ". . . it sounds like central-european Boston Pops."

Despite the concert's disappointing start, this listener is glad he went.

Fall sports wind down, women prepare for Nationals

Third-ranked soccer receives a bye

EYE BALL--UMass' Sue Bird chases down the ball while keeping an eye on it in a match earlier in the season. The Minutewomen have a week and a half rest before they see action in the NCAA tournament.

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team, which finished fifth in 1982 and seventh in 1981 at the National Championships, was seeded third and received a bye in the quarterfinals of this year's NCAA tournament.

By receiving the bye, UMass will host the winner of the Keene State-Brown matchup at Boyden field on Sunday Nov. 14 at 1 p.m. If UMass wins that game they will go to the final four at the University of Central Florida on November 19th and 20th.

A whopping five teams for the 12-team tourney were selected from the New England area. Connecticut, Boston College, Keene and Brown were picked, besides the 10-2-3 Minutewomen.

Three teams from the NCAA New England region (MA, VT, NH, ME) were taken (BC, UMass, Keene). Four teams from the Northeast region were picked. They were UConn, Brown, Princeton and Cortland.

"More schools are playing soccer here than in other parts of the country," said UMass coach Kalkeni Banda. "Most of the better teams are here."

Banda said that the 12 team tournament looks good. And it will be a competitive one.

Among the tourney entries, UMass lost to UConn 1-0, defeated Brown 3-1, BC 1-0, George Mason 2-1, tied Cortland State 0-0, and the University of California-Berkley 0-0. UMass did not face Keene (12-1-2) this year.

Preliminary matches will be held this weekend and the quarterfinals will be held the following weekend at the sites of the teams that received byes.

The Boston College/Princeton winner faces first ranked 18-0-1 Connecticut. Missouri/St. Louis faces George Mason for the right to take on fourth ranked Cortland State, and the Cincinnati/UCal-Berkley winner faces second ranked defending champion North Carolina.

Stickers to meet B.U., spikers host Southern Connecticut

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

It's coming. It will be here in Amherst on Saturday and a lot of people are already getting excited about it. The University of Massachusetts field hockey team hosts top ranked Connecticut in their regular season finale on Saturday and.....

Hold it! Wait a minute, here. The season is not over yet. The fifth ranked Minutewomen have another game left. And it's just as important as the UConn game.

The Minutewomen, who sport a 12-1-2, travel to Boston tonight to take on unranked Boston University on the turf at 6 p.m. UMass needs to win this game, according to Coach Pam Hixon, so it does not drop out of the fifth position it is in. The Minutewomen still have a shot of moving into the Top 4 and getting a bye into the NCAA tournament.

"This is a critical game for us," said Hixon. "With two games to go, our job is clear cut. To remain where we are we must win.

"If we overlook BU, we'll be making a big mistake."

So you can be sure, Hixon has her team ready to play BU not UConn tonight.

And playing on the artificial turf at Nickerson Field (former home of Breakers) is quite alright with the Minutewomen.

"We like to play on the turf," Hixon said. "We have great speed on the forward line and our midfielders are playing very well. I feel confident."

Thus, Hixon's main goal for her team is to finish as strong as it can.

And the Minutewomen will take this game, according to Hixon, as they have taken all the others - one game at a time.

By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

WHAT? You have not seen the University of Massachusetts volleyball team play this season? Well, tonight the spikers are hosting Southern Connecticut in a three out of five match at NOPE, beginning at 6:00.

The contest will be an exciting division II duel. UMass is currently ranked fourth and hoping for a spot in the state tournament. Southern Connecticut is ranked 11th in division 2.

UMass has not faced Southern this season. Coach Elaine Sortino is planning to face Connecticut with an offense that has a new look.

"We'll be making some changes offensively. We'll be keeping three hitters across the front. This should give us the capacity to do more things," Sortino stated.

The spikers have been on the road for a month. Their last home match was a thrilling five-game match against a determined New Haven team. Following a fourth place finish in the Hofstra tournament this past weekend, the team is glad to be home. When the crowd clears and the splinters settle, the spikers will be even happier with another 'W' added to their 28-14 record.

Golf caps off season at Invitational

By TOM KELLEY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's golf team, in its last match of the season, finished fourth in the Mt. Holyoke Invitational tournament held this past weekend.

In the B division of the tournament, UMass captain Jane Egan shot a 96 and a 93 to take first place. Junior Judy Guzy, although playing sick and under medication, shot a 97 and a 101.

Dartmouth College, the premier team in the league this year finished first ahead of Rutgers. Boston College, playing without its top player Laura Gibbons, finished third.

Coach Jack Leaman was pleased with the play of senior Teresa Collins (97/101) and freshman Linda Foli (107/108). Leaman expects his entire team back for the spring season, which will start, depending on the weather, April 1st.

"We'll be looking for more players," said Leaman. "I'd like to see anyone who can break 100."

Competition in women's golf is a lot tougher in the spring. UMass will be facing many teams, such as highly talented Amherst College, that do not play in the fall.

"We've got to get better," said Leaman. "I think we'll have a good team. Rutgers, Boston College and of course Dartmouth will be tough."

The team will begin hitting balls on the archery fields as soon as the weather breaks in the spring. Anyone interested in playing should contact Jack Leaman in the Physical Education Department.

Zoo Disc, Zulu end seasons; move on to the regionals

Zoo-Disc and Zulu, the men's and women's ultimate frisbee teams, both advanced to the regionals of the Crown Royal Ultimate Frisbee Championships this past weekend.

Saturday afternoon the ZOO-Disc team easily handled their first three opponents. They defeated Keene State 11-3, Dartmouth 11-6 and finished the day with a win over the University of Vermont, 15-6.

On Sunday UMass downed Tufts 18-10 in its first game. Tenaciously tight defense by the zoo-men caused many Tuft turnovers resulting in quick UMass scores.

In the second game, UMass faced the first-ranked nationally Rude Boys from Boston. With tight passes and few mistakes, UMass led at the half, 8-5.

But in the second half the Rude Boys came back and proved why they hold their national ranking, scoring five times to take the lead 10-9. Bodies flew all over the field as players attempted to defend passes. It stayed close but the Rude Boys pulled out a 15-10 win.

UMass lost its last game, 15-11, to the Dukes from Greenwich Connecticut.

Zulu, coming off last year's number one national ranking is having some roster problems this year.

"We lost 95 percent of our players from last year," said Nancy McNamee, one of the few returning players. "It takes time and patience to learn how to handle a frisbee and we're lacking experience. But its still fun."

Zulu lost to the Spinsters and Traffic, both Boston teams, and tied Tufts on Saturday but had won enough games the previous week to advance to the regionals in Purchase, N.Y.

The men also head to the regionals this weekend, hoping to gain entry into the finals, which are held in New Orleans.

Zoo-Disc is currently ranked ninth in the nation and first in inter-collegiate play.

Women runners place fourth in New Englands

WORCESTER--The University of Massachusetts women's cross-country team put it all together Saturday as they raced away with fourth-place honors at the New England meet.

The Minutewomen, who were not even mentioned in the meet's program and have been missing from the New England poll all season, surprised everyone as they finished fifty points ahead of fifth-place Rhode Island.

The women harriers were led by senior Dana Mikesell who covered the 3.1 mile course in 18:42 and came in 22nd.

Chris Pratt (25th, 18:47), Kim Baker (28th, 18:49), Deirdre Doyle (39th, 19:06) and Sally Howes (44th, 19:14) rounded out the top five for UMass, followed by Maureen O'Reilly who had not raced in four weeks, yet placed ahead of URI's fifth-place finisher.

Boston University's Marty Shea was the top finisher overall, smashing the Green Hills Golf Course record by more than twenty seconds in 17:14.

Two of Shea's teammates followed her directly over the line, yet the one-two-three finish was not enough to win the meet as their fifth woman came in 43rd and Boston College grabbed the team title.

Third-place New Hampshire was followed by the UMass squad, pulling off "an incredible feat to come in fourth," according to Coach Julie LaFreniere, and may at last have gained recognition as one of New England's most talented teams.

Board of Trustees kills tuition hike

By JOHN O'CONNELL
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees effectively killed a proposal yesterday to raise tuition by $50 next semester by putting off consideration of the proposal until next month.

The Trustees tabled Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey's plan for raising tuition to alleviate problems of overcrowding in high demand classes because of uncertainty over the availability of teaching assistants to fill new positions and problems of access that could be created by a tuition hike.

Even if the Trustees eventually approve the plan, "it will be too late to consider it for the spring semester," Duffey said after the vote.

Trustee Chair Robert H. Quinn said the Board of Regents of Higher Education "wanted us to have something to them by Nov. 1," and while the Trustee delay does not automatically defeat the proposal "right now, things depend on the decision of the Regents," he said.

Duffey said he "would have been curious to see what we could have done. I think it could have been useful if we had the funds."

The proposed $50 tuition increase would have taken advantage of an offer by the state legislature for state colleges and universities to raise tuition and keep the money on campus for special projects.

"The intent of that provision," said University President David C. Knapp, who support the plan, "was to provide management and budget flexibility, which we have been advocating for some time."

Seymour Shapiro, faculty representative from UMass-Amherst, said that besides creating extra sections in overcrowded classes, the approximately $500,000 raised by the tuition increase would provide "flexible funds--money which can be used to cope with problems that come up quickly."

"At the same time," he added, "I hear people saying that many students could be totally unprepared for this, especially coming in the middle of the year."

Other trustees doubted that Duffey's program could be put in place on such short notice, and Duffey said "these goals are dependent on the availability of part-time teaching assistants and faculty."

Student Government Association co-President Charlene Allen said "you cannot hire professors and get the classrooms to the extent that Mr. Duffey has proposed in that amount of time."

Allen also said later that "an additional $50 payment, required with less than three months notice, would seriously hamper the ability of many students to pay their bills."

Trustee John T. Sweeney, an administrative law judge, questioned the legality of waiving the increase for approximately 7,000 students on campus receiving Pell Grants and State Scholarship Assistance Grants.

Duffey's memo on the proposal stated that, "I have determined that we have the authority to waive the $50 increase in the next semester for these students," but Sweeney said this was too general. Duffey proposed the procedure for waiver applications, like other parts of the plan, would be more "mature" by the fall semester.

Sweeney also asked if a tuition increase coupled with a Board of Regents tuition plan, would put UMass-Amherst students in "a double kind of jeopardy."

UMass-Boston student Trustee Paul Reeves said, "There will be no way to assess the impact until the Regents complete their tuition policy." He urged the Trustees "to table the measure until a coherent tuition policy is created for the University."

Duffey said after the vote that "this isn't an issue of bad guys against good guys," but rather "a central issue about how we will try to provide equity and also how to provide quality education."

Duffey states he will seek other solutions

By KEN RAZINET
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — A proposed $50 tuition increase which would have provided funds to begin to reduce the number of oversubscribed classes at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst was put on hold yesterday when the Board of Trustees tabled the motion.

Despite suffering an apparent defeat, Chancellor Joseph D. Duffey, who proposed the increase, seemed relieved when the meeting was over. He said he believed the Trustees will not have time to implement the increase by next semester, but he also feels he has successfully showed that the UMass administration is concerned with the large number of oversubscribed classes. He said he will seek another outlet to address that problem now.

News Analysis

The tuition increase would have generated about $500,000 for the Amherst campus. That figure is based on approximately 10,000 students who would have to pay for the increase. Some 7,000 "basic aid" students would have received waivers under the proposal.

In his proposal, Duffey made it clear that the funds would not go only towards engineering and the applied sciences. He was adamant about increasing courses in the humanities and the fine arts. He also said he plans to reassess the problem of the insufficient number of sections of popular or mandatory classes.

Duffey has made a strong public fight for tuition retention at UMass, and his support is shared by a majority of the Trustees.

The tuition increase proposal has also aired some concern over the Board of Regents of Higher Education's upcoming tuition policy, and a number of people who sat in the conference room at yesterday's meeting predicted that a state-wide tuition increase will take effect next year.

Duffey's tuition proposal was the third attempt, along with Lowell State University and Westfield State College, to take advantage of a state law which allows for each campus to keep designated monies under a "tuition retention" program. The Trustees have worked for the fiscal flexibility this kind of program can offer since before Duffey arrived at UMass. Many wanted to take the legislature's offer while it is available.

Grenada motion causes SGA walkout

By LISA MARIE CANTWELL
Collegian Staff

Members of the Third World Caucus, co-presidents of the Student Government Association (SGA), and more than 20 other senate members walked out of last night's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting to protest the defeat of a resolution condemning the US invasion of Grenada.

"The Third World Caucus is outraged by the lack of concern for issues concerning U.S. intervention in sovereign nations," said Robert Teixeira, student senator, a member of the caucus.

The resolution, which called the invasion a "flagrant violation of international laws" and supported an "immediate withdrawal of invading U.S. troops," failed in a vote by 21 to 32, with 10 senators abstaining.

George McKenzie, a proponent of the motion and a Third World Caucus senator, resigned from his position following the defeat of the resolution.

"There is no way I can continue to participate with a body of students who go along with the government and say it is all right to invade," McKenzie said.

Jim Finkle, a commuter senator, said he supported the resolution "because the U.S. role in Grenada is violating international law." Finkle said he felt the actions will "increase anti-U.S. sentiment around the world."

"I am disappointed people are using this forum to push their personal political ideologies," said Bill Collins, a Moore House senator who opposed the resolution. "We should not be discussing this at all. We should be discussing student matters," he said.

Teixeira said the Third World Caucus is planning to make a similar motion at next week's meeting, and is considering developing an outreach program to inform students about issues similar to the invasion of Grenada.

"We hope senators are concerned about getting facts about the invasion and hopefully reconsider their stand on the issue," Teixeira said.

The revision of the SGA constitution was also discussed at last night's meeting, and Central area senator Tim Rudolph said he would like to see the expansion of "the roles in relation to the writing of the constitution."

"The revision has not been democratically written," Rudolph said. He said he wants the end of the semester deadline extended in order to get "more people involved."

ANOTHER VICTIM — Point Salines, Grenada — Cuban prisoners load one of the 67 Cubans wounded during the military action in Grenada last week. The wounded were transported on a U.S. Air Force C-130 and were transferred to a flight to Havana.

United States, Red Cross fly Cubans out of Grenada

PORT SALINES, Grenada (AP) — A U.S. military cargo plane flew 57 wounded Cuban prisoners and 10 Cuban medics from Grenada to Barbados Wednesday. They transferred to a Red Cross jet and immediately left for Havana.

In the Cuban capital, the government claimed the U.S. invaders on Grenada had arrested two Cuban diplomats and were holding the Cuban diplomatic corps inside the embassy in St. George's.

White House spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters in Washington that U.S. forces surrounded the Cuban Embassy in Grenada in cooperation with Governor General Paul Scoon's orders.

Scoon, the British-appointed governor general who is attempting to establish a temporary government in Grenada, on Tuesday gave the Cuban diplomatic corps in Grenada 24 hours to get out.

Speakes refused to say whether U.S. forces might be used to enforce Scoon's eviction order.

The Cuban government has said it would not withdraw its mission in St. George's until all Cuban prisoners were evacuated. An estimated 600 prisoners remained on the island by Wednesday afternoon.

Scoon's 24-hour explusion order also applied to Soviet and Libyan diplomats, but there was no response from those countries about whether they would leave.

Lawmakers vote to keep US Marines in Lebanon

WASHINGTON (AP) — The House today rejected a move to force withdrawal of U.S. Marines from Lebanon, with both supporters and opponents voicing concern over the safety of troops assigned to peacekeeping duties in Beirut.

By a vote of 274-153, the lawmakers turned back an amendment to a $247 billion military spending bill that would have cut off funds for the Marine contingent in the strife-torn country after March 1.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., supported President Reagan and his administration on the issue, arguing that withdrawing the 1,600 Marines would undermine Lebanese peace negotiations now under way in Geneva.

But the debate on both sides of the question reflected the outrage in Congress over the Oct. 23 terrorist bombing that claimed the lives of at least 230 Marines.

The amendment was offered as the House prepared to complete action on the military spending bill with $2.1 billion for production of the first 21 MX intercontinental ballistic missiles still intact.

Strike may cause shutdown

PHOENIX, Ariz. (AP) —Greyhound Lines Inc., expects to be struck nationwide at 2 a.m. EST, and the bus line will shut down its operations at that time, a company official said Wednesday.

John W. Teets, chairman of the board and chief executive officer of the parent Greyhound Corp., had no estimate on how long the shutdown might last.

Teets said Greyhound Lines had offered to extend the contract for as long as necessary to allow the 12,700 members of the Amalgamated Transit Union to review the company's proposed contract offer and vote on it. "The union leadership flatly refused," Teets said.

Earlier, company spokeswoman Leslie White said Greyhound Lines officials expected to cease operations for as long as two weeks in the event of a strike.

Amtrak rail and other bus carriers will accept Greyhound tickets, and arrangements are being made for freight shipments, she said.

Greyhound is the nation's largest intercity bus line, with about 60 percent of the passenger mileage.

Earthquake death toll rises as Turkey attempts to cope

ERZURUM, Turkey (AP) —Army teams using cranes and bulldozers pulled 93 more bodies from the rubble of their homes Wednesday, raising the earthquake death toll in eastern Turkey to 1,332, the military government said.

It did not specify where the bodies were found, but rescue workers had expressed fears the toll would jump when search crews with heavy equipment reached stricken mountain villages.

Late Tuesday, four after-shocks from the Sunday temblor jolted the area, killing two more people and scaring thousands of survivors huddling in donated tents in near-freezing temperatures.

As searchers pressed their hunt for bodies, a major international aid effort raced against the impending arrival of harsh winter weather to get relief to the thousands of homeless.

Rescue officials transferred 40 children whose parents were killed in the Sunday quake to an orphanage in this provincial capital and put others in hospitals and homes of neighbors.

Officials did not know the total number of orphaned children but Turkish newspapers have reported receiving hundreds of calls from Turks seeking to adopt survivors.

The disaster has overshadowed the campaign for parliamentary elections Sunday, the first general elections in Turkey since generals seized power in September 1980 following years of political violence.

Bomb threat at college causes evacuation at Glenn speech

SPRINGFIELD, Mass. - A telephoned bomb threat forced the evacuation of 1,700 people from a college auditorium during a speech Wednesday by Democratic presidential contender Sen. John Glenn.

Many members of the crowd then followed Glenn to another building on the Springfield Community College campus, where he concluded his remarks at a press conference.

No bomb was found, and Springfield Police Lieutenant Edward McGovern labeled the call "a hoax."

Police said they received the call from an unidentified male on their '911' emergency phone at about 11 a.m. Glenn had started speaking about 45 minutes earlier at the college.

"The caller said, "There is a bomb in Building 20. This is no joke," and hung up before police could trace the call, McGovern said.

College president Andrew M. Scibelli said when he received word of the call on the podium, he interrupted Glenn and told him police had asked him to evacuate the building.

"This is [illegible] has happened, and obviously I'm sorry," Glenn said afterward.

Pickle factory worker recalls identity after amnesia

GREENFIELD, Mass. — He woke up on a park bench with blood on his lip and a wedding band on his finger. He could list the American presidents, but couldn't remember his name.

After wandering around for two weeks and spending his nights in a Boston shelter for homeless men, pickle factory worker Paul C. Williams suddenly figured out who he is.

"I just sort of went to pieces at the time," Williams said when asked to describe the feeling at learning his identity. "I don't know what else to say."

The realization came Tuesday morning while he was brushing his teeth at the Pine Street Inn, a shelter in Boston. He says he looked in the mirror and just knew his name was Paul. "Paul, not John, Paul, Paul ... Williams," he repeated slowly, recreating the scene. "It just sort of came out."

UMass gay community talks on killing of rights bill

By TRICIA A. YACOVONE
Collegian Staff

Members of the gay community at the University of Massachusetts strongly opposed Wednesday the State Senate's de facto killing of a Gay Rights Bill on Tuesday.

The bill, the center of several heated debates in the Senate, has reduced some senators to resort to name-calling, but has been sent to the Massachusetts Supreme Judicial Court to determine its constitutionality. This action might kill the bill for this year.

Many of the members of the People's Gay Alliance (PGA) at UMass said they were disappointed in the way of some of the senators acted in failing to vote on the measure. Members said they (senators) avoided the issue by sending it to the state Supreme Court.

"I'm upset with the way they killed it. They didn't even vote it down because they're afraid of losing our votes because they know what a large number we (gay constituents) are," said Bruce Crowe, a Johnson dormitory co-senator and member of the PGA.

PGA President Ron Lussier said, "I can't believe they're not voting it in. It's not hurting anyone, only helping them."

Some members of the gay community at UMass said they saw the action containing different implications, while others attacked Sen. Denis L. McKenna (D-Somerville) who referred to homosexuals as "fags and lesbos."

"I'm thoroughly disgusted because it shows that there's no such thing as equality in America and that inequality can be upheld throughout the law," said Brian Robertson, a senior German major.

In reference to Senator McKenna's statement that the only thing homosexuals "offered to culture is AIDS (Aquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome) and herpes," Crowe said, "Senator McKenna, who is so misinformed, should realize that there is a large lesbian population in his district." There should be a recall vote in his district because of his ignorance."

Despite their anger, many members of the gay community were optimistic about the future.

"I'm very disappointed, but I think it's just a matter of keeping on hoping. There's always another year," sophomore Bachelor's degree with Individual Concentration (BDIC) major Alex McClure said.

Gay Awareness Day to help combat stereotypes

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

In an effort to educate the campus community about the myths and misconceptions about gays, the University of Massachusetts People's Gay Alliance (PGA) has designated Friday as Gay Awareness Day.

The event will feature speakers, workshops and discussion groups for both gay and straight people centering around the theme "gay rights are human rights," and will end with a gay and lesbian dance open to all at 9 p.m. on the 10th floor of the Campus Center.

People have stereotypes about gays and we want them to know that we are normal human beings like everyone else," said Ron Sussier, president of the PGA.

Lavender balloons will be handed out throughout the day on the Compus Concourse. People must sign a petition supporting gay rights on campus in order to get a balloon. There will also be petitions to support a gay rights bill that was killed in the Massachusetts Senate Tuesday.

"Before, when we gave out ballons people would take them not knowing what they meant. Now we want to let them know what being gay is and have them be supportive of gay rights," Lussier said.

The main speaker will be David Gearhart, secretary of the Massachusetts Gay Political Caucus, who will speak on gay politics and is expected to focus on the gay rights bill which the senate sent to the state Supreme Judicial Court.

Some of the events Friday will include a gay men's health workshop to be run by Dr. Able of the Health Services and a discussion called "Straight Talk about Gay People", both at 1 p.m.

This discussion will be a forum in which straight and gay people can ask each other questions and talk about homosexuality and gay issues.

Another discussion to be held at 1 p.m. is called "Coming Out on Campus" which will tie in closely with another of the day's themes: "It's a Nice Day to Come Out."

Lussier said this means it is a nice day for gays to come out of the closet and be open about their sexual preference.

"About 10 percent of UMass is gay but so many people are not open about it due to social pressures and fear of losing friends," he said.

"If that 10 percent was out of the closet gay rights would not be an issue but an acceptance. It's no big deal, just a person's preference and it is a big step to get it out in the open," Lussier said.

Woman enjoys managing radio station

By YADIRA BETANCES
Collegian Staff

Amherst is much different than Wisconsin, but Joan Rubel liked what she did there and likes what she does now: being general manager of a radio station.

In September Rubel, a native of Connecticut, became general manager of WFCR, the five college radio station located in Hampshire House at the University of Massachusetts.

Women On Campus

Rubel said she "fell in love" with the radio industry while working at WROT in Madison, Wisconsin where she learned how "to do radio."

"(Radio is) everpresent. It reaches everybody. There's more ability to communicate quickly without much responsibilities. There are more levels of communication than in print," she said.

Rubel said she is satisfied with her management position, one she said was "not traditionally set for women." The broadcast medium was not open in the past for women and minorities, she said, but things are now changing.

"(Broadcasting) is important for women," she said but she said finds more women working for public broadcasting than private.

"Interpersonal skills are what make a good manager," she said. "You have to have a sense of caring for people and the ability to communicate well," she said.

Rubel's responsibilities include doing administrative work, policy-making, long-range planning and "moving forward along the line of others with the same goal," she said.

Rubel said she does not feel obligated to communicate solely about women, but instead she said she bases the need on a more universal picture.

She said she wants to be able to contribute to the public and have an impact on culture.

Rubel moved to Wisconsin from Connecticut in 1969 to attend the University of Wisconsin where she obtained a bachelor's degree in sociology.

"It was the time to figure out what to do with myself," she said of her college years.

During the early 70s, Rubel was involved with the women's liberation movement.

Cashin dorm fire labelled 'suspicious'

University of Massachusetts police, the Amherst Fire Department and UMass Department of Environmental Health and Safety officials responded to a report of a fire in Cashin dormitory in the Sylvan Residential Area shortly after 8 p.m. Tuesday.

The fire, which occurred in the trash room on the second floor of the East end, has been labeled suspicious and is under investigation, according to the police report.

In other police action:

UMass police received two reports involving thefts Tuesday night from motor vehicles parked in Lot 22. The first incident, received at 7:39 p.m., reported the vehicle's exterior had been scratched extensively with a sharp object. The vehicle was then broken into, and a stereo, speakers, power booster and three cassettes, valued at more than $300, were stolen, police said. Total damages were estimated at more than $500, police said.

The second incident, reported at 11:18 p.m., involved a charge of breaking and entering with total damages estimated at more than $700, police said. Stolen were a stereo, speakers and jumper cables, with extensive damage to the dash board as a result, according to the report.

A triple beam balance scale valued at $130 was reported stolen from the 15th floor of the Graduate Research Center at 5:39 p.m. Tuesday, police said. The theft occurred between 9 p.m. Oct. 27 and 12 p.m. Oct. 28, according to the report. There were no signs of forcible entry.

Professor claims Reagan misinforms American public

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

The Reagan administration has conducted an unprecedented campaign of lies concerning the United States military invasion of Grenada, said a professor from the Virgin Islands last night at Hampshire College.

Gloria Joseph, a feminist and a black studies professor from Hampshire College, was one of the four panelists of a teach-in on Central America, sponsored by the Central America Solidarity Alliance.

"Reagan is able to misinform the public with relative ease," Joseph said.

She discussed the reasons for the manipulation of the minds of congress members, senators and citizens.

"The majority of the people do not understand the history of U.S. greed, of U.S. fear of communism, and of U.S racism," she said.

The public was unfamiliar with the revolutionary history of Grenada and did not view Grenada as a sovereign black nation, she said.

The majority of the people do not understand the history of U.S. greed U.S. fear of communism and of U.S. racism.

Gloria Joseph

Joseph said Reagan lied to the public about the requests for help from surrounding nations. He also lied about the danger to U.S. medical students and he lied about the danger of communism."I could dismantle all these lies, but I don't even have time to list them all," she said.

Joseph said that during the initial days of the invasion, Americans heard nothing of the devastation of Grenada, only reports of the success of the operation.

"In reality it was a SAFU situation (situation all messed up). They did not know who to shoot. They had people running around in the streets, pointing out people, and then capturing them," she said.

Hampshire College professor Andrew Sulky said the U.S. invasion of Grenada was a revival of one of the most sacrosanct traditions of American history

Sulky proceeded to list over 26 instances of U.S. intervention in Central American affairs since the American revolution.

Roberto Marquex, a Hampshire College Hispanic history professor said the airstrip on Grenada which was described as "extraordinary" by the U.S officials is about the same lenght as the airstrip in Antiqua which has strong popular support among Grenadians.

"The popular support for the airport is represented by the bonds that the people bought to support it," he said.

Students travel to Kent State

By CAMDEN PIERCE
Collegian Correspondent

Originally designed to address the issues of sexism, racism, and homophobia, the national conference of the Progressive Student Network (PSN) held late last week took on an added air of urgency as a result of the recent invasion of Grenada.

Late last week, two vans loaded with 21 students left the University of Massachusetts and made the 12-hour trip to Kent State University where the annual convention was held. Beatrix Hoffman, a long-time member of the Radical Student Union (RSU) at UMass, said more than 150 students from 10 campuses in the East and Midwest attended the conference.

The conference, which began Saturday, featured workshops and educational panels run by the three major caucuses of the PSN: the Women's Caucus, the Lesbian Caucus, and the Third World Caucus. The people who attended the conference were "all drawn (to Kent State) because the PSN is multi-issue. It addresses so many concerns of people," Hoffman said.

Trying to fill a void in American politics that has existed since the demise of Students for a Democratic Society in the early '70s, the PSN was formed in 1980 after the election of Ronald Reagan. Since then the organization's purpose has been to unite progressive students at campuses around the country into an effective national voice, Hoffman said.

Though the PSN reaches out to a broad range of people, Hoffman said because of the recent events in Lebanon and Grenada, militarism was probably the overriding concern of people at the convention.

"We discussed what a national campus reaction could be to the invasion of Grenada. The University of Iowa's convention worked for November 10 to be a National Day of Action," she said. "It's up to individual campuses to act on that day."

At UMass, the RSU is planning "A Tribute To People In Grenada," a combination rally and performance, mixing theater, music and poetry, to take place on November 10.

The conference was "very inspiring," Hoffman said. "We came away with energy to apply to work. There's a feeling that something is really beginning."

Town Meeting vetoes mall

By JULIA MAYCOCK
Collegian Correspondent

It was going to be a mini-wall complex with retail stores, offices, townhouses and a 222-car garage. It went through two revisions, was to have been sponsored by a $1 million Urban Development Action Grant and would have been built across from Jones Library in Amherst center. But because of "aesthetic" and "inherent" traffic concerns, Town Meeting vetoed the Academy Square Project earlier this week with a 101-53 vote.

The project to develop four adjacent parcels of land, one of which is owned by the town and 80 percent of which is used as a municipal parking lot on the corner of Amity and Prospect Streets, has been steeped in controversy since it was proposed four months ago. The Finance Committee and the Planning Board endorsed the plan, citing financial benefit to Amherst. The Board of Selectmen split 3-2 against the project and a group calling itself the Downtown Coalition adamantly opposed it.

Selectman Fred Steinbeck said the board members who did not endorse the project thought the paramount concern was that Academy Square would destroy the buffer zone between business and residential areas. He said increased traffic, parking problems, the proximity of the massive structure near the "perfectly priceless" Jones Library, and the possible future use of land which increases in market value daily, disturbed him.

A package of three warrant articles would have allowed developer David Williams, designer of the Hartford Civic Center and Burlington Square, to build the bi-level garage by changing the zoning laws, buy or lease town land for 50 years, and apply for a federal Urban Development Action Grant to subsidize the facility. The entire project included 36,000 square feet of office space, 6,000 square feet of retail space, 12 townhouses and the garage.

Jim Lee, a member of the downtown coalition that supervises parking at the University of Massachusetts, said there is a continual and frequent turnover of retail and office space in Amherst. He said the actual need for retail space is so weak that offices are occupying prime storefront property.

Theater is for and by women

By DIANE LANE
Collegian Staff

Frustration with the media's portrayal of women as one-dimensional spurred the formation of the Amherst Women's Community Theater, a group which attempts to break traditional stereotypes and redefine women's roles in society.

Sarah Dreher, spokesperson for the company, said the company consists of six women on the board of directors and a shifting kaleidoscope of performers, playwrights, production crews and others who "show up" when word gets out that another production is scheduled.

Dreher, who has been with the company since its founding eight years ago, does much of the playwrighting herself. Dreher said the company produces plays in which "all roles are for women, with everything done by women."

"We're 'feminists' by which I mean that we attempt to portray women as people, rather than the traditional cardboard woman," Dreher said.

She said the company has a solid following of more than 500 people. The company funds its performances by ticket sales, which are on a sliding scale, and fundraisers such as tag sales, dances, and private donations.

Dreher is a private psychologist, and said most of the women who work with the company have other full-time careers as well.

The company was formed in 1976 after doing a performance for the University of Massachusetts International Women's Week and "a bunch of us decided to stay together," Dreher said.

The Women's Community Theater just completed its annual playwrighting contest, with plays submitted from all over the country. The board of directors must now choose between 45 plays for a production scheduled for the spring, she said.

Stacks of wax: new vinyl

By GERARD COSLOY
Collegian Staff

Intense amounts of personal stress and pain now make it impossible for me to continue reviewing records in the Collegian at my current pace. 'Cause it's so damn boring, that's why. To keep things manageable, tolerable, etc., there'll be a slew of brief reviews encapsulised into one BIGDEAL heading, with one particularly outstanding slab of vinyl getting the coveted Pick Of The Week title. Here goes:

PUBLIC IMAGE LTD. Live In Tokyo (Virgin Import LP) — A sick joke really, Pil being minus Wobble & Levene, now consisting of J. Lydon plus New Jersey Phil - cover band. Slicked-up old faves, plus some ghastly new material as played before a screaming, sub-teen Tokyo audience. Not my idea of fun.

GREEN ON RED — Gravity Talks (Slass/Warners LP) — Equal parts Dream Syndicate and Lyres, LA's Green On Red seem to be moving away from the garage-blare of their earlier EP's and into more whistful, Dylan — wish territory. Strong throughout.

THE JAM — Snap! (Polydor LP) — Relatively well-compiled greatest-hits collection from the one band who broke up at the right time. More revealing than the fine demo-version of "That's Entertainment" are the liner notes where Weller confesses his disgust with the Jam's post — '81 output. Less essential than buying, say, Sound Affects.

OMEGA TRIBE — No Love Lost (Corpus Christi Import LP) — Thoughtful and thoroughly original political punk, Crass-ideology meets better lyrical development and musical expansion.

THIS MORTAL COIL — 16 Days (4AD Import 12) — A Supposed "all-star" lineup featuring members of Coloubox, Modern English "hits." After losing the Birthday Party, maybe all 4AD can do is rehash the past?

RUDIMENTARY PENI — Death Church (Corpus Christi Import, LP) — No relation to the radio program of the same name, Death Church showcases. Rudimentary Peni moving away from their past buzzsaw attack and into more cohesive territory. Cool tracks: "Boring Rock Stars," as fine a swipe at the Strummer/Rotten sellout bunch as I've ever heard.

SWANS — Filth (Neutral LP) — Heavily layered noise, sound on sound with no discernable trace of melody. Throbbing Gristle or Meat Puppets fans should take a look here.

LET'S ACTIVE — Afoot (IRS, 12" EP) — Vocalist Mitch Easter sounds alot like his pal from the dB's, Chris Stamey. So much so that the first time I heard Easter's "Every Word Means No," I thought 'wow, best thing the dB's have ever done.' Encouraging stuff from North Carolina, 'tho comparing them to REM won't help anybody.

XMAL DEUTSCHLAND — Incubus Succubus (4AD Import 12") — About as abrasive as a dance record can get away with. The women in Xmal Deutschland snarl pretty well, language barrier or not.

CULTURE CLUB — Colour By Numbers (Virgin LP) — I disliked them at first (still do), but I think it's worth noting that stupid clothes 'r'not, O'Dowd's vocal has grown considerably, "Black Money" being far and away the best thing he's ever done. No one gets cheated with Culture Club's 2nd LP...either accept it on the level of what it is (faintly amusing MOR froth), or disregard it and move onto something else.....

ESG — Come Away With ESG (99 LP) — LIKE THIS. The Scroggins Sisters' first LP proper is the hottest dance disc going, ultracool sparse production (bass sounds great), and a LOUD mix of varied rhythms pull through in style. More hits than Thriller (at least in my room).

VARIOUS ARTISTS — Rainy Day (Llama LP) — A better idea than This Mortal Coil....assorted members of the Three O'Clock, Rain Parade, Bangles and Dream Syndicate stumble merrily thru Dylan, Neil Young covers. Haunting and fun.

KISS — Lick It Up (Mercury) — Pretty depressing. As you might've guessed, Gene Simmons and Paul Stanley unmasked is a fairly grotesque image. Kiss' 1983 soft-metal comeback attempt (no. 6 in the last 5 years) is as limp as the cover art implies. Who needs 'em when we've got the Misfits and the Cramps, anyways?

PICK OF THE WEEK: VARIOUS ARTIST — English As A Second Language (Talking Package) (Freeway LP) — LA poet/wiseass Harvey Kubernik, best known for his 1982 spoken word compilation Voices Of The Angeles has thrown together a weird blend of musicians, journalists, poets and perverts; making for an intensely creative aurual montage. Funny and scary, sad and sick, Charles Bukowski and Chuck Dukowski on the same disk! Where John Giorno's NY poetry comp's rarely lighten up, Kubernik's "art" never makes the fatal mistake of taking itself too seriously. I guess you'll have to be there.

Wind Ensemble, Choir to perform

By ED BEEN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Chamber Choir and Wind Ensemble will present a combined free concert this Friday, November 4th, at 8 p.m. at the Fine Arts Concert Hall.

The Choir will open with two folk songs from Latin America, and will include Rondes, and experimental work that combines unusual vowel sounds with a pre-recorded taped background. The Wind Ensemble will perform Hayden's Concerto for Trumpet that will feature distinguished faculty member, professor Walter Chestnut.

After the intermission, the two groups will combine to perform a recently commissioned piece, Canticum by Vaclav Nelhybel, and the three part Symphony in B flat for Concert Band.

The thirty-six-member Chamber Choir has represented UMass at the inauguration of President Knapp at Fanueil Hall and on tours to Washington D.C. The Wind Ensemble performed last spring at the Eastern Division Conference of the Music Educators National Convention.

Friday's concert is presented by the UMass department of Music and Dance. For further information, call the department's office at 545-2227.

Live Wire

by Dave Chevan

This weekend appears to have more than its share of available concerts. It seems as though we're stuck in a situation of having too many or too few shows at any one time. Tonight, there are four concerts of any consequence in the valley, all of which hold equal merit, and depending upon taste, would be equally worthwhile to attend. At the Fine Arts Center sax man Stan Getz will team with singer Astrud Gilberto for an evening of Latin-tinged jazz. At the Bluewall David Johansen will play two shows, at 7:00 and 10:00. Meanwhile, the Springfield Civic Center plays host to the only area appearance of Hot Tuna (contrary to what the adds say, the Rusty Nail show on Nov. 10 has been postponed). Bobby and the Midnites will be opening. Also for Blues fans, the man with the icepick guitar, Albert Collins, will rock out the Hangar. I ask you, is this fair? I for one cannot make up my mind where to go.

Tomorrow night is a big blues night. The Rusty Nail hosts several major blues artists, including John Hammond, John Lee Hooker, and Willie Dixon. Now that is a line-up. For the wave slaves, the next big thing from Scotland, the Shakin Pyramids, will be at the Hangar.

Saturday night, over at John M. Greene Hall, Smith, an evening of "Jewish Jazz", the Klezmerim, will perform music from Eastern Europe and immigrant America. Saturday night also offers a touch of stardom with Mick Fleetwood at the Rusty Nail. No, not Fleetwood Mac, but Mick is about as close to the real thing as we're likely to see in this area. For fans of 60's cult groups, June and Jean Milington of the group Fanny, will be at Buckley Recital Hall, and the band that wouldn't die, the Neighborhoods, will play the Hangar. Hardcore fans get a big treat tonight when DYS, Last Rites, Deep Wound, Da Stupids and Siege play the Greenfield Guiding Star Grange. All ages, natch. At the Iron Horse, Rory Block will play her style of blues. (Seems like a real weekend for the blues, I wonder if that has something to do with midterms).

Upcoming concerts include a rescheduled George Carlin Sunday night, at the Nail, Arthur Blythe at the Iron Horse Nov. 13, and X at the Nail of Nov. 16.

The winner of a free pass to see Hot Tuna and Bobby and the Midnites tonight at the Springfield is Charles Hurlburt II. Congratulations Charles. For those who entered and did not win, don't worry, we'll hold another contest before the semester is through. Thanks for trying. See y'all next week.

Chinese paintings radiate a strong aura of gloom

YUAN YUNSHENG
The Artist's Point of View
as Seen Through his Works
Through November 14
Mead Art Museum, Amherst College

By NELLIE SCIUTTO
Collegian Staff

Currently at the Mead Art Museum of Amherst College is a Chinese art exhibit, by Yuan Yunsheng a noted Chinese painter, from the "Hundred Flowers Campaign" of 1958. This campaign was a move by the communist government of China to encourage more liberal expression in art. When the art became too explicit, the government immediately imprisoned all the artists or banned them to the countryside. Yuan Yunsheng lived in the confines of the Chinese countryside for 20 years because his art, contrary to classical Chinese art, was of voluptuous women.

Works by once imprisoned Chinese artist Yuan Yunsheng.

At the opening reception for his exhibit, the artist presented slides of his work—many of which were photos of murals that the government allowed him to paint before his imprisonment. The most famous of these is a mural in the Peking airport. Done in colors of copper, rust, olive, and mustard, it is a depiction of the creation of man. The artist's style is divergent; the beginning of the mural is caustic - painted with sharp strokes. Midway through to the ending of the mural, the strokes are smoother and the depictions as a whole are more harmonious. Contrary to most ancient cultures, the Chinese have always had great respect for women because they believe woman made the sky and started mankind. This is evident in Yuan Yunsheng's art as well as in most Chinese artwork.

"If strokes beget strokes, then one stroke leads to the next. It is the crystalization of one stroke that leads you to another state. The past returns vividly. Every moment I paint is a new moment. Each painting, a start from zero," said Yuan Yunsheng of his art. "One stroke does not lead to another; the first stroke is crystallized and a new thought creates the next stroke," he said.

Most of Yuan Yunsheng's works are done with Chinese brushes on Chinese paper. His style strays from traditional Chinese art. There are similarities to Greek paintings in that the men and women are full-bodied and muscular. They are in reclined positions. Chinese art is generally less fluid.

There are 15 pieces in the exhibit itself, none of which have titles. The works express the different emotions of Yuan Yunsheng during his imprisonment. In two of the paintings, a bull, the symbol of hope, appears; another painting is of a religious woman with a child.

Many of the paintings are more disparing. One is only a dense mass; yet in its simplicity it has a strong asura of gloom. Another, done only in black and white, is of a man perched high on a large black horse, clutching its wind-blown mane in fear.

By far the works most expressive of the artist's imprisonment are two paintings which appear to be related. In one, there are many huddled individuals with upraised arms, peering into a white hole to see a fading figure falling downward into the pit. The other painting shows a stack of people crushed beneath the weight of a much large person. When one looks closely, all the people appear to be pushing the larger being upwards. They are struglling. It also seems symbolic that the former painting is mostly in black and the latter, in white.

Yuan Yunsheng's exhibit will be on display at Amherst College's Mead Art Museum until November 14th.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The real meaning of patriotism?

On a hot, humid day last summer I stood on the Boston Common with twenty other people holding a sign that read: US OUT OF EL SALVADOR.

A lot of people who rushed by on their lunch hour slowed down to read our signs and grab leaflets describing the U.S. policy in Central America. I remember one man walked past us three times reading the slogans out loud to himself. He was an older man, and when he finished reading the signs, he stood in front of us and shouted that we were "all a bunch of communists."

Miriam Zoll

This was the first time in my life that someone called me a "communist" for showing my disgust and disapproval of what our government is doing in Central America, and around the world. At first I just laughed that this man even thought we were communists. Our signs clearly indicated that we were in favor of allowing the peoples of Central America to choose their own economic system and elect their own governments. And the leaflets we were passing out explained that the reason we wanted the United States out of Central America was because we were aiding governments that abused, tortured and murdered their own citizens. I wondered how and where this man, and millions of other Americans, got the idea that Americans who support popular revolutions were communists.

Then I remembered that Ronald Reagan was our president. Many people probably get this "communist paranoia" from Reagan and members of his conservative and Republic social circle, who blame most of the worlds' problems on the Soviets. Almost everytime the United States government, past and present, decides it's going to intervene, or invade, a country, it "justifies" its' actions by saying, "we must stop the spread of communism and restore deomocracy to the people."

What does Ronald Reagan know about democracy!? He ignores millions of people in his own country who protest for and demand an end to the insane and escalating nuclear arms race. Reagan has the impudence to tell the American people that the nuclear freeze movement is communist inspired!" His administration and our Congress continues to send money and military advisors to the right-wing military government in blood stained El Salvador. Our present administration had admitted that it is trying to destabilize the popular Sandinista government in Nicaragua, which has done more to help the people of that country than the previous dictator whom the United States still supports. Reagans' administration, and others before his, condone and support the repressive regime of General Augusto Pinochet, the dictator who has enforced martial law in Chile for several months now. But, at the same time, our government objects to martial law in communist, controlled Poland.

Last week about 500 students gathered in front of the Student Union to rally against the role of United States militarism throughout the world. As the demonstrators marched to Whitmore chanting "US Out Now," a group of 20 men started chanting "US All the Way." After shouting out "Better Dead than Red," this small group proceeded to sing the Star Spangled Banner. They semed determined to show the larger group that they were more "patriotic" because they supported Reagans' decision to invade Grenada.

There is blatant hypocrisy in our present administrations' conception of democracy, but much worse, there is a dangerous development of machismo in our foreign policy.

When the Soviets shot down the Korean airliner, Reagan and the rest of the world condemned the murderous act. But Reagans' conservative supporters accused him of being "too soft" on the communists. Two months later 250 Marines died in a bombing in Lebanon and Reagan was criticized for making America appear weak" to the rest of the world. The day after the Beirut bombing, Reagan sent 1900 Marines, and later 6,000 troops into Grenada, the tiny Caribbean island with a population of 110,000, in order to "protect American citizens there."

The conservatives loved the invasion of Grenada, and they praised the president for his use of force in the situation. The Conservative Caucus called the invasion the "finest hour of his presidency to date," and expressed hopes that there would be more "tough action" in the region in the future. It is quite obvious by now that the powerful conservatives in this country, who have tremendous influence over the president, are proud of America when we aggressively and unjustly punish nations that happen to disagree with the goals and policies of the United States. This offensive brand of thinking has led to the deaths and injuries of the US Marines in Lebanon and Grenada during the past week and a half.

America as the "tough-guy" has been the traditional idea of patriotism for a long time now. But many Americans are redefining the meaning of "patriotism," and what the United States really stands for today. Unfortunately people who label demonstrators and other critics of the government as "unpatriotic" will probably never question their own lack of commitment to democracy in the US and around the world. But maybe they will understand why some Americans consider their hypocritical idea of forcibly restoring "democracy" to countries throughout the world as "unpatriotic" and "undemocratic."

Controversy — Registration

By November 12, Governor Dukakis must decide whether to sign or veto a bill that would deny state aid to students unless they have registered for a peacetime draft.

Not only is this bill on questionable Constitutional grounds as it penalizes people without a trial, but it also discriminates against the poor, the young, and minorities.

In addition, since there was an unwritten tradition in the US against any peacetime draft until 1940, it is quite possible that denying state aid to non-registrants is unprecedented, in either wartime or peacetime.

Also, it is important that we keep the American educational system separate from the military, as we have done with church and state.

Students and faculty should be alarmed by the trend of this type of legislation. Governor Dukakis has said he must think over this bill. Please drop him a note - a 13 cent post card will do - at: The Statehouse, Boston, MA 02133, and urge him to veto this hastily passed bill.

Grenada and its revolution

Since the 17th century when the French and British fought for control of the Caribbean, Grenada has struggled against forces which have sought to control the tiny island. By the last quarter of the 17th century the French and British began to transport Africans as slaves to work the large sugar plantations. Despite the oppressive and destructive conditions under slavery the Africans continually resisted and challenged the system. From work slow downs to organized insurrection Africans maintained their struggle against their colonial rulers. By the close of the 18th century the struggle had reached a peak and a major rebellion occurred. Although it was quelled it marked an important point in the history of the country known now as the "spice island." Though slavery in the British colonies had been abolished in 1833, the basic foundations of slavery, especially in relationship to land ownership remained the same well into this century. By the 1930's most of the land was in hands of small oligarchy who controlled large estates hiring peasants to work the land at slave wages. This however did not detract the spirit of resistance and quest for freedom among the people. During this time period transformations were taking place in Grenada and throughout the Caribbean. The plantation workers began to organize trade-unions which were to become the foundations for new political parties. Parties and unions which provided the people with organized methods of struggle against the unjust colonialist system. Emerging about the same time as the trade-unionist movement was the Garvey movement, a black nationalist movement named after one of its leaders Marcus Garvey which had an important impact not only in the United States but throughout the Caribbean as well. Garvey's challenge of racism and colonialism spoke to the struggles of peasant and working classes of Grenada.

Economic conditions on Grenada worsened after WW II. By 1950 the plantation and sugar factory owners sought to reduce wages from 94 cents a day to 91. This was met with militant opposition from the workers who subsequently led a nation-wide strike. As a result the colonial government called in the British Navy to smash the popular insurrection. The colonial regime was forced to make some reforms but once again the vast political and economic inequities remained intact. In contrast the decade of the 1960's was severely repressive on the island. Under the dictatorship of Eric Gairy the political and economic conditions deteriorated. His personal corruption, violations of political and human rights and his sell out to multi-national corporations stirred greater opposition against the existing regime. The New JEWEL (Joint Endeavor for Welfare, Education, and Liberation) Movement was formed by peasants and workers to combat not simply the political repression of Gairy's regime, but the hundreds of years of impoverishment, exploitation and injustice experienced by the majority of the population. Conditions which transformed the struggle for freedom into a new revolutionary society. In March 1979 the peaceful revolution occurred. The repressive dictatorship was replaced with a provisional government supported by the people. Some of the revolution's major social programs have included a massive education drive, free health care, profit-sharing and the development of cooperative farms as well as laws ensuring equal pay for equal work. The revolution was actively supported by the people through their own political organizations and unions and up until Tuesday's invasion by the United States, Grenada's political system, its economy and its future were in the hands of its people. The Reagan administration's plan to de-stabilize and eventually overthrow the popular government has been in the works for three years. Along with severing all economic aid to Grenada, the U.S. has coerced international institutions into not lending any support to the tiny country. Also the CIA attempted to infiltrate labor unions and disrupt the revolution with propaganda, all efforts failing to alter the course of a people determined to remain free.

Tuesday's invasion of Grenada by U.S. military forces destroyed the right of the people of Grenada to determine their own future. It was a barbarous, criminal act of war by the most powerful nation in the world upon a tiny sovereign country of peasants and workers. This act of terrorism by the Reagan administration has pushed us into war, but this is only the beginning. It is time that we exercise what is left of our democratic rights to control our destiny and voice our opposition to U.S. intervention throughout the world.

For the sake of futures and pasts

It would be the dawn of a new day for him, like it would be for so many of us. It would be a chance to start again, to wipe clean the slate of so much that was bad from the past. The idea of college he thought, we all did, was to become a better person, smarter, to find in some way what we wanted to do in the future.

John Kenney

It was exciting for him, for all of us, to think about college. It was scary and intimidating and yet, this was the informal introduction into adulthood, into maturity. People are more accepting in college he thought, we all thought. They accept you for what you are, how you think, the way you treat people. It's not like high school where you're judged all too often by how you dress, who your friends are, what kind of music you listen to. No — this was different, people are older, smarter, more forgiving of frailties that claim us all.

But he learned, we all did, that conveying a feeling that you just can't explain to other people, that they just have to know and feel, too, is a hard thing. It is very special to find someone who we can talk with. For, when you're in a new environment, the kind that college brings about, you need friends. You need people to listen and to understand — about our past, about our confusion now, about our fear of the future.

Some of us do find these people. He didn't. He struggled through a year of school. This is a fastpaced machine that we fight to keep up with. He could not.

And so he left. He turned to what is often an escape for the confused youth of America — the military.

In a world confused enough by its own existence, by thousand year old wars, by words like intervention, democracy and freedom, by giant, wealthy nations who have the power and responsibility to help other countries, some that struggle day to day to survive — comes a young man who wants a little respect and understanding out of life.

He finds himself instead in one of the most politically sensitive and turbulent areas in the world. And on the whim of madmen "trying to free their country," a truck loaded with explosives is rammed into the lobby of an airport building housing a couple hundred Marines, there to keep peace, there, sound asleep like children, in the middle of the night.

Generations from World War I to World War II, Korea and Vietnam have known the feeling of having brothers, cousins, friends killed in war.

In the past week we have been brutally introduced to war on a very personal level. People our age, 19, 20, 21 years old have been killed in Beirut and Grenada in war.

Michael Devlin lived in Brooks House in Central for one full school year. He joined the Marines and died in Beirut.

We must, as sensitive, caring invididuals think about this, for it is important. These were not isolated events and they are not just going to go away.

For the sake of the future, in the memory of Michael Devlin, who walked these paths, studied our subjects, feared the future — just like most of us — we must be committed to a better future, for we are the future.

Minority hiring isn't so easy

To the Editor,

It is a pity that the important issues of Affirmative Action and minority hiring have been trivialized and misrepresented in the Collegian in recent days. To any objective observer it is self-evident that the average salary of women on this campus is lower than that of men in the same rank (Assistant, Associate or Professor) for the simple reason that the average length of time in rank is less for women, on average, than for men. Professors who have been in that position for 20 years obviously earn more than professors who have recently reached that rank. This does not reflect discrimination on the part of the University "administration" but merely the national statistic that few women entered the academic workforce in the past, a fact that may well reflect discrimination in society at large.

It is for this reason that the University has a relatively small number of women faculty. In the Department of Geology and Geography, for example, there are two women faculty members out of a total of 27. The Collegian would have us believe such statistics reflect discriminatory hiring practices yet the Department has a much higher proportion of women in these fields than the national average because there are few qualified women in these disciplines. We are attempting to do something about this in our graduate programs but the changes take time.

The number of minority faculty on campus reflects a complex national problem. The mis-use of statistics by the Collegian contributes nothing to the resolution of this problem and only obfuscates the relevant issues.

Eddy Grant — good after all

To the Editor,

I am one of many C[illegible] readers right now asking, "Who is this Gerard Cosloy and where does he come up with such bogus reviews [illegible]fter boppin' at the U.P.C.'s [illegible] his review that appeared Tuesday. Not only is Cosloy a bad reviewer, I have decided, but he writes in such an immature and unprofessional style that I had to read the article three times to sort through all the cheap cuts and ludicrous analogies. Come on, Gerard are you trying to be funny? How do you know what Tom Jones looks like on 'ludes? How old were you when Elvis played Vegas? Did Eddy's leather trousers really bother you that much? You even went so far as to complain about the ticket price ($7.00 is less than half the price people paid to see him in New York).

From what I have seen of Cosloy's reviews, I find him a beased hard core fanatic who will only write a positive review on what he likes. Sure he has been involved in the hard-core scene in Boston; sure, he reviewed for the Phoenix. Why can't he take apart any music constructively, and see what the audience sees? He hinted at "tightness" and granted Eddy his "professionalism", but never once told you that the audience was up after one song and never sat down! Ask anyone who attended the Eddy Grant Show last Thursday, and they'd tell you the real story. It was an incredible show that deserved more that Gerard Cosloy.

Doing battle with words

To the Editor,

This is a response to Stephen Barrett's editorial of October 27, 1983 "They Deserve What's Coming."

I fear that Mr. Barrett is allowing himself to be manipulated by his fear of "the red menace." Ever since World War II our government has repeatedly involved us in situations of questionable moral and ethical justification, like the invasion of Grenada, all in the name of anti-communism. I hope Mr. Barrett is not so blinded by the "threat" of communism that he loses sight of some of the basic moral underpinnings of our great country which are being violated so blatantly by the Reagan administration.

Does Mr. Barrett honestly believe that the tiny little island of Grenada really poses a threat to our enormous "super-power" of a nation. The United States has a very curious history of taking over a country in the name of democracy and the "free world" without asking the people of that country what they want. This is a gross manifestation of ethnocentrism. The truly ironic and sad thing is that in all the countries we've taken over or helped take over like Vietnam, Iran, and The Phillipines in the name of democracy, we turn around and install and or support some form of authoritarian dictatorship. On the one hand we go around condemning the Soviet Union for their imperialism but then we turn around and do the very same thing. Perhaps our foreign policy should learn a lesson from Henry David Thoreau when he said "what I have to do is to see, at any rate, that I do not lend myself to the wrong which I condemn."

People, not troops, but real live human beings have died in Grenada. I wish Mr. Barrett would ask himself if he is willing to go to Grenada or some other place threatened by communism" and actually kill other people who believe in what they are doing and risk his life to battle the amorphous specter of communism. If the answer is no then how can you possible advocate much less applaud sending other people to die for something you're not willing to die for and still maintain a clear conscience? If the answer is yes then I suggest you put your money where your mouth is and join the Marines.

I welcome the opportunity to discuss this further with Mr. Barrett or anyone else for that matter. I think it is vital that people with different opinions on something like this try to deal with each other's ideas constructively. Battling with words on an editorial page is, by itself, wholly inadequate. We must not allow ourselves to shut our hearts and minds to other people's values and ideas. We must try to learn things from each other and cooperate because that's the only way we can hope to survive troubled times like these.

Jackson's run here's to him

Long time civil rights activist Reverend Jesse Jackson has decided he will seek the Democratic Party nomination as President of the United States. Good idea.

Unfortunately he has no chance to win. The dynamics of American racism will work against him. John F. Kennedy was the first Catholic elected President, and that was only in 1960. The entire line of highest officers of the land has been an unbroken succession of white males. For a Black, a woman, regular Joe, or a good actor to get elected is still in the future. This is not to say that you should vote for somebody just because of their race, but you should not not vote for them because of it. Jackson is at least proposing to name a woman to the role of Vice President, probably the first time that has happened in the history of any of the major parties.

Brooke States

Jackson will also not have much in the way of a war chest for spending, particularly when compared to, say Glenn and Mondale. Since you get delegates to the convention depending on how you do in the primaries, and primaries take a lot of money, Jackson will be in trouble. But besides money you have to put together a campaign on the issues, and be able to relate to people. Jackson is on better ground here. He will do well in urban areas and states where there is a large Black population. This is important when you start looking at the massive voter registration drive that Blacks have been conducting, not just in the Chicagos and Philadelphias, but in Mississippi and other Southern states. How well he can fashion a program that will appeal to the farmer who has lost his farm in the west, or the laid off white industrial worker who needs to learn a new skill, is more problematical.

In other ways his candidacy will be a good thing, whether or not he wins. I suspect he knows he will not be able to. For one thing his campaign will help keep Civil Rights and other concerns of Blacks in the forefront of the primary campaigns. The glue that has bound the many different types of Democrats into the party of the donkey together is starting to peel. The party pragmatists would like to play down the social issues type material, in favour of a more bread and butter approach, failing to realize that the two go together. Jackson's candidacy will help keep the Democrats from bailing out. Bonzo and the party of the elephant will also have to pay more attention to civil rights.

Jackson also has a certain base and level of resources that he can count on. Of all the groups that are opposing Reagan, Blacks are the most well organized, and in many ways have the most to loose if Reagan is re-elected. In this regard Jackson's candidacy will lead to increased voter registration drives, and all sorts of organizing and candidacies by Blacks on a local level. This legacy will survive whether Jackson wins or not.

"The key issue to me is who can beat Reagan," said Chicago mayor Harold Washington. Jackson will most likely take votes away from Mondale more than any other Democratic challenger. This is too bad for Mondale, because his only serious competition is John Glenn. For those who are working for Mondale, or Glenn but want to go with Jackson out of protest or conviction, they will be in a difficult position.

Perhaps the most important aspect of Jackson's candidacy is that it will help broaden the national political spectrum, not just in terms of personalities, but concepts and views of how the country should be run, what are the priorities of the nation, and what America is. I have a lot of problems with Jesse Jackson, but I am glad that he is running. I hope that his rhetoric from his speeches will carry over into a programatic vision of the countries priorities. We need it badly.

Letters to the Editor

Peace Keeping or imperialism?

To the Editor,

The Reagan Administration and a large percentage of the liberal establishment press would have us believe that our current military interventions in the Middle East and the Caribbean are serving the interests of democracy and freedom. In reality this thinly veiled charade merely constitutes yet another chapter in the U.S. Government's historical attempt to sell the American people on the 'big lie.'

The U.S. Government has never supported the development of democratic forces in the Third World and the events of the past few days are a clear reflection of that fact. From the brutal suppression of the Filipino Independence Movement at the turn of the century to the violent overthrow of democratically elected Governments in Iran (1951), Guatemala (1954), and Chile in 1973, the legacy of U.S. foreign policy has been racist, undemocratic, and blatently immoral by any standards.

If our Government were actually anxious to promote peace and democracy then it would recognize that political unrest is the result of fundamental socioeconomic contradictions similar to the ones which force a highly disproportionate share of blacks and hispanics to seek employment in the U.S. Armed Forces.

Instead however, this Government 'of the people' engages in an international game of nuclear brinkmanship in which the majority of us have nothing to gain and everything to lose.

To our young adults dying

To the Editor,

As we probe the burning issues of our presence in Lebanon and Grenada we try to reach our own conclusion to the question "Why are we there?" and does the reason satisfy us. Such is the dilemma of the political perspective. Other related but not so political wonderings enter my mind. Now that I am the age of the soldiers who die the word "casualty" sounds a closer, more painful note.

Of course one does not mean that the numbers of dead are taken casually when one refers to the number of casualties. The loved ones of the dead don't take it lightly. Yet it seems that when a person of such youth dies, it is perceived differently than if he had lived a "full" life. Whereas the life of one who has lived twice as long is reflected upon with some comfort as a good book with a shocking end, the life of a young adult is seen as not quite that significant, analagous, perhaps, to but a tragedy within the parents' books. Fitzgerald's response to the young adult who said he hadn't lived enough to write anything meaningful was that this was a feeble rationalization for not writing. Surely to survive life for twenty years — especially, it seems, in these times, is to survive one hell of an adventure, the art of which is obviously meaningful.

It must be helpful to someone not to put a high price on a young man (or woman's) life. They are so often the victim of afterthought.

Another question: is such a death, in international conflict, necessarily a tragedy — that is, the falling of a hero because of his virtues? Are youths dying because of their virtue? I can't really believe this is true — not for all, not for most. The deaths of soldiers are not such individuals' tragedies, but rather the tragedy of youth. It is youth that falls because of its dear virtues. Our elders must know this.

As a young adult, what person feels his mortality? I don't. Headaches surprise me because pain seems inane to me. There being no me in this world is beyond my comprehension. Isn't this delusion of invulnerability a famous mark of youth's naivite? And doesn't youth love danger? It is synonymous with adventure, isn't it? This aspect of danger which entails death or — danger is foreign to youth.

Physically we are immaculately prepared for war, but psychologically we are deceived. The army. It's not just a job. It's an adventure. Some dasterdly Iago lulls youth by its deepest weakness. Oh, to live on the edge...

TODAY'S PUZZLE ANSWER

College football notes: Tough UCD, tough season for Yale

College Football Notebook
By DAN LEBERFELD
Collegian Staff

The University of Connecticut defense did a great job shutting down the University of Massachusetts offense, especially the Minutemen running game, in the Huskies 16-6 victory last Saturday. Husky standout linebackers Vernon Hargreaves and John Dorsey deserve most of the credit for this performence.

Seniors Hargreaves and Dorsey are the best linebacking tandem that New England football fans have seen in quite a while. These two guys were all over the field Saturday breaking up passes and making tackles.

Dorsey, who was Yankee Conference player of the year last season, should be selected fairly high in the NFL draft. He has a large frame (6-3, 233) and speed, and according to UConn coach Tom Jackson, "Dorsey could play at any college in the country."

Unfortunately for UMass football fans Dorsey's and Hargreave's stout performances knocked the Minutemen out of the race for Yankee Conference championship.

A college football tragedy is occuring down the road in New Haven, Connecticut. Yale University, which posseses the second best record in college football history behind Notre Dame, is 0-7. This is the worst start for a Bulldog team in the long and rich history of the school.

Yes, Yale University the school that turned out two of the first three Heisman Trophy winners and has more players in pro football than any other New England school is in a state of turmoil.

A bad season once in awhile is understandable, but thats not the whole story. Bulldog Coach Carm Cozza has apparently thrown in the towel for this season and seasons to come.

"We are not the class operation we once were. I'm not at liberty to discuss all of it, but we are going downhill and it'll be hard to make it right again," says Cozza.

Something fishy is going on in Bulldog land. Whatever is going on, the team better get its act together for this seasons 100th Yale-Harvard game or a lot of Fortune 500 Alumni will be cutting back on their generous donations.

Last Saturday Holy Cross pounded Columbia 77-28. The Crusaders just blew the smaller and weaker Lions off the field. But the star of the game had to be Columbia QB John Witkowski. With very little protection from his over matched offensive line he still passed for 331 yards. Look for Witkowski to be wearing an NFL uniform next season.

Former UMass standouts, linebacker Max Jones and offensive guard Scott Lafond, have signed with the Birmingham Stallions of the USFL.

And finally University of Miami stellar freshman quarterback Bernie Kosar on why he chose to play for the Hurricanes, "Miami coach Schnellenberger was the only coach who visited my house that my dog didn't bark at."

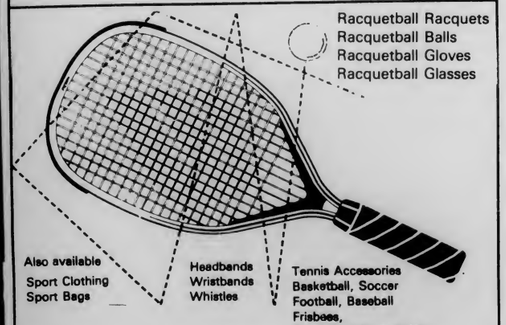
Collegian NFL Picks



In week 10 of the NFL season, it's a new chance because last week the writers were brought down to Earth by NFL paraity. Bill Shea, Kevin Deluca, and Scott Hood took top honors at 7-7 while Gerry deSimas and Tony Betros went 6-8.

This week's Monday night game is the Giants (2-6-1) and the Lions (4-5) in a game that hopefully won't be a yawner. It may be a good night to do homework.

Spikers come from behind to top Southern

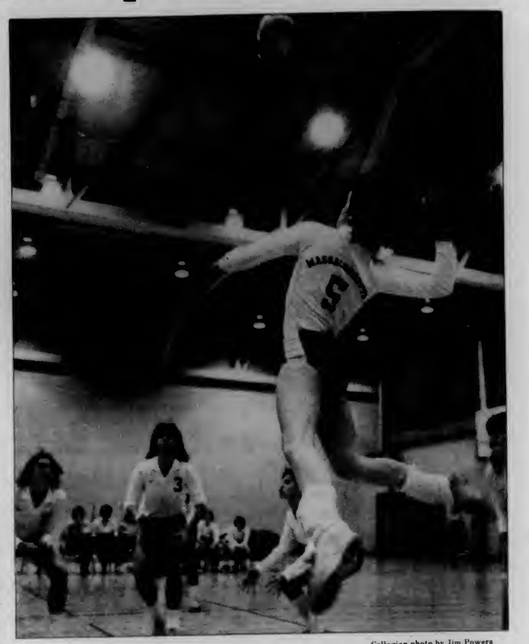
By ED CUNNINGHAM
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team [illegible] off [illegible] Division II rival Southern Connecticut last night at NOPE gym. The spikers had relatively little trouble with Southern, defeating them in straight games in their three out of five match.

UMass was in command from the beginning of the first game in the contest. UMass, using some new offensive plays, keep three hitters on the front line and the strategy paid off. Michele Barys capped off the victory with a strong spike, to finish the first game 15-4 in favor of UMass.

The second game seemed to be a complete turnaround. Southern broke out to a 6-0 lead. UMass was losing by as many as eight points until Southern stopped scoring once they reached 10. UMass fought back to within one at 10-9 and continued their come from behind victory until was complete. The spikers won game two 15-13.

"We have to feel good that we started slow, but came back to win. We played well," Leslie Smith said.



The script of game three was very similiar to that of game two. UMass never led this game until Southern stalled after reaching the ten point plateau. The Minutewomen struggled to a 10-10 tie and agian took control The spikers won the third game by a 15-12 margin and thus the match was another UMass victory.

UMass played very well tonight, at times. The front wall of Jeane Beer, Leslie Smith and Sally Maher was very strong. Setters Payyt and Susan Grant ran the

"We did two out of the three things we wanted to do. We served and played defense well, but our passing could have been better," explained head coach Elaine Sortino.

The 29-14 spikers head out this weekend to participate in the State championships. The spiders are seeded second in the tournament. The host team, Massachusetts Institute of Technology is the number one see. M.I.T. is ranked fourth in the nation and is currently undefeated at 31-0.

"We'll be working on serves, palling and defense the rest of the season. We'll have to play good because these state tournaments are usually 'barn-burners'," Sortino said.

Stickers trounce BU, 4-0

By GERRY deSIMAS
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — There is no doubt in the minds of the University of Massachusetts field hockey players that they belong in the Top 4 in the country. Only if they could prove that to the rankings committee that will give first round byes to the top 4 teams in next week's NCAA tournament.

The fifth ranked Minutewomen convinced unranked Boston University of that, leaving them with absolutely no doubt, as UMass trounced the Lady Terriers 4-0 last night on the turf at Nickerson Field.

"We played very well," said UMass head coach Pam Hixon, whose team now sports a 13-2-1 record. "We dominated play. We played very well together."

UMass didn't waste any time showing who was in charge as they took a 1-0 lead with just 2:14 gone in the first half as senior forward Patti Smith took a rebound off the pads of the BU goalie and shot it by her.

Defenseman Megan Donnelly, an All-American pick for UMass last year, put the Minutewomen up 2-0 at 22:51 of the first half on a penalty corner. BU fouled inside the circle and Donelly combined with Carol Progulske and Sue Packard for the goal and the lead UMass took in at halftime.

The second half was no better for the Terriers as UMass had no intention of letting Boston University back into the game. With 4:01 gone in the second half, Progulske took a pass from Packard inside the circle and scored.

Packard completed the UMass scoring and a big night for her as she scored with 23:1 left in the game to give UMass a insurmountable 4-0 cushion. Packard scored one goal and assisted on two others. Smith assisted on Packards goal.

Hixon was pleased with her team's play and the team looks ready for UConn on Saturday.

UMass also played almost everyone in different positions throughout the game.

It didn't affect the forward line or the defense. UMass outshot BU 26-1 and goalie Patty Shea was called to make a save just once.

Now UMass can fully concentrate on taking on top ranked UConn Saturday in Amherst at 1 p.m. It will be the last chance and UMass' best chance to move up in the rankings.

Kevin Flynn: Looking at bigger and better things

By ADAM NAZIMOWITZ
Collegian Staff

Kevin Flynn has only been playing soccer for eight years but feels his experience both here at the University of Massachusetts and in tournaments as far away as Europe will lead to a professional career.

Flynn was born in Old Ridge, New Jersey and moved to his present home of Madison, Connecticut at the age of five. In Madison, he began to play soccer in junior high school at the age of 13. He attednded Daniel Hand High School, where he was a three sport captain in baseball, basketball and soccer. He was all state and all New England in soccer, and decided to stick to that one sport when he came to UMass in 1980.

Flynn was offered several scholarships from other schools, but was recruited by former UM soccer Coach Russell Rado to come to [illegible].

"At that time, UMass was number two or three in New England and one player had gone pro the year before. The school appealed to me more and I liked the soccer program, so I came here," Flynn said.

Flynn, 21, is playing in his fourth year for the varsity soccer team at UMass and his second season as captain. He has been switched at times this season from his normal center-halfback position to sweeper in the hopes of shaking the team out of its long slump, and to be able to read the game better from that position.

This past summer Flynn was given an invitation to try out for the National Sports Festival in New Jersey. He made the team and proceeded out to the Air Force Academy in Colorado Springs for two weeks of training and a week of playing sweeper for the East team. The team compiled a 2-1-1 record before losing to the South in the final.

He was selected for the United States Soccer Federation (USSF) National Select team for Americans and non-Americans and once again played for the East squad at a tournament in Washington, D.C. He also went to Europe for two weeks and played for the Massachusetts All-Star Team vs. Belgium.

All of the playing he did this summer caught up with him as he sprained his ankle near the end of the tour and missed the entire pre-season. He saw limited action in the first three matches of the season for the Minutemen.

"I've always been healthy, so I had to learn to deal with some pain and still play. But it did slow me down and that is one of the reasons I went to play sweeper," Flynn said.

The soccer team is having another disappointing season at 2-9-5. Kevin, like many of his teammates has not scored this season, but the defense has only allowed 13 goals in 16 games this season.

"No matter how good your defense is, you still have to be able to put the ball in the net in order to win, and we just haven't been able to do it," Flynn added.

When Flynn graduates in May as a communication studies field first. He would like a tryout with a team either in the North American Soccer League (NASL), or the Major North American Soccer League (NASL), or the Major Incoor Soccer League (MISL), but has had no intentions of playing for the 1984 Olympic team.

"I think the NASL must make some changes if it is to survive. Team America should be expanded, and there should be more Americans playing with better foreigners to refine our skills," Flynn noted.

"I would be interested in playing in Europe, because there is a lot more money and attendance as well as fan interest there, but I have to look at things realistically. I'm happy to see more kids registered in youth soccer than in baseball or football," Flynn said.

Commenting on his four years here at UMass, Flynn said that it's had it's ups and downs. He feels it has passed quickly but he has learned a lot and hopefully it will help him on the long road to success.

One student hurt in lab explosion

By PAUL BASKEN
Collegian Staff

An explosion yesterday during an experiment in Goessman Laboratory left one woman with second degree burns on her hands and face, and shattered windows in the building's ground floor.

Christine Costello, a 25-year-old student from Pittsburg, PA, was alone mixing toluene with sodium when the combination caught fire and blew up. The polymer science Ph.D. candidate, who was protected with safety glasses and working under a protective hood, was immediately placed into an emergency shower, and then taken by ambulance to Cooley-Dickinson Hospital in Northampton.

Last Night, she was reported by the hospital to be in satisfactory condition. No other injuries were reported in the incident.

"We heard a big boom and people were screaming and someone was crying," said Kathryn Nobrega, a 19-year-old zoology major from Millis, who was in a lecture hall near Costello's lab when the blast rang out. She said the room she was in filled with smoke before all students could evacuate it.

"We were in the next room doing an experiment and we heard an explosion," said 22-year-old Keith Borden, a polymer science graduate student from Langhorne, PA. He said someone ran down the hall screaming immediately afterward.

Another graduate student, who met Costello running from the room and had been working with her earlier, said the chemicals involved are combustible when mixed with water.

The student, who wished not to be identified, said no flames came from the explosion, which could have been started by either an electrical spark or contact with water. She said the hood and two windows in the room were blown out as a result.

CHEMICAL EXPLOSION - Firefighters exit the scene of yesterday's explosion at Goessman Laboratory in which a graduate student was injured.

Acting Amherst Fire Chief Victor Zumbruski said the cause of the accident was undetermined.

Gas lines into the room were shut off, and police cordoned off that section of the building. Classes in other parts of Goessman were resumed soon after the 1:38 p.m. explosion in Room 28.

No estimate of damage was provided by University police.

Goessman, which is scheduled to undergo repairs this summer, is now in the process of having some of its laboratory equipment moved elsewhere on campus, said H. Jackson Littlefield, director of facilities planning. An added urgency in the building's repair schedule was revealed last month when asbestos was discovered in one of its laboratory rooms. Asbestos found there, as with that identified in the Campus Center concourse, was determined not to be an immediate health hazard, but is expected by University officials to be removed this summer.

Abortion a fundamental right for every woman

By DAVID SUMMERSBY
Collegian Staff

Despite gains won in the recent Supreme Court decision the abortion issue must be reframed around feminism in order for women to achieve autonomy and full participation in their own lives, said reproductive freedom lawyer Nan Hunter last night at Hampshire College.

In a speech on abortion entitled "Where Are We Now," Hunter outlined the results and implications of last June's Supreme Court's "Akron" decision that repealed a number of laws and restrictions on abortion.

"Abortion is not just a right but it is a part of our whole existence as women and our need to force society to deal with us as normal people," she said.

" 'Akron' was a big victory but it will be subject to erosion and I don't think the court will come down so clearly on our side in the future," she said.

In defeating the human right to life amendment the Supreme Court ruled in its decision that the state cannot restrict women who desire abortions with enforced waiting periods and hospitalization rules, to name a few.

But Hunter said there are more battles to win and the Reagan Administration clearly supports right to life organizations in trying to nullify the recent decision and do anything they can to prevent abortions.

"There is a fear that if Reagan is reelected he will appoint right-wing justices to the Supreme Court in order to repeal the 'Akron' decision."

"I think we have control of abortion now but there are many issues still alive and we, must continue to fight them."

The biggest issue, she said, is the installation of federal and state laws, which Reagan supports, that prohibit government Medicaid funding for abortions.

"If we are solidified, hopefully we can defeat this inequity of denying this abortion right to minors and poor women. We must win this battle in Congress," she said.

Another issue preventing the full abortion right is the parental notification and consent law that can only be avoided by convincing a judge in a local court, which, Hunter said, is an empty choice for many minors.

"I couldn't imagine going in front of a judge at sixteen to persuade him I needed an abortion. These laws must be changed and will be the subject of much litigation in the future," Hunter said.

Agency urges consumers to know rights

DEREGULATION ADVOCATE Amanda Peterson, deputy director of the Consumer Protection Agency, spoke last night on consumer issues in the Campus Center.

By REBECCA THATCHER
Collegian Staff

The Consumer Protection Agency of the Federal Trade Commission has been working hard to protect the consumer while promoting a healthy economy, said the deputy director of the agency last night in the Campus Center.

Amanda Peterson, who graduated from Vassar with a A.B. in English in 1967, spoke to about 100 students on the topic, "The Role of Government in Consumer Protection."

The Consumer Protection Agency was created in 1914 by an act of Congress and is therefore "a creature of Congress, and not a creature of the executive," Peterson said.

The former lawyer said the agency has been acting very successfully under its basic mandate: "Unfair acts and deceptive business practices are unfair."

Peterson said the new doctrine of the Federal Trade Commission is that competitive markets work very well.

"We believe that the most effective consumer protection is going to be provided by a well-functioning market place," she said.

Too much regulation can be just as harmful as too little, said Peterson, adding that the agency was aware of the criticism that they are doing nothing.

"To some extent, we are embarking on an experiment. We are trying to use the existing powers and sanctions to maximize our ability to help the public," she said.

Most of what we do is invisible, Peterson said, but a good example of the FTC at work is the care labels in clothing.

"Companies don't put those labels there out of the goodness of their hearts. If you ever find any clothes not labeled in a store, the manufacturer can be subject to $10,000 per day fine," she said.

Peterson said another important way to protect consumers is to educate them.

People should know their rights concerning debt collectors, Peterson said.

Debt collectors cannot call you at work or call you an unreasonable amount of times, nor talk to your friends and neighbors."

They should also know their rights concerning bill disputes, Peterson said.

"If you have a bill dispute, and you call about it, the company is not legally obligated, but if you write a letter to the designated address, you don't have to pay until they have proved that your bill is correct," she said.

East German spy arrested by FBI

WASHINGTON (AP) — The FBI said late Thursday that agents had arrested a 44-yearold East German physicist on espionage charges in Boston.

The bureau said the physicist, Alfred Zehe, was the first East German intelligence agent ever arrested in the United States on spy charges.

The arrest of Zehe at a scientific conference in Boston earlier in the day culminated a two-year investigation by the bureau and the Naval Investigative Service, the FBI said.

The bureau said Zehe had established contact in Mexico City in October, 1982, with an American civilian employee of the U.S. Navy and requested secret documents dealing with military technology. Unbeknownst to Zehe, however, the American civilian, who was not identified, was cooperating with the FBI and the Naval Investigative Service.

The civilian employee, who worked for the Naval Electronics Systems Engineering Center in Charleston, S.C., was instructed by Zehe to photograph classified manuals and was provided with a special camera and film, the FBI said.

The civilian returned to Mexico City in May, 1983, and was instructed to take a vacation in Europe and cross over to East Berlin to turn over the film, the FBI said.

In July, 1983, the American civilian did travel to Europe, crossed to East Berlin and met with Zehe where he exchanged film of classified documents for money, the FBI said. Federal sources, who asked not to be named, indicated that the classified documents on the film posed no threat to U.S. security if they fell into the hands of foreign governments.

Since 1976, Zehe has been living in Mexico as a resident alien and an exchange scholar at the University of Puebla in Puebla, Mexico. His work involved teaching physics and research at the university and he is known to have traveled frequently to the United States, the FBI said.

Greyhound Bus workers on strike

BOSTON (AP) — A nationwide strike of Greyhound Bus Lines workers forced some passengers to go across the city to the Trailways Bus System for transportation Thursday.

"We are honoring their tickets," said Trailways Terminal City Manager Frank Gatewood. "We've had quite a few come in with Greyhound tickets. Some of them have commuter tickets, which we don't have.

"But we'll honor them until they run out, to Portsmouth (N.H.) and Portland (Maine)."

Gatewood said a second bus was added to carry passengers to New York City. But he said the fall is normally a slack time for bus travel.

He said he could not know how many passengers traveled on Trailways as a result of the strike, but added, "We have just been filling up our empty seats. They have been mostly full to about 90 percent (capacity)."

Gatewood said Trailways parallels many Greyhound routes in New England, except in Maine where Greyhound alone serves north of Portland.

The Boston Greyhound bus terminal closed early Wednesday evening in the walkout by 12,700 workers who refused to take 9.5 percent pay cuts in a contract dispute.

The Boston terminal normally closes between 1:15 a.m. and 4:30 a.m.

District Manager C.M. Campbell said the walkout in Boston will affect 170 employees including drivers, mechanics and various Greyhound terminal employees.

Harry Rosenblum, president of the 31-local council, said the company's proposal would actually mean a cut in pay and benefits of 20-25 percent.

TRIUMPH OF DEMOCRACY - Nobel Peace Prize winner Adolfo Perez Ezquivel embraces one of the "grandmothers of Plaza de Mayo" yesterday in Argentina. The grandmothers of Argentinian leftists, who were abducted during the repression of the late 70s, have demonstrated at the plaza for years in search of information.

Computer break no childish prank

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A UCLA sophomore, charged with using a home computer to break into a Defense Department communications system, tampered with "very sensitive" information and will cost the government "hundreds of thousands of dollars," a prosecutor says.

Ronald Mark Austin, 19, was arrested Wednesday at his Santa Monica home and booked into the Los Angeles County Jail on a complaint accusing him of 14 felony counts of maliciously gaining access to a computer system.

If convicted, Austin could receive up to six years in prison. Bail was set at $10,000.

"This is not some childish prank," District Attorney Robert Philibosian told reporters. "We're talking about an individual who has cost the federal government, private organizations and universities literally hundreds of thousands of dollars in reprogramming costs."

U.S. press poses no security threat

WASHINGTON (AP) — A CBS executive says the Reagan administration resorted to "unprecedented censorship" in banning news coverage of the U.S. invasion of Grenada.

CBS News President Edward Joyce told Congress Wednesday that the prohibition "introduced a new relationship with the press, a relationship virtually unknown in U.S. history."

The invasion began at dawn last Tuesday. Reporters finally were given escorted tours to the island on Thursday. On Sunday, reporters were permitted on Grenada unescorted.

Joyce said journalists posed no threat to the security of the invasion or the lives of U.S. troops. His view was shared by senior commentator John Chancellor of NBC, and ABC senior correspondent David Brinkley.

CIA guerilla aid allowed by Senate

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Republican-controlled Senate agreed Thursday to allow continued CIA-backing for guerrillas trying to overthrow the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua.

The exact amount of money is secret officially, but sources said the 1984 intelligence authorization bill — approved by voice vote — contains $19 million to support an estimated 15,000 rebels operating throughout Nicaragua.

Despite debate on the question, there was no separate floor vote specifically on continuation of funds for CIA activity in Nicaragua. The Senate Intelligence Committee approved the operation by a 13-2 vote in September.

The Democratic House has voted twice to cut off all money for covert operations in Nicaragua and tough negotiations on the issue are expected in a conference committee.

Even if both houses eventually agree to legislation cutting off the money, President Reagan could veto the measure and it would take a two-thirds vote in both houses to override him.
